How to Follow Christ.

The following letter was handed us for publication by a young lady of this vicinity and we take great pleasure in reproducing the same.

How may I follow Christ? This question was ask of me by a young man who was seeking the Christian life. This same question is often ask of many other Christian workers. It seems as if men and women would use their Bibles more they would know the answer to this simple question. Only a few ways may be mentioned although there are many different ways. People seem to be ignorant of the teachings of the Bible for the simple reason that they do not attend church or Sunday School or do they read their bibles. They don't think of seeking the answer to this question in the bible but prefer asking someone else who has went to the trouble of finding out for themselves about it. They say that it seems a little bit out of the way to read in this Sacred Book. Do you know the reason? It is because they read the newspapers or magazines or some ten cent novel instead of the Bible, the book of God. Friends! beware for you know not how soon the day of judgment cometh

Don't poison your mind with novel stories they are not the books for God's people. If you read such books they will make you wish for adventures and you will forget your Bible and Christian teachings. You will think of murders and elopements and such things as will poison your mind. Don't destroy your love for Christianity for you will need it. Make it a point to read at least one chapter from the Bible every day, whether it be at the breakfast table or be it before or after the noon or evening meal. The time is not what counts so much as it is the reading. But at the table is a very appropriate place for this service. At first it will seem quite strange to read in the Bible at the table but you will soon get so used to it that you can't quit it, it will be a habit with you. God will be near and will bless you for so doing.

If you think you haven't time for these ceremonies at the table choose some definite time for it. But don't neglect it, it only takes a few moments. But, you say I haven't time for I read my newspaper in the evening, and still the question comes which is of the most importance the Bible or paper. Each evening kneel at the side of your bed and thank God for his keeping and guidance, and ask him in a kindly way to keep you again through this night and to be near in all you do. Each morning repeat this and you will never be more than twenty-four hours from Christ. Confess Christ before men and be baptised as the Christ was. "He who confesses me before man, him also shall I confess before my Father which art in heaven". You must follow Christ into the watery grave and be in likeness unto him, for you cannot be saved unless you put Satan behind you and do as Christ bids and repent and be baptized for the remission of sin for the wicked are not so but are as the chaff which the wind driveth away.

If you are ask by some earnest friend if you are a Christian, don't say "No I aint, and I don't want to be. I'll never darken the doors of this church again if you say another word to me about obeying Christ, for it will do you no good". God will never forgive you for such actions. Go to your homes, think of how God gave his only begotten son that we might have everlasting life, how on the third day he arose from the dead. How, when he was being nailed upon the cross and these men were spitting upon Him and mocking Him, he cried out, "Father forgive them for they know not what they do". How before his ascention he said, "I go to prepare a place for you that where I am ye shall be also, for in my Father's house are many mansions. If it were not so I would have told you". You can not keep from Christ the Savior, if you think of how he was persecuted for our sake. If troubles assail you go to the Lord in prayer and he will help you. It makes no difference what it is that is placed in your way or may cause you to stumble He is always near so call on Him for help. If you believe with all your heart that Jesus Christ is the son of the living God and our Savior, you will obey and listen to his teachings. What a friend Jesus is to us all, for he never forsakes us, even in the time of misery or sin. He is ever near. Trust in God for he will save, He will cleanse you from all sin.

These are true statements as I have found them to be. A Christian's life is not a life of pleasure or what is commonly termed as pleasure, such as: Reading, playing croquet, boat riding, going to dances, or parks or ball rooms, never, but it is a pleasure to preach the gospel to man as God bids us do. When the day of judgment comes can you say; Lord, I have done my duty I have preached the gospel to man. There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth when the saints and the sinners are parted right and left. Choose the straight narrow way and you shall dwell in the house of the Lord forever. Refuse him not, his rights.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

Deadly Battle on B. & O. Train.

An exciting battle in which three men were killed, occurred on a Baltimore & Ohio railroad train. The fight began at Newark, Del., and ended in Wilmington. Several persons were wounded in the affray, which occurred at the Delaware avenue station following the arrival of the train. The dead are: O. E. Wellman, aged 40, of Philadelphia, conductor of the train; Samuel Williams, aged 50 (colored), Pullman porter, whose home is said to have been in Jersey City; J. H. Bethea, aged 40, of Dillon, S. C. The triple tragedy was the result of an altercation between Bethea, who was a passenger, and Williams, the porter in the Pullman parlor car. The car was bound from Washington to Jersey City. Bethea, who had been drinking heavily, shot the porter through the heart, killing him instantly. When Conductor Wellman saw the porter fall and ran to the scene to remonstrate with the passenger, who still held the revolver in his hand, Bethea fired a second shot into the colored man's body. Then without a word Bethea shot Wellman through the heart. The conductor fell dead in his tracks. Before the passengers could interfere the double murderer barricaded himself in the toilet room of the Pullman car and threatened to kill the first person who approached. Meanwhile the train reached Wilmington. When it came into the station a hurry call was sent to the police station. A squad of patrolmen, headed by Police Captains Kane and Evans and reinforced by park guards and a posse of citizens and trainmen, ran to the scene. The police called upon Bethea to surrender. His reply was several shots in quick order from his revolver. Several of the policemen had armed themselves with shot guns and just as Bethea fired the last shot Police Captain Evans fired a load of shot into his face. Notwithstanding this injury he kept on blazing away. Patrolmen opened fire with a pistol and struck Bethea in the right arm. The desperate man tried to fire again but Sergeant Kelleher sent in a shot and he fell dead.

Jealous Women in Desperate Duel.

News comes from Nashville of a fearful duel between two women at Kingston, Tenn. Just after church service Rosa Cowan and Nellie Taylor quarreled over a man who had deserted the former for the latter and drew knives. When others attempted to prevent the women from fighting it is said that the man about whom the altercation started interfered and with leveled revolver ordered that the women be allowed to fight it out. The duel of Amazons continued until both had their throats cut and Rosa Cowan lay dead. Nellie Taylor is not expected to live.

Sparks Caused Explosion.

The main gas pipe of a natural gas company burst in the middle of the Potomac river, near Cumberland, Md. Sparks from a switch engine ignited the gas, causing an explosion which blew the engine from the track. John C. Lox, the fireman, was injured, and it is feared will die. The flames lighted up the surrounding territory, and the atmosphere in the vicinity became oppressive. The gas is still burning, and it probably will be necessary to cut off the entire city before it can be extinguished.

Train Drops Through Burning Trestle.

The mail car of north-bound passenger train No. 3, on the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad, dropped through a blazing trestle near Humboldt, Iowa, resulting in the injury of three persons. The whole train likely would have followed had not Engineer James Murphy discovered the fire in time to set the brakes. The engineer and fireman jumped just before the engine struck the trestle and escaped injury.

Oldest Mason Dies in New Hampshire.

James Bellows McGregor, believed to be the oldest Free Mason in the world, died at his home in Newport, N. H., aged 108 years. McGregor joined a Masonic lodge at Salisbury, N. H., in 1826. His father, Joel McGregor, served five years in the Continental army.

CANNON OUT OF POWER BUT IS STILL SPEAKER

Insurgents and Democrats Remove Him from Rules Committee, 191 to 155.

HE RETAINS SPEAKER'S CHAIR

Resolution to Oust Him as Presiding Officer Is Voted Down by Large Majority.

Washington correspondence:

Shorn of his power by a combination of the Democrats and Republican insurgents, Joseph Gurney Cannon is now merely the presiding officer of the national House of Representatives.

The House Saturday afternoon adopted a resolution amending the rules so as to provide for the election of a committee on rules by the House itself, the committee to consist of ten members and the speaker being ineligible to serve thereon.

The full text of the resolution as passed by the House is as follows:

"Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives be amended as follows:

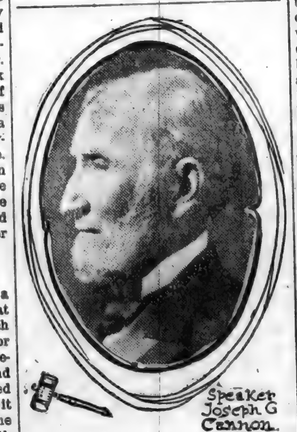
"1. In Rule 10, Paragraph 1, strike out the words 'on rules, to consist of five members.'

"2. Add new paragraph to Rule 10 as follows:

"Paragraph V. There shall be a committee on rules elected by the House consisting of ten members, six of whom shall be members of the majority party and four of whom shall be members of the minority party. The speaker shall not be a member of the committee and the committee shall elect its own chairman from its own members.

"Resolved further, That within ten days after the adoption of this resolution there shall be an election of this committee, and immediately upon its election the present committee on rules shall be dissolved."

By a vote of 155 to 191 the House then defeated a resolution declaring the office of speaker vacated and providing for the immediate election of a successor to Cannon. Nine insurgents voted with the Democrats in support of this resolution.



Speaker Joseph G Cannon.

At noon Friday the tense situation existing never would have been suspected from the appearance on the floor of the House. Apparently it was much more serene than it had been at any time since the condition developed. The insurgent Republicans were in conference and the regular Republicans were contending that the result of the meeting would be a compromise.

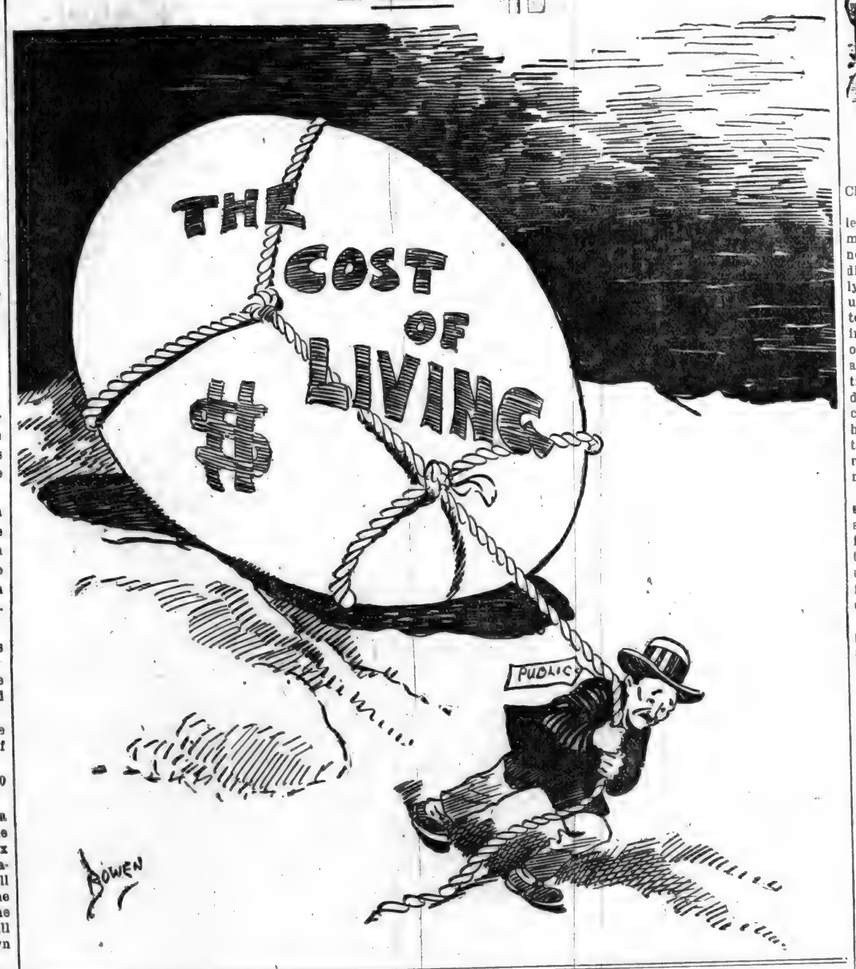
While the conference was on, the House practically was in recess. The Speaker kept some one in the chair, but he wandered around the corridors of the building apparently quite unconcerned as to the ultimate effect of the strife on his own fortunes. The members were good-natured and generally discussed the situation in a friendly manner.

It was a memorable fight which daylight found still in progress in the House. A stubborn filibuster on the part of Speaker Cannon and the House organization and equally relentless attack on the part of the "allies"—these were the distinguishing features in the hottest fight that has yet been made to overthrow the present control of the House. It was extraordinary in many ways. For instance, the odd spectacle was presented of the House, preponderantly Republican, ordering the arrest of the absentees of that party on the motion of a Democrat carried by Democratic votes.

Then, too, it is not often that a filibuster is carried on by the regular House organization, virtually led by the Speaker, supposedly in full control of the House machinery, to prevent consideration of a resolution designed to overthrow that organization, make the rules and reorganize radically the committee, the tenure of whose chairmanship is supposed to be the chief asset in the Speaker's wealth of power.

It is many years, old observers say—in fact, no precise parallel has been suggested—since the House remained actually in session all night, and that after an all-day session.

HIS EASTER EGG.



GRAFT BILLS SNARE FORTY.

Barely Quorum Left When Accused Men Plead Guilty and Resign.

An embarrassing situation has developed in Pittsburg's councilmanic bodies, through the enforced resignations of a number of members because of confessions of guilt in connection with the bribery conspiracy and others that are expected to be demanded by reason of the indictments found against forty present and former members by the grand jury. It is not known if there are enough members left to form a quorum. It is considered fortunate in official circles that the budget was passed before the storm broke, as there might have been difficulty in arranging special meetings to pass the bills which had become laws before taxes could be collected. The penalty to which the guilty councilmen are liable under the law is a fine not exceeding $10,000, imprisonment not exceeding five years, and to be forever debarred from holding any place of profit or trust in the commonwealth.

"Capt." John Klein, who started the municipal uproar by his confession, is guarded by two detectives at a downtown hotel. His meals are being served in his rooms and his every want satisfied. Judge Frazer of the Criminal Court sat as a committing magistrate to hear pleas of councilmen who wish to "come forward" and receive suspended sentences. Anxious to receive the immunity bath, three former members of the Common Council appeared and pleaded "no defense" to charges of having received money for their votes in the passage of bank and street vacation ordinances. Two of the men who appeared were not even under indictment. All were given suspended sentences.

BEEF FIRMS ARE INDICTED.

National Packing Company and Ten Subsidiaries Are Hit.

Indictments against the National Packing Company and ten subsidiary corporations, charged with operating in restraint of trade, were returned by the federal grand jury in Chicago. Simultaneously, a bill in equity was filed by the government in which the courts are asked to dissolve the parent concern. The double barreled blow is calculated by government officials to have a far-reaching effect and shortly after the grand jury was discharged it was authoritatively stated that criminal prosecution of individuals might follow. The civil action was filed by United States District Attorney Sims, under instructions from Attorney General Wickersham.

SENTENCES MUCH MARRIED MAN.

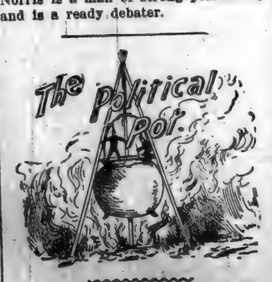
Foreigner, Who Posed as Baron, Convicted on Perjury Charge.

Arthur F. Zimmerman, the impressive-looking foreigner said to have posed as "Baron von Lichtenstein" when seeking matrimonial alliances with title-loving women of means, was sentenced in Brooklyn, N. Y., to from four years and eight months to nine years and six months in prison. He was convicted on a charge of perjury in having sworn falsely that he was unmarried when applying last April for a license to marry a Brooklyn woman. Judge Dike, in imposing sentence, scored Zimmerman for having married twenty-four women since 1872. Zimmerman has nineteen children, six of whom are twins. He is under indictment for bigamy.

CONGRESSMAN WHO BROUGHT ABOUT CANNON'S DOWNFALL.

George W. Norris.

George William Norris, representative from the Fifth Nebraska district, whose onslaught on Cannon has made him famous from Maine to California, has worked his way, despite many handicaps, up to a position of eminence. He was born on a farm in Sandusky, Ohio, in 1861. His father died when he was a babe, his only brother was killed in the Civil War, and his mother was left in straitened circumstances. He worked among the neighboring farmers in the summer months and attended school only in the winter, became a country schoolmaster, studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1883. Then the West opened vistas of preferment, and he went to Nebraska in 1885 and soon began to be conspicuous in politics. In 1895 he was elected District Judge of the Fourteenth Nebraska District. Four years later he was re-elected to the same position, which he held when he was nominated to the Fifty-eighth Congress, and since that time he has represented the Fifth District. Mr. Norris is a man of strong personality and is a ready debater.



Mr. Bryan has declared to friends that he is not a candidate for another nomination to the presidency of the United States. He says that he neither desires nor expects to be a candidate again.

Leroy Percy, of Greenville, Miss., was chosen United States Senator from Mississippi on the fifty-eighth ballot of the Democratic caucus by a majority of five votes over former Governor Vardaman. The nomination is equivalent to election.

The volume of campaign literature sent out during a national campaign is being eclipsed by the bulk of letters, speeches and pamphlets now being poured into the so-called doubtful and insurgent States by the Republican Congressional Committee.

In the two months since Gaynor became mayor of New York he has dropped over 400 politicians from the pay roll of the city. He dismissed 128 politicians in a single day. He has cut salaries aggregating $858,000 a year and made savings in expenditures amounting to $2,000,000 per year.

LOVE OF DRESS LEADS TO PRISON

Ohio Girl Who Gave Sister Mysterious Tablet Faces Murder Charges.

Sixteen-year-old Catherine Manz ended her restless girlhood in a prison cell in Massillon, Ohio, the other night under a charge of murder. At a preliminary hearing before Mayor Remley the prisoner entered a plea of not guilty to the charge of murder in the first degree. Later the girl faced another long cross examination as to the death of her sister, Elizabeth, to whom she says she gave a mysterious tablet Friday not long before the elder girl fell dying to the door.

In her confused first story to the chief of police and the coroner the child prisoner declared that she had purchased a drachm of strychnine for a man, who later presented her with two capsules to give her sister. She has declined to tell who this man is and the police are inclined to believe that he is only a figure of her imagination. It is known, however, that her love of clothes and her extravagances led her into many escapades. Her friends will be called upon to tell what they know of her relations with her sister.

WINS IN REPUBLICAN FORT.

E. N. Foss First Democrat to Carry 14th Massachusetts District.

Eugene N. Foss of Boston the other day was elected to Congress from the Fourteenth District of Massachusetts. Running on the Democratic ticket in a district which in 1908 gave the late William C. Lovering, Republican, a plurality of 14,256, Mr. Foss defeated William R. Buchanan of Brockton, the Republican nominee by 5,617 votes. The victor in this election is a brother of Congressman George Edmund Foss of Chicago. Mr. Foss was adopted as the favorite son of the old colony district by the decisive action of Republicans and Democrats, who gave majorities to him in thirty-three of the forty-four towns and in the two cities in the district. The Democratic candidate invaded Brockton, the home of his opponent, and secured the major portion of the votes, winning in that city by a plurality of 171. This showing in the Fourteenth District is aggressively and demonstratively insurgent. It turned a majority of 14,000 for a Republican into an excess of 5,617 for a Democrat of comparatively recent conversion.

TWO LYNCHED, HELD 'SUICIDES'

Arkansas Coroner's Verdict Ignores Mob's Part in Hanging.

According to the verdict of the coroner, "Bob" Austin and "Charley" Richardson, the negroes lynched at Marion, Ark., for their alleged part in a recent jail delivery, "came to their death by suicide." The coroner in his verdict made no mention of the incidents leading to the "suicides," including the breaking open of the jail by a mob and taking of the two negroes to the courthouse square, where their bodies were found hanging later.

Grandnephew for Carnegie.

A record run by a special train from New York to Greenwich, Conn., preceded the arrival in the world of a grandnephew to Andrew Carnegie. George Lauder, Jr., a nephew of the ironmaster, is the father of the latest candidate for a share in the Carnegie millions.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of Chicago trade says:

"The inviting early spring weather leads to considerable revival in commerce and the immediate effect is notable in the leading industries and distributive branches. A comparatively large gain also appears in the volume of payments through the banks, testifying to the larger use of funds incident to the season, while the record of trading defaults again makes an encouraging exhibit as to the position of credits. Expectations now undergo fulfillment in the more plentiful commitments for future deliveries of heavy materials, and substantial contracts indicate the willingness of railroad managers to provide for requirements.

"The market for hides has ample supplies to meet current demands, but sellers have firmer views as to prices for ensuing months. Tanning operations run steady, with leather under satisfactory consumption, and shoe factories and allied lines have ample contracts ahead.

"Money hardened slightly, but deposits assure adequate loanable funds, and the discount rate for choice commercial paper ranged from 4½ to 5 per cent.

"Bank clearings, $291,632,869, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1909 by 11.9 per cent, and compare with $226,126,642 in 1908. Failures reported in the Chicago district numbered 20, as against 29 last week, 28 in 1909 and 32 in 1908. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 2, as against 6 last week, 6 in 1909 and 10 in 1908."

NEW YORK.

Trade irregularity is still manifest, but reports as a whole show a still further improvement, due to advance of the spring season. Improvement in weather, and coincidently in trade reports, is most manifest in the agricultural sections of the West, Northwest and Southwest, while the reports from the East and parts of the South show the development of spring business retarded by the lingering winter.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with March 17 were 208, as against 250 last week, 224 in the like week of 1909, 303 in 1908, 157 in 1907 and 170 in 1906.

Business failures in Canada for the week number 25, which compares with 36 last week and 32 in this week of 1909.—Bradstreets'.

Cincinnati—Cattle, $4.00 to $8.00; hogs, $7.00 to $11.05; sheep, $3.00 to $6.75; wheat, No. 2, $1.21 to $1.23; corn, No. 2 mixed, 60c to 62c; oats, No. 2 mixed, 47c to 49c; rye, No. 2, 83c to 85c.

Detroit—Cattle, $4.00 to $7.00; hogs, $7.00 to $10.75; sheep, $3.50 to $7.75; wheat, No. 2, $1.17 to $1.18; corn, No. 3 yellow 61c to 62c; oats, standard, 46c to 48c; rye, No. 1, 79c to 80c.

Milwaukee—Wheat, No. 2 northern, $1.12 to $1.16; corn, No. 3, 61c to 63c; oats, standard, 44c to 46c; rye, No. 1, 78c to 80c; barley, standard, 70c to 72c; pork, mess, $25.75.

Buffalo — Cattle, choice shipping steers, $4.00 to $7.25; hogs, fair to choice, $8.00 to $11.15; sheep, common, to good mixed, $4.00 to $7.40; lambs, fair to choice, $5.00 to $10.40.

New York—Cattle, $4.00 to $8.00; hogs, $8.00 to $11.15; sheep, $4.00 to $7.25; wheat, No. 2 red, $1.25 to $1.26; corn, No. 2, 63c to 65c; oats, natural, white, 50c to 52c; butter, creamery, 29c to 32c; eggs, western, 21c to 24c.

Toledo—Wheat, No 2 mixed, $1.17 to $1.18; corn, No. 2 mixed, 61c to 62c; oats, No. 2 mixed, 45c to 46c; rye, No. 2, 79c to 80c; clover seed, $7.10.

For the building of a bridge to connect St. Croix Falls, Wis., and Taylor Falls, Minn., both these cities and their respective States have each appropriated $3,500, making a total of $14,000. Plans for the bridge are being decided upon.

Eastern capitalists have become interested in the Agar Packing Company in Des Moines and will advance money for the construction of an enormous new plant. In addition the capital stock of the company will be increased $240,000.

CHAPTER XV.

Though I had passed out of the British lines less than a week before in decent good odor, save for Colonel Tarleton's illword, I met with nothing like the welcome at the outpost camp that a king's courier had a right to expect. As luck would have it, the first familiar face I saw was that of Charles Stedman, the commissary general. On my inquiry he directed me straight.

"My Lord is at supper at Mr. Stair's. Have you news, Captain?"

I drew breath of relief. Happily the loss of the day had not made me the bearer of stale tidings. So I made answer with proper reticence, saying that I had news, but it was for Lord Cornwallis' ears first of all.

I shall not soon forget the scene that fronted us when we came into my Lord's presence. The supper was in some sort a gala feast held in honor of my Lord's accession to his earldom. The table, lighted by great silver candelabra which I recognized as Ireton heirlooms, was well filled around by the members of the commander-in-chief's military family, with the earl at the head, and Mistress Margery, bedight as befitted a lady of the quality, behind the tea-urn at the foot.

At our incoming all eyes were turned upon us, but it required by Lord's sharp question to make me leave off dwelling upon my sweet lady's radiant beauty.

"How now, Captain Ireton? Do you bring us news from the major?"

"I do, my Lord."

"May all the enemies of the Commonwealth be even as he is, my Lord," I said, quietly.

Now, truly, I had hanged my petard well and 'twas plain the shock of it had gone far to shatter the wall of confidence our enemies had builded on the field of Camden and elsewhere. Had a hand-grenade with the fuse alight been dropped upon the table, the consternation could scarce have been greater. To a man the tableful was up and thronging round me; but above all the hubbub I heard a little cry of misery from the table-foot where my lady sat.

"How is this, sir?—explain yourself!" thundered my Lord, forgetting for once his mild suavity.

"'Tis but a brief tale, and I will make it as crisp as may be in the telling," I replied. "I came upon the major some miles this side of the crossing of the Broad. He was marching to rejoin you, in accordance with his orders. But when he had your Lordship's command to stand and fight, he obeyed."

"My command?—but I gave him no such order!"

"Nay, truly, you did not—neither in the original nor in the duplicate, my Lord. But when we had waylaid Lieutenant Tybee and quenched the duplicate, and had so amended the original as to make it fit our purpose, the brave major thanked you for what you had not done and made his stand to await the upcoming of the over-mountain men."

For a moment I thought they would hew me limb from limb, but my Lord quelled the fierce outburst with a word.

"Put up your swords, gentlemen. We shall know how to deal with this traitor," he said. And then to me: "Go on, sir, if you please; there has been a battle, as I take it?"

"There has, indeed. The mountain men came up with us in the afternoon of the Saturday. In an hour one-third of the major's force was dead or dying, the major himself was slain, and every living man left on the field was a prisoner."

Again a dozen swords hissed from their scabbards, and again I heard the little cry of misery from the table-foot. I bowed my head, looking momently to pay the penalty; but once more my Lord put the swords aside.

"Let us have a clean breast of it this time, Captain Ireton," he said. "You know well what you have earned, and nothing you can say will make it better or worse for you. Was this your purpose in making your submission to me?"

"It was."

"Then it was a farrago of lies you told me about your adventures in the western mountains?"

"Not wholly. It was your Lordship's good pleasure to send succors of powder and lead to your allies, the western savages. I and three others followed Captain Falconnet and his Indians, and I have the honor to report that we overtook and exploded them with their own powder cargo."

"And Captain Sir Francis Falconnet with them?"

"I do so hope and trust, my Lord."

"Put this spy in irons and clear the room," he ordered sharply. And this is how the little drama ended: with the supper guests crowding to the door; with my Lord pacing back and forth at the table-head; with two sergeants bearing me away.

Being without specific orders what to do with me, my two sergeant bailiffs thrust me into that little den of a strong-room below stairs where I had once found the master of the house, and one of them mounted guard whilst the other fetched the camp armorer to iron me.

Sleep came to drag at my eyelids, a drowsiness so masterful that I could make no head against it. I fell away into the pit of forgetfulness. When I awakened I was stretched upon the oaken settle in that same lumber garret where I had been bedded through that other night of hiding. So much I saw at the waking glance; and then I realized, vaguely at first, but presently with startling emphasis, that it was the westering sun which was shining in at the high roof windows, that the shackles were still on.

The wainscot door was opened and closed softly, and light footsteps tiptoed to my bedside. I shut my eyes wilfully when a voice low and tender asked: "Are you awake, Monsieur John?" And then: "Gratitude does not seem to be amongst your gifts."

"Gratitude! Mayhap you will tell me what it is I have to be grateful for. All I craved was the chance to die as a soldier should, and some one must needs spoil me of that!"

"Selfish—selfish always and to the last," she murmured. "Do you never give a moment's thought to the feelings of others, Captain Ireton?"

"If I had not, should I be here this moment?" I raved. "You do make me sicker than I was, my lady."

"Yet I say you are selfish," she insisted. "What have I done that you should come here to have yourself hanged for a spy?"

"Let us have plain speech," I retorted. "You know well enough there was no better way in which I could serve you."

"Do I, indeed!" she flashed out. "Let me tell you, sir, had she ever a blush of saving pride, Margery Stair—or Margery Ireton, if you like that better—would kill you with her own hand rather than have it said her husband died upon a gallows!"

"I do believe you poisoned me in that dish of tea you sent me last night!"

"You have a most chivalrous soul, Captain Ireton. I do not wonder you are so fierce to shake it free of the poor body of clay."

"But you do not deny it!" I cried.

"Shall I go away and leave you?"

"No, not that." A cold sweat broke out upon me in a sudden childish horror of the solitude and the darkness and the fetters. And then I added: "But 'twould be angel kindness if you would leave off torturing me. I am but a man, dear lady, and a sick man at that."

All in a flash her mood changed and she bent to lay a cool palm on my throbbing temples.

"Poor Moncieur John!" she said, softly; "I meant not to make you suffer more, but rather less." Then she found water and a napkin to wring out and bind upon my aching head.

At the touch and the word of womanly sympathy I forgot all, and the love-madness came again to blot out the very present memory of how she had brought me to this.

"Ah, that is better—better," I sighed, when the pounding hammers in my temples gave me some surcease of the agony.

"Then you forgive me?" she asked, whether jestingly or in earnest I could not tell.

"There is none so much to forgive," I replied. "One hopeless day last summer I put my life in pledge to you; and you—in common justice you have the right to do what you will with it."

"Ah; now you talk more like my old-time Monsieur John with the healing sword-thrust. But that day you speak of was not more hopeless for you than for me."

"I know it," said I, thinking only of how the loveless marriage must grind upon her. "But it must needs be hopeless for both till death steps in to break the bond."

"Indeed, it was a great wrong you did that night, sir. I could wish, as heartily as you, that it might be undone. But this is idle talk. Let me see if this key will fit your manacles. I have been all day finding out who had it, and I am not sure it will be the right one, after all. I connived to have you brought here."

When the irons were off I felt more like a man and less like a baited bear.

"That is better," said I, drawing breath of unfeigned relief. "I bear my Lord Charles no malice, but 'twas a needless precaution, this ironing of a man who was never minded to run away."

"But you are going to run away," she said, decisively; "and that as soon as ever you are able to hold a horse between your knees. Shall I bring you another dish of tea? Nay, never look so horrified; I shall not poison you this time."

"Stay," I cried. "You mean that you are going to help me escape? 'Tis a needless prolonging of the agony. Go and tell the guards where they can find me."

"No; you are a soldier, and—and I will not be a gallows-widow. Do you hear, sir? If you are so eager to die, there is always the battle-field." And with that she left me.

I may pass over the two succeeding days in the silence I was condemned to endure through the major part of them. After that first visit, Margery came only at stated intervals to bring me food and drink, and my nurse was an old black beldame, either deaf and dumb, or else so newly from the Guinea Coast as to be unable to twist her tongue to the English.

And in the food-bringings I could neither make my lady stay nor answer any question; this though I was hungering to know what was going on beyond the walls of my garret prison. Indeed, she would not even tell me how I had been spirited away from the two sergeants keeping watch over me in her father's strong-room below stairs. "That is Scipio's secret," she would say, laughing at me, "and he shall keep it."

But in the evening of the third day the mystery bubble was burst, and I learned from Margery's lips the thing I longed to know. Lord Cornwallis had decided to abandon North Carolina, and in an hour or two the army would be in motion for withdrawal to the southward.

"I am going away—to-night," she said.

"Going away?" I echoed. "Whither, if I may ask?"

"My father has taken protection and we shall go south with the army. As Lord Cornwallis says, Mecklenburg is a hornets' nest of rebellion, and in an hour or two after we are gone you will be amongst your friends."

She made to leave me now, but I would not let her go without trying the last blunt-pointed arrow in the quiver of expedients.

"Stay a moment," I begged. "You are leaving the untangling of this coil you speak of to a chance bullet on a battle-field. Had you ever thought that the Church can undo what the Church has done?"

Again I had that bitter laugh which was to rankle afterward in memory.

"You are a most desperate, pertinacious man, Captain Ireton," she scoffed; then, at the very pitch-point of the scornful outburst she put her face in her hands and fell a-sobbing as if her heart would break.

I knew not what to say or do, and ended, man-like, by saying and doing nothing. And so, still crying softly, she let herself out at the wainscot door, and this was our leave-taking.

RICH "POOR MAN'S DIGGINGS."

Strike Said to Have Been Made in the Innoko Country in Alaska.

According to the current stories from Alaska, poor man's diggings of great promise have been struck in the Innoko country, southeast of Norton Sound, and there is a general stampede to the new camp. This is the third season of prospecting in that region, and each report received tells of rich strikes made in the shallow diggings which give it its characteristic of a poor man's camp.

What has made Alaska and the British Yukon is the poor man's diggings. The original prospectors had none of them money enough to buy machinery or to transport it into that country of magnificent distances and no transportation facilities. Neither would have capital been enlisted during the present generation in development work on mines in Alaska had it not been for the immense wealth taken out by the men of no capital save their brawn and energy. The Klondike was a poor man's camp in its inception and paid the original locators from the grass roots down. So rich were the claims that the first miners got money sufficient to purchase their supplies during the first winter after discovery by panning the dirt off their dumps with melted snow.

Some of the best discoveries in Alaska of recent years have been at such depth in the frozen ground that it was useless for a man without capital to attempt to open a claim. It required money to put in the appliance for thawing the frozen ground and sinking to considerable depth. But men with capital are now willing to take over all such properties and development proceeds apace.

If reports should prove to be true, the Innoko country promises to give the poor man a chance to make a mine.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Mrs. Eleanor Likins, aged 54, died at Richmond as a result of injuries received in falling down a flight of stairs at the Masonic Temple several weeks ago. Mrs. Likins was one of the best-known women of Richmond and was the widow of John H. Likins. Five children survive her.

Dr. Frank S. Cooper, a veterinary surgeon, was seriously injured at Lafayette in a collision between his automobile and an Indianapolis interurban car at Main and Scott streets on Oakland Hill. The machine was wrecked and Dr. Cooper suffered internal injuries and a badly sprained shoulder.

Mrs. J. W. Dashiell, wife of the Rev. J. W. Dashiell, of Sandusky, was stricken with paralysis while attending the funeral of a relative in Greensburg, and her condition is serious. The Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Dashiell are well known over Southeastern Indiana, where the minister has held many important charges in the M. E. Conference.

Trustees of the Southern Indiana Insane Hospital at Evansville have purchased eighty acres of land near that hospital for a dairy farm, paying $14,000 for the land, or $175 an acre. The money will come out of the appropriation of $30,000 made by the State Legislature for the purpose. At the next meeting of the trustees $60,000 will be set aside for a building to care for the sick.

Thieves broke into the meat market of Leo Jacobs, 505 Twelfth street, Logansport, but instead of taking $5 which was in the cash drawer, they stole three hams, took some choice cuts of beef and a number of cans of chipped beef. Evidence showed that the robbers were after meat rather than money, and at the present price of pork the hams which they stole were worth nearly their weight in silver.

Starting with the assertion that only picture shows would be tried on the Elkhart public for Sunday amusement at the five theatres, the Bucklen management now announces that an innovation will be offered next Sunday night at which time the Rosar Mason Stock Company will give a performance. The theatre managers have retained State Senator Robert E. Proctor to defend them in event the ministerial Association attempts prosecution.

Dr. J. N. Hurty, secretary of the State Board of Health, has evolved a plan to have the churches of Indianapolis and other cities of the State observe "Tuberculosis Sunday," April 24. The plan, as adopted by a number of cities, is to have the ministers talk on the topic and to present explanations of the ravages of consumption and best known methods of prevention and cure. The day will be observed generally throughout the United States.

F. F. Perry, of Richmond, recently celebrated the thirty-fourth anniversary of his career as a locomotive engineer by taking his usual run to Fort Wayne over the Grand Rapids & Indiana line. Perry has missed only a few days in each year from his regular run, and in point of continuous service is one of the oldest engineers in the State. In his entire career he has been in only one wreck, that occurring in 1900, in which he was slightly injured.

The "go-home paddle," which it is alleged was used in the encampment Odd Fellows' initiation, and which figured in the recent damage suit brought against the Sheridan branch of the order, is to be in the limelight again. Charles C. Kassebaum, a young man of Sheridan, sued for damages for personal injuries in the sum of $10,000. The jury gave him a verdict for about one-tenth of the sum. His attorneys asked for a new trial and Judge Nash granted the motion.

Mrs. Charles Rush, of Princeton, while going home alone at night, a few blocks from the public square, was accosted by an unidentified well-dressed man who, evidently mistaking her for some one else, sought to force his attentions on her. Mrs. Rush was equal to the occasion, however, and grabbing him she choked him, beat him in the face with her fists, knocked a hole through his hat and caused him to lose it and a gold ring, which he wore on his finger. The masher finally wriggled loose from his indignant antagonist and escaped.

Mr. and Mrs. F. T. Scott, of Owensville, have just welcomed the fourth pair of twins. Mrs. Scott's family has a record in this line. Her mother had one pair of twins and one set of triplets; a sister had two pairs of twins and a set of triplets. This makes seven pairs of twins and two sets of tripiets in the family of the mother and two daughters. One pair of twins belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Scott will celebrate their birthday anniversary on different days of the month. One was born few minutes before midnight, the other a few minutes after midnight.

Leslie Lawrence, a well-known Civil War veteran of Evansville, is supposed to be dying of blood poisoning. Rat poison got into his low-cut shoe and shifted through his sock until it reached an abrasion on his foot.

The home of John Meade, near Francisco, was destroyed by fire. The dwelling was one of the oldest in Gibson County and was valued at $5,000. The insurance was $1,900. The house was for many years occupied by Captain W. S. Whiting.

In a fight at Evansville Albert Schlageter picked up Charles Darnell after beating him and threw him head foremost into a rain barrel filled with water. Darnell would have probably drowned had not the clerks in a nearby grocery pulled him from the barrel. Schlageter was arrested.

John Morgan, aged 65, a wealthy farmer and large landowner, committed suicide at his home, two miles south of Rushville. Mr. Morgan ended his life by shooting himself through the temple with a shotgun while in his barn. A widow, four daughters and six sons survive. Mr. Morgan had shown signs of melancholia and had threatened to end his life, but no attention was paid to it by members of his family.

The cracksmen who robbed the Van Buren bank, stole a team of horses and a carriage from Alfred Boxell, two miles south of Van Buren, and drove to Marion. The horses were unhitched from the vehicle at the outskirts of the city and turned loose on a commons, where they were found by Sheriff George. In addition to the $1,500 taken from the bank, $587 in postage stamps, deposited there by Postmaster Bachelor, were stolen. There have been no arrests.

Mrs. Sarah Stokes and her baby, aged 15 months, were drowned in the Ohio river, ten miles below Mt. Vernon last week. Mr. and Mrs. Stokes, with their baby and friends of Uniontown, Ky., came to that city in gasoline launches, and on their return one of the boats exploded and began burning in the middle of the river. In attempting to step from one launch into the other Mrs. Stokes fell into the water with her baby in her arms, and both sank.

The Controller of the Currency at Washington, D. C., has approved the application of Karl I. Nutter, John Freeman, T. G. Pierson, Henry Rentschler, C. E. Cunningham, E. W. Sweet and others to organize the Spencer National Bank, of Spencer, Ind., with $50,000 capital. The following reserve agents have been appointed for Indiana banks: National Bank of Commerce, of New York, for the Cannelton National Bank, of Cannelton; the Union National Bank, of Indianapolis, for the First National Bank, of Noblesville.

Officials of the Fort Wayne & Wabash Valley Traction Company have announced that they will build an interurban station in Logansport, which will cost between $40,000 and $50,000. Recently, Mayor D. D. Fickle served notice on the company that it would not be permitted to use Broadway as a freight depot, and since then the officials have been looking about for a suitable site for a passenger station and freight depot. Work on the South Bend & Logansport interurban line is progressing. Five grading outfits are now at work and it is expected that the line will be completed from South Bend to Lake Maxinculckee by fall. Those in charge say that cars will be running from Logansport to South Bend by July 4, 1911.

The Mary Penrose Wayne Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, in Fort Wayne, has started a movement to raise funds to provide for a reproduction of the historical old Fort Wayne on the site occupied by the structure more than a hundred years ago. The small triangular tract of ground is now a public park, and the women propose to construct there a replica of the old fort and stockade which formed the central point in the defense against the Indians. A short time ago the chapter erected a boulder to mark Wayne trace, the route taken by General Wayne and his army in leaving the fort, and they propose similarly to mark the point at which General Harmer and his troops forded the Maumee river. Both points are within the city limits of Fort Wayne.

Evidence that the prize fish story of the season of 1910 is true, may be had at the headquarters of fire company No. 1 in Columbus. The evidence is in the shape of a two-pound German carp, and the story is that this fish was caught by Will Kocher in a steel trap. Kocher is assistant city lineman, but he has some time to spare, and during the present winter he has been trapping in the vicinity of White river. He had two traps set for muskrats, each trap being a few inches under water at the edge of the river. When he went to look at his traps he found a carp over one and supposed the fish was dead and had floated to the shore. But when he started to pull in the trap he found the fish very much alive. Investigation showed that the carp was caught by one fin in the jaws of the trap. Kocher supposes the fish tried to feed off the bait in the trap and was caught by a fin when the trigger was displaced. The other trap contained a muskrat. Kocher says he has caught wild ducks in steel traps, but he never caught a fish in that manner before.

While burning some trash at her home in Sandcreek Township, Bartholomew County, the clothing of Sarah Prudence Allen, the 17-year-old daughter of Lindsay Allen, caught fire, and she was fatally burned.

Elkhart theatres having announced they will begin Sunday performances, the Rev. J. H. Breish, president of the Ministerial Association, announces that the association has retained counsel and will prosecute each manager for violating the Sunday law.

48 DEAD, 43 INJURED IN COSTLY RAIL WRECK

CHICAGO DOCTOR IS A HERO

Organizes and Leads the Work of Rescue Among Panic-Stricken Passengers.

Forty-eight persons were killed and forty-three injured, many probably fatally, in a wreck at 8:30 o'clock the other morning four miles from Green Mountain, Ia.

The train wrecked was a combination of the Rock Island road's "Twin City express" trains, bound for Minneapolis from Chicago and St. Louis, and being routed over the Chicago Great Western tracks. The wreck, which is the worst in the history of Iowa railroading, was caused by the tender of the first of the two engines drawing the combined train jumping the track and plunging into a clay bank lining a deep cut near Green Mountain.

A relatively unimportant freight wreck on the Rock Island at Shellsburg the previous night was the indirect cause of the catastrophe. In this freight wreck traffic was so tied up that it was necessary for the Rock Island to make a temporary routing arrangement with the Chicago Great Western to care for its passenger trains to and from Minneapolis.

The Chicago "Twin City Express" and the St. Louis train were combined at Marshalltown. As there was no turn table, it was necessary for the two engines to be coupled at the head of the train with their tenders ahead and pull the cars backing up. It is supposed that this unusual method of running the engines caused the tender of the first locomotive to leap the track in the cut. The tender plunged into the bank and stuck there and the two locomotives leaped the rails and jammed into the cut.

Next to the engines was the heavy Pullman sleeper of the St. Louis train, in which many of the passengers had not left their berths. Directly behind the Pullman were two lighter cars, first a smoking car and then a day car, and behind these were the ten other passenger, baggage and express cars which composed the train. Although the train was not traveling faster than twenty-five miles an hour, the enormous weight back of the lightly constructed day coach and smoker telescoped them against the immovable bulk of the heavy Pullman and the two locomotives. Most of the fatalities and serious injuries occurred in these two cars, which were ground almost to bits. The passengers in the St. Louis Pullman escaped with a shaking up and minor bruises, while the ten cars back of the telescoped section of the train remained on the rails and those riding in them suffered only trifling injuries.

Wild scenes of panic ensued. The presence on the scene of so many uninjured passengers, unaccustomed to acting in emergencies and overcome by the horror of the catastrophe, added to the confusion. A young Chicago physician, Dr. John W. De Vry, stands out as the hero who brought order out of the chaos and was responsible for the organized work of rescue that doubtless saved many lives before the special train from Marshalltown, bearing doctors and nurses, had reached the scene.

MABRAY IS CONVICTED.

Jurors in Council Bluffs Trial Find Alleged Swindler and Aids Guilty.

John C. Mabray and thirteen of his associates, who for ten days have been on trial in the United States District Court in Council Bluffs, charged with illegal use of the mails in connection with an extensive "fixed" race swindle, were found guilty in a verdict by the jury which heard the case. Robert E. L. Goddard of San Antonio, the fifteenth defendant, secured a disagreement.

Those convicted with Mabray were Leon Loser, Tom S. Robinson, Willard Powell, Clarence Class, Edward Leach, Edward K. Morris, Clarence Forbes, Harry Forbes, Frank Scott, Ed McCoy, Winford S. Harris, Bert R. Shores and William ("Ole") Marsh. The last-named three entered a plea of nolle contendre when the trial opened, which was, in effect, a plea of guilty.

With the conviction of Mabray and his associates, the government believes it has broken up the most monumental swindling combination which ever has operated. Statistics have been gathered which show the receipts of the combination since its organization about ten years ago to have exceeded $5,000,000.

CHINESE HITS RICH GOLD VEIN.

California Celestial Takes Out $204,000 in Few Months.

The richest strike of placer gold made in California since the pioneer days has just been opened in Placer County, and the finder is a Chinese, Ah Kai, an aged Celestial who has been placer mining for many years. He drove a tunnel 200 feet into the hill and struck an old river channel, from which in a few months he has taken out $204,000 in coarse gold.

House cleaning time, peek-a-boo waists, fancy vests, ice cream and Band Concerts! Will we have band concerts this season? Why not? And get at it early. Do you remember the band concerts of last summer? Can't we start the ball rolling NOW? And while we have opened up the subject let's do a little figuring on how to meet the little expense connected with this business. Wouldn't it be the proper idea to organize a business men's club and have some thorough system about the matter? It would be much more satisfactory and the bother would be reduced to a minimum. There are many little items such as getting chairs, arranging lights and the collections that could be adjusted for the entire season instead of having to contend with them each night as were the case last summer. Business men, let us get together and do something along this line, right now. What do you think?

PARIS RAGPICKERS.

An Occupation That Is Passed Along From Father to Son.

The ragpickers of Paris are born to their work, the occupation being passed from father to son for generations. Each ragpicker family has its own district, which is inherited by the children and grandchildren.

In spite of all the progress made in modern and elegant Paris barrels of waste are piled up on the streets in front of many buildings on beautiful boulevards in the early morning hours, and it is the privilege and in fact the mission of the ragpickers to examine this refuse.

They have use for everything, and but little is left after they have passed. their thoroughness being one reason why the system is still allowed. Every scrap of paper has its market; rags are gathered for paper manufacturers; shoes go back to leather dealers.

Old sardine and preserved meat tins are used for making playthings, old bones produce gelatin and glue. lemons and orange peels are greatly sought after and sold at the rate of a cent a pound to perfume and sirup manufacturers, old metals are highly prized, cigar stubs go to tobacco factories, and even stale vegetables are carted away.

The quarters of the ragpickers of Paris are just outside the confines of the city—sections carefully avoided by most people who do not belong to the guild. Every member of the family. from the oldest to the three-year-old, takes part in the sorting of the spoils, and it often happens that members of a family die either from poisoning from stale food or from a cut from one of the tins.—Popular Mechanics.

PLUCKING LIVE GEESE

An Operation Necessary to Procure Good Feathers.

LOCKING THE BIRDS' WINGS.

"Yes," said a manufacturer and dealer in bed furnishings, "it is necessary that goose feathers should be taken from the live goose if we are to study the health and comfort of people who think they must have feather beds and pillows. Dead goose feathers are not much better than husks to lie on and have not that great virtue of husks—wholesomeness.

"They say it doesn't hurt a goose to pluck it, but it seems to me that one might as well say that it wouldn't hurt a man to have his whiskers yanked out by the handful. The reason they give for believing a goose doesn't suffer when its feathers are being plucked out of it is that it never squawks or squeaks or makes a fuss while the plucking is going on.

"Now, I believe it hurts a goose like the mischief to have its feathers pulled out, coming as they do from the tenderest spots on its body, and the reason the fowl doesn't utter any protest prompted by pain is, according to the way I have sized geese up, because it is such a blame fool. A goose will squawk and clatter and cackle as if it were suffering more agony than a horse with the colic just at the mere sight of you, but if you corner it up and pelt it with stones it seems to forget that it has a voice and will take all the punishment you give it without a further word.

"The Pennsylvania Dutch farmers pluck geese today just the same as their forbears did time out of mind, and I don't know as there is any other way. It certainly couldn't be made any pleasanter for the goose unless the plucker held chloroform or something like that to its nose while the plucking was going on. The geese to be bereft of their feathers are first got together in an inclosure used for the purpose. The perspicacity of geese may be strikingly made known to you when they are being rounded up in such an inclosure if there should happen to be a knothole in one end of it, the door being at the other. That door may be six feet high and three broad, but goose after goose will ignore it and try its best to get through the knothole. Induced, though, to try the door, every goose will bob its head down as it passes through for fear of knocking it against the top of the door jamb, six feet above.

"There is a man or a boy in every neighborhood where geese are plucked who is an expert in getting the goose ready for the process. Not every one can do that. The wings of the goose have to be locked together by a peculiar arrangement of the two near the shoulder, and, while they are not tied or fastened in any other way, the lock is such that no goose can unlock it. The goose's feet are tied together with a broad band of soft muslin. Then it is ready for the plucker.

"The pluckers, who are almost always women, go among the geese with their heads and faces entirely covered with hoods fastened around the neck with a shirr string. There are holes in the hoods for the eyes and also at the nose to supply fresh air for breathing. From the neck down the pickers are covered with a glazed muslin garment to which no feather or down will cling. The pluckers will sit on low stools around a large and perfectly dry tub. Each takes in her lap a goose made helpless by its interlocked wings and bound legs and with rapid plying of her fingers separates the feathers from it. This is done with such skill, though, that the plucker rarely breaks the goose's skin or causes blood to follow the plucking out of a feather. The air is constantly filled with the light feathers during the plucking, but they settle into the tub at last.

"But there isn't as much call for the goose to undergo this raping of its feathers as there used to be. Not one pound of goose feathers is used today where there were fifty pounds twenty-five years ago. Odd as it may seem, asthma and hay fever long ago began to have a good deal to do with decreasing the demand for feather beds and pillows. It was discovered that asthma and hay fever had an affinity for such couches and head rests; that nothing would start an asthmatic off for a cheerful night's wheezing so quickly as a feather bed. This discovery spread, and the goose owes a great deal of its later day comfort to the asthma."—Detroit Free Press.

She Had Enough.

As Mrs. May of Birchdale Corners was leaving the exhibition hall of the county fair a man stepped out of a booth and accosted her.

"Won't you enter," said he, "and see the startling spenthariscopic scintillations of radium?"

Mrs. May shook her head—with a smile, however, for she is courteous if not scientific.

"I'm obliged to you," she said, "but my bag is chock full of samples now."—Youth's Companion.

WOVEN WIRE FENCE.

There is so many makes of fence on the market, some good, some very poor. I have handled a number of different makes and am convinced that the AMERICAN FENCE is the best value for the money of any fence on the market. The strength of fence depends on the weight of the wire in the fence. Now compare the weight of a ROD of AMERICAN FENCE with the weight of a rod of any other fence then compare the price. Do not take the dealers word as to how much it weighs but put it on the scales and weigh it. I can sell you

Can you buy any other fence so cheap?

I have eight different styles on hand now. The American Steel and Wire Company make nearly all the wire that is woven in the different makes of fence and it is folly for an agent of any other make of fence to claim a superior quality of wire or of galvanizing. Every manufacturer of fence has an idea as to what temper the wire should be for a fence and orders his wire tempered accordingly, in other words he experimenting at the Farmers expense. The American Steel and Wire Company have passed the experimental stage and are producing a composition of Steel for Fence that is perfectly adapted for it. Every farmer that has had any experience with wire knows that wire exposed to the weather becomes hard and brittle, this feature has been largely eliminated in the special wire used in AMERICAN FENCE. While the wire is stiff and springy it is flexible enough to be easily spliced and will remain so. We will explain other good features if you will call and see us.

We are headquarters for all kinds of roofing, galvanized shingles, any kind of iron roofing, tin repair work. All kinds of Hardware, Lime, Cement, Paint, Oils and Varnishes. Quality right. Prices Right.

Headache For Years

"I keep Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills on hand all the time, and would not think of taking a journey without them, no matter how short a distance I am going. I have a sister that has had terrible headaches for years, and I coaxed her to try them and they helped her so much, she now keeps them by her all the time. From my own experience I cannot praise them enough."

THE POPULAR PULPIT

ALONE WITH GOD.

Rev. O. S. Kingsbury.

My soul shall be satisfied as with marrow and fatness; and my mouth shall praise Thee with joyful lips. When I remember Thee upon my bed, and meditate on Thee in the night watches.—Ps. xlii., 5-6.

Alone with God—that is an experience which ought to be realized by every Christian believer, by every man for that matter, every day of his life. We all are conscious that this is a bustling, hurrying, rushing age. The pressure upon life is enormous. Material things bulk large on the attention. The voices that we hear are strident. The tendency is to glorify the material and the external, to magnify the visible forces until there is danger of not making sufficient account of those that are less obtrusive. This rush and stir is exhilarating. It means progress. The material advance can be made an aid in securing the triumph of God's kingdom.

Let us turn this gem of truth about and get a new sparkle from each facet. Think, then, of the joy of being alone with God. If it is a joy to be alone with a dear earthly friend, how much more with the Friend. It is a joy to have to do with the best things in the world—the best in art, in architecture, in furniture, in equipage. Most of us have to content ourselves with things that are far less than best. But here no one of us is so humble or so insignificant but that he may come into the company of the very best.

When one thus is alone with God, the divine holiness awes, the divine purity shames the soul. There is no place where man will so feel his sin as when confronting his Maker. Here more than anywhere else the prayer will break from his heart: "God be merciful to me, the sinner!" Joy here? Yes, because when one really feels his sin he feels also the divine readiness to pardon, the divine yearning to lift him out of sin and transform him into the divine likeness.

The purity of God shames and awes us, but at the same time it beckons us. The divine purity is alluring, not forbidding. The vision of the Holy One incites us to better things. And when alone with God we see most clearly that there is nothing so worthy as His service, nothing so appealing or so rewarding as to be a co-worker with the Almighty, engaging in that service whose results are sure and eternal.

So it is that as the believer is alone with God he finds power. It is spiritual power that is needed more than anything else in the world. Organization is good, is necessary in its place. The machine is of value, but the machine without power is a mass of mere metal. When one is alone with God he draws strength from the fountain head. He is in the power house, not somewhere out along the transmission line where the voltage is low. He gets all the power he can hold.

In getting this personal development he gets at the same time power for service, for work for others. When the power is obtained the methods of using it will be easily found and adjusted. How much time should one spend alone with God? That depends. One cannot answer the question for another. The principle is absolute. Be alone with God at least once as every day's sun sweeps its circle. So find joy, restraint, stimulus, power!

LENT A TIME FOR MEDITATION.

By Rev. J. W. Roberts.

The Lenten season is a season widely regarded as an appropriate time for exercising the spirit of self-denial, devotion, meditation and prayer. What is the message such a season brings to us, and especially just now? What is the voice to which we should give heed? I think it is not so much the call of the public weal as the call of the individual life, the voice of our better angel in the soul.

Lent should be a sifting time, a time when we should thoughtfully consider our own religious obligations, our own personal relation to God, the infinite source of wisdom, strength and power. No man is living up to the best there is in him who does not welcome the thought of self-examination and appraisement. To many the Lenten season means the acceptable time for this purpose. In these days of feverish excitement there is certainly danger of neglecting the development of our inner, spiritual life and fostering a mistaken idea of the true relationship between man and his Maker. We should try to live in such a state of intense desire and longing toward the Infinite Father as to readily respond to His will, making ourselves available to Him as mediums for carrying out His purpose in the world. This we can do to the extent of and in proportion to our spiritual development. Meditation is essential to this spiritual progress.

Lent is not a time for discouragement because of the fact that so many people are led away from the higher purpose of their life by the allurements which best their path. It is more especially a time for personal scrutiny; a time for considering where we personally stand rather than the wants and necessities of the multitude. And, in any case, the way to uplift the body politic is to uplift the individual. The call of Lent, then, is to a higher standard of individual living. There are reminders on every hand that every one of us should live a greater life, greater at least in devotion to every force of human service.

The air is filled with voices saying: "This man is not doing what he ought to do." "The church is failing to fulfill its mission."

So loud and vibrant are these voices demanding investigation into the lives and methods of others that the still, small voice within us can scarcely be heard.

It then becomes almost a duty and most assuredly a privilege to secure by meditation and prayer the benefits of this Lenten season, because in the resultant quietude we hear the voice of the Great Teacher and feel that we have responded to his personal appeal, "What is that to thee? Follow thou Me."

HYMNS AND THEIR AUTHORS

NEARER, MY GOD, TO THEE.

By Sarah Flower Adams.

[Sarah Flower Adams (Great Harlow, England, Feb. 22, 1805—London, August, 1848) is the author of the hymn which is the best known of all those written by women. She was the daughter of the editor of the Cambridge Intelligencer and was married to William B. Adams, a celebrated engineer and inventor. Though written as recently as 1840, this hymn stands amongst the foremost in the list of the ten great hymns of the Christian church. In the United States it would be impossible to find a hymnal from which it is omitted. This may be due, in part, to the tune to which it was set by the father of American church music, Dr. Lowell Mason. "Bethany" is wedded to the hymn here, while in England, where it is sung to other tunes, it is not nearly so well known. Written by an English woman, this hymn has been carried to all parts of the world by American travelers, and American missionaries have translated it into the tongues of the strange tribes in all lands.]

Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee,
E'en though it be a cross
That raiseth me;
Still all my song shall be,
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee.

Though like the wanderer,
The sun gone down,
Darkness be over me,
My rest a stone;
Yet in my dreams I'd be
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee.

There let the way appear
Steps unto heaven;
All that thou sendest me,
In mercy given;
Angels to beckon me
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee.

Then with my waking thoughts
Bright with thy praise,
Out of my stony griefs
Bethel I'll raise;
So by my woes to be
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee.

Or if on joyful wing,
Cleaving the sky,
Sun, moon, and stars forgot,
Upward I fly,
Still all my song shall be,
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee.

SERMONETTES.

Piety adopted because it pays costs more than it is worth.

Every man knows just how to play the game until he goes to the bat.

This would be a dreary world to some if their neighbors were all good.

Any one can understand the divine love when it is in terms of human kindness.

The most comforting truth we know have become ours when seen through tears.

He must be shortsighted who thinks he is lifting himself by turning up his nose at others.

It is not necessary to rake over a man's reputation before you begin to sow the seeds of kindness.

Some men think they are faithful because they would rather fight for old forms than face new facts.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't mistake self-approbation for reformation.

Don't forget that no man ever ascends above his ideals.

Don't consider it safe to idealize the real until you realize the ideal.

Don't fail to learn that no man has any rights that lead others wrong.

Don't forget that resources for tomorrow depend on reserves made today?

Don't overlook the fact that the man who has no piety to spare has none to save.

Don't fail to learn that a life is holy in the measure that it makes lives really happy.

Don't fail to observe that the best proof of a great religion is its use on small occasions.

Little Laughs

Enthusiasm Dulled.

"Don't you feel as if you would like to leave footprints in the sands of time?" asked the ambitious citizen.

"No," answered Mr. Crosslots, gloomily; "out where I live the mud is eighteen inches deep, and I don't feel as if I wanted to see another footprint as long as I live."—Washington Star.

An Advertiser.

"Why do you constantly permit reports of your death to go out?"

"Because," answered the Moroccan bandit, "I want my name in print, and those are the only reports I can get past the press censor."—Washington Star.

Endorsing His Note.

Accounted For.

The village cornetist, who made his living as a barber, was massaging a patron's face.

"That's a peculiar way of massaging a nose," remarked the man in the chair. "Some New York method?"

"That? Oh, no. I was just practicing the fingering of the Second Hungarian Rhapsody."—Puck.

Still Higher Finance.

"Surely," began the private secretary, "it won't pay to give to both parties."

"My dear fellow," replied the astute president, "you are forgetting that in a year or two one of them will be offering me a rebate not to support the other."—Puck.

Then He Said Good-Night.

Mr. Boreum Gude—When I was a kid I used to ring doorbells and then run away.

Miss Kutting Hints—And now you ring them and stay.

Cruel.

"If I were to tell you all I know," he commented, sagely.

"I should not be any wiser than I am now," she replied, tersely.—Detroit Free Press.

Making the Best of It.

Theatrical Manager—Hi, there! What are you doing with that pistol?

Discouraged Lover—Going to kill myself.

Nonreversible.

Long—Didn't you tell me that you made yourself solid with Mrs. Vane by asking her if she was herself or her daughter—couldn't tell them apart, and so on?

Strong—I did. What about it?

Long—I tried the same game with the daughter, and it didn't go at all!

Badly Scared.

"The seismograph is acting very strangely, professor."

"Don't mind it. All the trolley poles and power houses in the country are shaking over the story of the Edison storage battery."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Poor Sister.

Young Man—Do you think your sister would be sorry to marry and leave you?

The Terror—Oh, yes. She said she would have been married long ago if it hadn't been for me.—Judge.

Minister, Then Judge.

She (coyly)—It takes two to make a bargain, you know.

He—Yes, but it only takes one to break it all to smash again.—Boston Herald.

Losing His Nerve.

Bus Driver—Ain't yer satisfied with runnin' over people? Yer wants to run over the 'osses now!

Taxi Driver (indignantly)—I haven't run over anybody for a long time.

Realized the Danger.

He—Now that we are married, pet, do you love me enough to cook for me?

She—Enough, darling? I love you entirely too much for that.—Boston Transcript.

Proof.

Wright—What makes you think the mail facilities have greatly improved?

Penman—Because I get my manuscripts back from the editors quicker than I used to.—Yonkers Statesman.

Unexpected Success.

Young Architect—This is a deuce of a profession. Here I drew up plans for a conservatory of music, and they used it for a cheese factory.

Old Architect—Don't let that fret you, my boy—you simply builded stronger than you knew.

One of the Handsome Ones.

First Fair Invalid—Which kind of doctor do you prefer—the allopathic or the homeopathic?

Second Fair Invalid—I prefer the sympathetic.

Aerial Nourishment.

"Orchids live on air," said the botanist.

"I don't know about that," replied young Mr. Flimm. "But if I keep on buying them, I'll have to."—Washington Star.

Expecting Too Much.

"Has your wife got a cook?"

"How do I know?"

"It seems to me that you should know if anyone should."

"But I haven't been home since noon."—Houston Post.

Bird of the Past.

Grouchy Bachelor—Same old story, I suppose. Got to using them on women's hats, didn't they?—Puck.

Acquiring a Graceful Carriage.

"Tote it on yer head, Mary. Dey say it gives a woman a awful graceful carriage."

Labor Saving.

Servant (breaking vase)—Ah! That's lucky! It's broken only in three pieces.

Mistress—Well, you must be mad to call that luck.

Servant—You don't have to pick up the pieces, ma'am.—Bon Vivant.

A Sign.

"Her husband is either afraid of her or very much in love with her."

"Why so?"

"When they go out together he never thinks of standing out on the rear platform of the car to finish his cigar."—Detroit Free Press.

Eminent Collectors.

"Noah had a shipload of specimens of all kinds of creatures," said one small boy.

"Yes," replied the other. "He was the Theodore Roosevelt of his day."—Washington Star.

Wise Child.

Papa—Bobbie, what do you want for your birthday present?

Usually.

Teacher—Where do the sponges come from?

Bright pupil—From the noble families of Europe.—Philadelphia Press.

AN ARISTOCRATIC BEGGAR.

Even a beggar may have pride—at least in Mexico. At a railroad station in that country, says W. E. Carson in his book, "Mexico," he noticed, standing a little removed from the motley throng of mendicants, a melancholy-looking Mexican, wearing a rather battered brown felt sombrero, his limbs encased in skin-tight trousers of thin gray cloth, adorned with numerous patches. Over his shoulders was a bright red blanket. He was strumming away at an old-fashioned mandolin and singing some mournful Spanish song.

Catching sight of me, he stopped playing and lifted his sombrero. I went out on the car platform and handed him 5 cents. To my astonishment, he politely declined my humble offering.

"Senor," said he, in choice Spanish, with some emotion, "you must pardon me for being unable to accept your gift, but I am a 10-cent beggar, senor, and never, never accept a smaller gratuity."

Drawing himself up with an air of pride, he continued, "I shall be honored to sing for your entertainment a song of old Spain or one of our noble Mexican airs, but always for a fee of 10 cents, never for less, for I am a 10-cent beggar, senor, poor as I am."

It was impossible to resist this touching protest, so with an apology I handed the courtly vagrant his proper fee, which he acknowledged with "a thousand thanks" and a graceful bow.

At the other end of the car the mob of beggars were scrambling for copper coins thrown to them by my fellow passengers. The melancholy minstrel glanced at them, shrugged his shoulders, and waved his hand deprecatingly.

"Ah, senor," he observed, "those poor people! They have to work hard to earn their bread; good folk, worthy folk, well deserving of your charity; but they give you a very bad impression of Mexico. Pray, senor, do not class them with poor musicians like myself."

With these words he commenced twanging his discordant instrument again, and once more burst into song so dismal that it seemed to make the gloomy weather even more depressing.

MAKING LOVE IN PORTUGAL.

Early Stages of Courtship Are Romantic and Picturesque.

The most important event in the life of a Portuguese woman is marriage, says Leslie's Weekly. Next in importance are the early days of courtship, for a Portuguese courtship is the essence of romance, and the ways of the Portuguese lover are singularly picturesque. Here is a little drama in which Cupid is stage director. If a young Portuguese sees in the street a pretty girl with whom he would like to become acquainted, he follows her. Chaperons are not impossible obstructions. He follows her right up to her very door and notes the address. Next day he comes again, and if the young lady approves of him—for she certainly saw him the day before—she is on the lookout. Sometimes hard fate in the guise of an angry parent prevents her, and then the gallant youth is kept waiting. Sooner or later she leans over the balcony and smiles at him. The happy youth ties a note to a cord which the fair lady drops from the balcony. The next day the young man comes again. This time he rings at the door. If the inquiries which the young lady's elders have made prove satisfactory, the swain is admitted to make the acquaintance of the young lady. After that, courtship in Portugal is about the same as it is in Kankakee or Kalamazoo.

How Danish Farmers Prosper.

The Danish farmers, living as they do on or near the seacoast, are great exporters of dairy stuff. England is so big a customer that the Danes in fun reproach their neighbors with eating up their butter, and leaving them only oleomargarin. "Yet," says F. M. Butlin in "Among the Danes," "they are not all of that way of thinking, for one old farmer asked us if we could not persuade our fellow countrymen to eat better with their cake.

"If you ask how the Danish farmers manage to keep pace with our [the British] increasing appetite for Danish eggs, butter and bacon, the answer is, they co-operate. The butter which is exported is made in their co-operative dairies. The pigs are slain in their co-operative slaughter houses, and the Danes are not a little proud of the process. One distinguished traveler complains that during his stay in Denmark he was always being asked to come and see a pig killed.

"The eggs are exported by co-operative societies. If a Dane has only one egg he can export it—always provided it be a good egg. No mistake must be made about that. Before the eggs are packed for export, down in the co-operative factory on the shore, they are held over a basin filled with electric light, when all defects can be detected with the naked eye. It is no use for an old egg to pose as a young one then. Each egg is marked with the owner's number and the number of his district; the owners of bad eggs are fined. No less than 18,000 Danes belong to this one society. Here, too, butter is packed for the English market."

Baths for Cold Feet.

Those who suffer from habitual cold feet should take an alternate hot and cold foot bath morning and evening. Soak the feet in hot water at a temperature of about 108 degrees or 110 degrees for two or three minutes, then dip them in cold water for half a minute, then back into the hot water for another two or three minutes, and continue alternating five or six times, finally drying the feet from the cold water.

This will stimulate the circulation and produce a glow of warmth in the feet that will be maintained for hours afterward.

A Minister's Indigestion

Rev. Fletcher of Tennessee Suggests a Remedy Based on Personal Experience—You Can Get It Free.

There is nothing that is so much sought after as a remedy for stomach trouble, and hence you will be interested to know how the Rev. A. J. Fletcher, of Rutherford, Tenn., whose picture we present herewith, cured his indigestion. To use his own words, he says, in part:

Rev. A. J. Fletcher

"I received the sample bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin that I asked you to send me, and I made no mistake in ordering it. I have been troubled with dyspepsia and indigestion more or less for about sixty years, and have taken many remedies, but Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has done me more good than anything else. I am 79."

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has been sold in drug stores for twenty years. The price is only 50 cents or $1 a bottle. It is especially adapted to the uses of babies, children, women and old folks. Its purity is vouched to the Government, and results from its use are guaranteed. If you have never tried it send name and address for a free trial bottle, which will be cheerfully sent to your home prepaid. If there is any medical advice that you want, or anything about your condition that you don't understand, write the doctor. Address your letter, Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 202 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill.

Barnyard Repartee.

"Seems to me," grumbled the old rooster, "you're laying smaller eggs than your regular average."

"Well, then," clucked the old hen, "I don't need any assistance in cackling over 'em. Kindly chase yourself around the yard."

HAVE YOU TRIED THIS?

Simple Prescription Said to Work Wonders for Rheumatism.

This has been well known to the best doctors for years and is now given to the public. "Get one ounce of syrup of Sarsaparilla compound and one ounce Toris compound. Then get half a pint of good whiskey and put the other two ingredients into it. Take a tablespoonful of this mixture before each meal and at bed time. Shake the bottle before using." Good effects are felt the first day. Many of the worst cases here have been cured by this. Any druggist has these ingredients on hand or will quickly get them from his wholesale house.

His Little Scheme.

"Great Caesar, old man!" exclaimed the gunner as he opened the door and found his friend's house brilliantly illuminated at noonday. "What does this mean? Why are all these blankets over the windows, and why is the gas burning in the daytime?"

"Sh!" whispered Guyer, cautiously. "It's a scheme of mine."

"What kind of a scheme?"

"Why, my wife is on a visit to her mother, and I tell her I remain home every night and read. I've got to get rid of some gas somehow so it will go on the bill at the end of the month."—Atlanta Constitution.

For Lame Back

An aching back is instantly relieved by an application of Sloan's Liniment.

This liniment takes the place of massage and is better than sticky plasters. It penetrates—without rubbing—through the skin and muscular tissue right to the bone, quickens the blood, relieves congestion, and gives permanent as well as temporary relief.

Here's the Proof.

Mr. JAMES C. LEE, of 1100 9th St., S.E., Washington, D.C., writes: "Thirty years ago I fell from a scaffold and seriously injured my back. I suffered terribly at times; from the small of my back all around my stomach was just as if I had been beaten with a club. I used every plaster I could get with no relief. Sloan's Liniment took the pain right out, and I can now do as much ladder work as any man in the shop, thanks to

Sloan's Liniment

Mr. J. P. EVANS, of Mt. Airy, Ga., says: "After being afflicted for three years with rheumatism, I used Sloan's Liniment, and was cured sound and well, and am glad to say I haven't been troubled with rheumatism since. My leg was badly swollen from my hip to my knee. One-half a bottle took the pain and swelling out."

Sloan's Liniment has no equal as a remedy for Rheumatism, Neuralgia or any pain or stiffness in the muscles or joints.

Prices, 25c., 50c. and $1.00

WESTERN CANADA

Senator Dolliver, of Iowa, says:

"The stream of emigrants from the United States to Canada will continue."

Senator Dolliver recently paid a visit to Western Canada, and says: "There is a land hunger in the hearts of English speaking people; this will account for the removal of so many Iowa farmers to Canada. Our people are pleased with its Government and the excellent administration of law, and they are coming to you in tens of thousands, and they are still coming."

Iowa contributed largely to the 70,000 American farmers who made Canada their home during 1909. Field crop returns alone during year added to the wealth of the country upwards of Grain growing, mixed farming, cattle raising and dairying are all profitable. Free Homesteads of 160 acres are to be had in the very best districts. 160 acre pre-emptions at $3.00 per acre within certain areas. "Venomous reptiles? You bet. I don't know what reptiles is, but them snakes you can just bet your life is venomous. Why, one day I was comin' down here drivin' a wagon when I catches sight of a snake in the brush all ready for a spring. My horses starts, an' I whips 'em up fast to clear the snake, don't you see, afore he could spring. He makes one clear spring, the snake does, an' he misses the horses."

"That was lucky. But you—you—"

"Lucky? You bet your life it was lucky. He missed the horses, the snake did, but he stuck his fangs clean through the wagon."

"You don't say!"

"I do say, and maybe you don't believe it, but it's a fact. He stuck his fangs clean through that wagon, an' that wagon is swelled up so bad that we had to leave it by the wayside and take the horses home."

Sand is the curse of Portuguese East Africa. It blocks the rivers and harbors and stretches in a vast sea toward the interior, effectually cutting off the coast towns from the highlands. Besides, it makes the problem of transportation the bugbear of the planter.

A LITTLE THING

Changes the Home Feeling.

Coffee blots out the sunshine from many a home by making the mother, or some other member of the household, dyspeptic, nervous and irritable. There are thousands of cases where the proof is absolutely undeniable. Here is one.

A Wis. mother writes:

"I was taught to drink coffee at an early age, and also at an early age became a victim to headaches, and as I grew to womanhood these headaches became a part of me, as I was scarcely ever free from them.

"About five years ago a friend urged me to try Postum. I made the trial and the result was so satisfactory that we have used it ever since.

"My husband and little daughter were subject to bilious attacks, but they have both been entirely free from them since we began using Postum instead of coffee. I no longer have headaches and my health is perfect."

If some of these nervous, tired, irritable women would only leave off coffee absolutely and try Postum they would find a wonderful change in their life. It would then be filled with sunshine and happiness rather than weariness and discontent. And think what an effect it would have on the family, for the mood of the mother is largely responsible for the temper of the children.

The Week in Congress

The administration railroad bill was under discussion during the entire session of the Senate Wednesday. In the House parliamentary questions consumed considerable time. Again Speaker Cannon failed to have the House sustain him in a parliamentary ruling, forty-two Republicans voting with the Democrats in opposition. After the questions relating to the rules were disposed of the House considered the bills upon its calendar.

In the Senate Thursday Mr. Cummins delivered the third section of his address on the administration railroad bill and was interrupted by adjournment. A mighty battle was precipitated in the House early in the day by a resolution offered by the insurgents to select a new committee on rules and exclude Speaker Cannon from membership. Several times the speaker was defeated and he was finally forced to adopt a filibuster to delay action. Up to a late hour the result was undecided.

In the Senate Friday Senator Cummins concluded his speech on the administration railway bill, after which routine business was transacted. The House spent the entire day in deadlock on the Norris resolution changing the Committee on Rules, which ended just before 5 o'clock with an agreement to take the matter up the next day.

By a vote of 191 to 155, the Republican insurgents voting solidly with the Democrats, the House Saturday adopted the resolution of Representative Norris, Republican, of Nebraska, requiring a reorganization of the rules committee, increasing its membership from five to ten, and declaring the Speaker ineligible to membership thereon. By the curiously identical vote of 191 to 155—but with a decidedly different personnel of alignment—the House defeated a resolution of Representative Burleson of Texas, declaring the Speakership vacant and ordering an immediate election of a successor to Mr. Cannon.

As a calm follows a storm, the House of Representatives met in solemn session Sunday to pay tribute to one of its late members, Robert C. Davy of Louisiana. Only one member, Representative Townsend of Michigan, made reference to the exciting incidents of the last few days on the floor, when he said, in introducing his remarks: "I am much impressed with the difference of the scenes now and those of a few hours ago." Representative Broussard of Louisiana occupied the chair during the session, except for time enough to deliver his eulogy of his late colleague. The other speakers were Messrs. Wagner of Pennsylvania, Adamson of Georgia, Gilmore, Ranadell, Pujo and Estopinal of the Louisiana delegation. Other members who did not speak were granted permission to print their eulogies in the Record.

In the Senate Monday, Mr. Elkins supported the administration railroad bill in an extended speech. A number of minor bills were passed, including one appropriating $3,600,000 to purchase twelve blocks for an enlargement of the grounds surrounding the capitol. A very quiet and uneventful session was held by the House. By unanimous consent numerous bills of minor importance were passed and the pension appropriation bill, carrying nearly $156,000,000, was taken up. The House agreed to limit general debate upon the measure to eight hours. Representative Gillette, of Massachusetts, talked on the necessity of economy in government expenditures. Representative Goulden, of New York, opposed ship subsidy legislation and Representative Langley, of Kentucky, advocated more liberal pensions.

The Senate Tuesday began consideration of a bill providing for a codification of laws relating to the judiciary. Senator Clapp, speaking upon the administration's railroad bill, expressed confidence that it would be materially amended before its final passage. The general debate on the pension appropriation bill continued throughout the day in the House.

Hampered by Conventionalities.

Washington was crossing the Delaware River at Trenton.

"Of course," he said, "I don't mind standing up in this frail boat and gazing sternly in the direction of the unsuspecting foe, since the artists insist on depicting me in this absurd attitude, but the blithering chumps ought to know better than to paint these blocks of floating ice projecting a foot above the water. Any man with an ounce of gumption knows that the ice in this river isn't eight feet thick!"

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Parks in New York.

The State of New York is very well supplied with parks. In his recent message Governor Hughes said: "The State's total holdings in the Adirondack and Catskill mountains now amount to 1,641,523 acres, of which 52,549 acres were required during the past year. The area of the proposed Adirondack Park is 3,313,564 acres, and that of the proposed Catskill Park 576,120 acres, making a total of 3,889,684 acres.

When it is completed the Adirondack Park will be larger than the Yellowstone, which has 2,142,170 acres.

Beautiful Wall Coatings for Homes.

In line with the progress of all other things in these modern days is the beautiful, perfect and sanitary wall coatings for our homes. Alabastine is the name of a rich, soft and velvety preparation for the decoration of walls and ceilings. It adheres to the walls of its own adhesive qualities. It is inexpensive, clean, artistic and so easily put on that any one can follow the printed directions on every package. Any shade or tint is easily produced. Alabastine is proof against insects or disease germs so prevalent in wall paper. It does not rub off and flake like kalsomine. A complete color plan for the walls of the home and stencils to help make the home beautiful, together with a book about home decorations and samples of color effects will all be sent free by the Alabastine Company, 482 Grandville avenue, Grand Rapids, Mich. The liberal offers of this company to home decorators in our advertising columns elsewhere in this paper deserve careful perusal.

Retribution.

"Stand up, prisoner," orders the stern judge.

The trembling culprit, who has been found guilty by a jury of his delighted peers, stands.

"Prisoner at the bar," solemnly declares the judge, "you have been convicted of building house after house containing one of these confounded little boxes called 'reception rooms,' in which there is neither room to receive nor hooks to make it a wardrobe. The sentence of the court is that for the next ten years you shall be confined in one of these alleged reception rooms of your own construction and design."

Antiquity of the Water Pump.

The water pump of to-day is but an improvement on a Grecian invention which first came into use during the reign of Ptolemies Philadelphus and Energetes, 283 to 221 B. C. The name, which is very similar in all languages is derived from the Greek word pempo, to send or throw. The most ancient description we have of a water pump is by Hero of Alexandria. There is no authentic account of the general use of the pump in Germany previous to the beginning of the sixteenth century. At about that time the endless chain and bucket works for raising water from mines began to be replaced by pumps. In the seventeenth century rotating pumps, like the Pappenham engine, with two pistons, and the Prince Rupert, with one, were first used. Pumps with plunger pistons were invented by Morland, an Englishman, in 1674, and the double acting pump by De la Hire, the French academician.

A Clever Stroke.

Turning defeat into victory is the achievement of genius. This example, gleaned from the London Daily Mail, illustrates the adroitness with which it is sometimes done.

An eminent lawyer was once cross-examining a very clever woman, mother of the plaintiff in a breach-of-promise action, and was completely worsted in the encounter of wits. At the close, however, he turned to the jury and exclaimed:

"You saw, gentlemen, that even I was but a child in her hands! What must my client have been?"

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Need Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Brookfield, Mo.—"Two years ago I was unable to do any kind of work and only weighed 118 pounds. My trouble dates back to the time that women may expect nature to bring on them the Change of Life. I got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it made me feel much better, and I have continued its use. I am very grateful to you for the good health I am now enjoying."—Mrs. SARAH LOUSIGNONT, 414 S. Livingston Street, Brookfield, Mo.

The Change of Life is the most critical period of a woman's existence, and neglect of health at this time invites disease and pain.

Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to medicine that will so successfully carry women through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs.

For 30 years it has been curing women from the worst forms of female ills—inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, and nervous prostration.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

STOMACH LIVER LUNGS

Each of the chief organs of the body is a link in the Chain of Life. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, the body no stronger than its weakest organ. If there is weakness of stomach, liver or lungs, there is a weak link in the chain of life which may snap at any time. Often this so-called "weakness" is caused by lack of nutrition, the result of weakness or disease of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. Diseases and weaknesses of the stomach and its allied organs are cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. When the weak or diseased stomach is cured, diseases of other organs which seem remote from the stomach but which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, are cured also.

The strong man has a strong stomach. Take the above recommended "Discovery" and you may have a strong stomach and a strong body.

FAIRVIEW

Fairview is not a town or village; it is a cross roads, a country church two miles north and one mile west of St. Joe. Its news will not be startling and sensational, and will embrace the happenings of an indefinite territory known as "Fairview Neighborhood".

One day last week W. D. Johnston fractured a rib by falling on the edge of a board while attempting to corall a frisky calf.

Miss Oma Coyle has been quite sick with the measles the past week and the family ordered to remain at home. A report of scarlet fever is false.

The trustees of Fairview church have purchased the steel ceiling for the church and let the contract to Mr. Ab Copp of St. Joe for putting it on. It will be noticed that the church was nicely painted last fall, and this, the ceiling, stoves, lighting plant, cement steps, and other contemplated improvements will cost about $350. Most of this has already been provided for, and when the soliciting committee calls upon you for aid, meet them with a liberal response. Everyone owes a duty to the community in which he lives, and that duty is to support any and all institutions for its mental and moral uplift.

The school and the church are the greatest factors.

A curious case once come to my notice of how the matter of church facilities are looked upon by those who make no claims to be influenced by church matters: A prospective farm buyer had looked over a farm and had expressed in picturesque and emphatic profanity, his good opinion of soil, buildings, etc, and inquired of the agent how far it was to church. "Only five miles", replied the agent. "Gramk up!" replied the prospective land buyer. "My wife attends to my religious duties, and its up to me to make it as easy as possible. I wouldn't think of taking her to a downed heathen community where its five miles for her and the children to go to church and Sunday School".

Now this story is not a fable, but it has a moral: and that is, no community for the matter of dollars and cents can afford to let their home church go down; and by this same sign you owe your attendance and support to it, and membership as well.

Many changes in the ownership of real estate has taken place in this community. A Mr. and Mrs. Kosh have bought part of the Wm. Knight farm and are located upon it. Mr. D. F. Butterman is now upon the Clinton Smith place, by purchase. John Hall of Concord, has bought the old James May place from Frank May and will move in a few days. He will erect a commodious dwelling this summer. J. C. Baker has bought a farm in the southwest part of Jackson township, and has commenced to move. Earn Johnson has moved from St. Joe to his farm. Roy Gibford moved onto the John Johnson farm formerly occupird by Henry Houser, and Mr. Houser moved onto the Paul Maxwell farm in Wilmington township. Doubtless some of these changes have been reported, but they look rather formidable bunched together.

Mrs. F. C. Melton, who has been sick all winter with asthma, is much improved owing to the spring weather

Mrs. Mary Wyatt is very sick at this writing and is not improving.

Mrs. J. W. Sherer has been quite ill for a few days, but is improving.

Card of Thanks

I wish to thank those who have been coming to my barber shop for the past four years and also the new ones that have started in since I moved back to town. I can truly say that my business has doubled since October 1 for all the cut in barber prices my business has increased each week. My aim is to do your work to please you, but if I fail come to me and I will make it right with you. For a short time with every hair cut I am going to give you a 25 cent treat and with every shave I will give you a 10 cent treat. Come in and if you are not satisfied I will refund your money. I have bought here and expect to make an up-to-date shop.

LOCAL NEWS

LOCAL HISTORY MADE DURING THE PAST WEEK, IN BRIEF PARAGRAPHS

Harry Cox spent Easter with his parents at Ashley.

Frank Ulm of Mansfield, Ohio, was home over Sunday.

A large bundle of papers at this office for 5 cents.

If it is the wall paper question that bothers you, ask Woodcox, he knows.

O. L. Widney and family of Hicksville, were Sunday guests of B. E. Widney and wife.

Mrs. Emma Luttman of Corunna, spent part of last week, with Mrs. John May and family.

Frank Barney and wife were entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. F. Benninghoff, Sunday.

Mrs Minnie Circle of Mansfield, O., arrived Friday evening for a visit with her mother, Mrs. Hannah Ulm.

Mrs. Chas. Rhoads from south of Spencerville, spent Saturday and Sunday with her sister, Mrs. C. B. Leighty, at this place.

The W. H. and F. M. Society will meet with Mrs. Sarah Thomas, Saturday afternoon, April 2. Afternoon lesson "The Gospel in Mexico". Come to the meeting.

Mrs. S. W. Tuttison and daughter, Margaret, visited relatives at Lima, Ohio, last week and also spent Easter with her brother, Ralph Patterson at Springfield, Ohio. They will return home Friday.

Mrs. C. A. Patterson was called to the bedside of her father, D. D. Krebbs at Bangor, Mich, who is dangerously ill. He is well known by some of our readers who will regret to hear of his illness. She also visited Rev. Dressels at Elkhart for a few hours.

Another name appears in the column of political announcements and that of A. W. Madden of Auburn, who is seeking the nomination of Auditor on the democratic ticket. Mr. Madden has been in business in the County for 28 years and has made a success of it, namely the tombstone business. Mr. Madden thinks that if the court house should be erected, that his years of experience in the line of stone, marble and granite, would mean something to the people, and that he could save the County money.

We are reliably informed by parties from Hicksville that the exaggerated reports that have gained circulation regarding the scarlet fever scare at that place are beyond all reason and largely unfounded. The facts are that while there have been two deaths both have been pronounced a complication with scarlet fever symptoms and the three other cases were promptly quarantined by the physicians in charge. The closing of the school for two weeks and the withdrawal of all public gatherings by the action of the board of health was a precautionary measure and has served its purpose and there seems to be no danger of a further spread of the complicated disease. In fact reports from other places indicate that this malady is a new disease of some kind and many towns and also the country districts have already not been immune from it, in the past few weeks.

About noon Wednesday the citizens of St Joe were compelled to rally themselves together in short notice to fight fire in the E. Case buildings at the rear of the lot, occupied by Clarence Malone and D. J. Baker used the lower floor of large building to store buggies. The fire originated in the upper rooms once occupied by a photographer, but by what means no one knows. The contents were gotten out as quickly as possible, although several pieces of J. H. Leighty's refrigerator was consumed. The smoke became so dense that it was impossible to remain in the building longer. The smaller building was consumed in a short time and the furniture was all removed. The buildings near by were given attention and the water used freely. Those assisting in moving the things and fighting the fire deserve great credit and had more of the onlookers did something more might have been saved. This perhaps will be another warning to the town for some kind of fire protection.

Chas. Bishop and wife are visitors here. Mr. Bishop being on the sick list.

J. B. Haifley made a trip to Auburn and Ft. Wayne last Thursday in interest of the mill.

H. M. Widney and wife are at Battle Creek, Mich., where the latter is taking treatment.

I have moved my shoe shop to the rear of the Simeon Wineland house. We invite you to call and bring us your work. D. F. Brown.

F. J. White has been appointed as census taker in Concord and north half of Newville townships, while F. R. Bowman will attend to Spencer and the south half of Newville township.

The St. Joe High School Alumni society will meet Monday night at the home of Bert Woodcox to make special arrangements for the annual banquet. All members are urged to be present.

Woodcox says that this is the most remarkable wall paper season he has ever experienced. He has already sold over five hundred rolls and as much more contracted. He works night and day to get caught up and yet he cannot see daylight. Present contracts cover a period of six weeks. He has a neat little stock of paper and the five cent matched pattern proves a great leader. If you are looking for good, bad or indifferent wall paper, it will pay you to see him.

E. M. McKennan, whose announcement appears elsewhere in this issue, has served one term in the house of representatives, and has made an enviable record as an honest and consientious servant of the people. McKennan is a man who allies himself with no factions, but stands for all the people, and at all times for all platform measures. He has been a lifelong democrat, and has fought valiantly for the principals of democracy ever since attaining his majority. He is an attorney and has some knowledge of what the law should be. He now conducts a real estate office in connection with his legal work in the city of Garrett. Laboring people generally appreciate his untiring efforts in assisting them in the enactment of laws that are of vital importance to all laboring people in the state, and they sincerely hope that he will be returned to the next general assembly.

Lutheran Church Announcements.

Prayer meeting on Thursday evening. Church services next Sunday morning at the regular time. Sunday School at 9 o'clock and C. E. at 6 o'clock. The pastor is much pleased with the loyalty of his church people, especially the attendance at the Holy Communion service, Sunday morning. Two members were received into the church and one infant baptized. The total collection for all purposes was nearly $50. Rev. Hitchner, Pastor.

As a result of the local option election in Steuben county on last Tuesday, the county went dry by 889 votes.

The fire of last Wednesday has not completely died out yet up until Tuesday of this week, smoke was rising from the debris. Stearl Wade lost his complete photograph outfit excepting two cameras. The origin of the fire is yet unknown and it had been over a week since the stove had been fired up. Some good work was done to save the Henry Karbill barn.

The Gospel Campaign now in progress at the Church of Christ is growing in interest each day and many souls are being saved as the result. The christians of the community are not only in attendance but are coworkers in the vineyard. Twenty-one have already obeyed their Savior in this the beginning of this great work, the truth is being presented in a way that strikes home and many hearts have been touched that heretofore gave little heed to the devine message. Watch your program and come early for the great song service so ably led by Prof. Haley.

Barney--Copp

The many friends of Miss Vera Copp formerly of the reportorial staff of the Press, will be surprised to learn that on last Friday night she became the bride of Roscoe Barney, a young man from St. Joe, Miss Copp's former home. The young people were married in Auburn and proceeded at once to Mountain View, Okla, where they will make their future home. Miss Copp has been a most efficient assistant at the Press office, severing her connections with the establishment but a few weeks ago and the entire force joins a wide circle of friends in wishing the deserving young lady and the man of her choice unbounded happiness and prosperity in their new home. Garrett Twelfth District Press. Mr. and Mrs. Barney are St. Joe young people and are graduates of the St. Joe High School. Their many friends join THE NEWS in extending hearty congratulations.

Wedding Party Mangled at Crossing.

Charles A. Bryer, of Center Harbor, N. H., and Ernest M. Harlow, a cab driver, were killed and Mr. Bryer's wife, Katherine, was probably fatally injured when a cab in which they were on their way to a wedding was struck by a train at a crossing of the Boston & Maine railroad at Waverly, Mass. The wedding, that of Mrs. Bryer's sister, was postponed. Mrs. Bryer is 21 years old and was married only a year ago. Her husband's age was 28 years.

Mrs. Longsworth Gets Rich Legacy.

Mrs. Nicholas Longworth is named as a beneficiary in the will of her late grandfather, George C. Lee, a wealthy banker of Boston, Mass., who died recently. The will directs that the income of one-half the estate be divided among half a dozen relatives, of whom former President Roosevelt's elder daughter is one. The estate is valued at several million dollars.

Two Children Burned to Death.

Two children of Mrs. George Rowe, one aged 9 years and the other 4 years, were burned to death and their mother and her three other children were injured in a fire which destroyed their home in Washington, near Pittsburg, Pa. A gas jet was left burning, and ignited woodwork in the lower part of the house. The four injured persons with difficuty were rescued alve.

In Honor of Mrs. Cleveland.

A dispatch from New York City says announcement of a $40,000 gift by Andrew Carnegie to build a library to be called the Frances Folsom Cleveland library in honor of President Cleveland's widow, was made at the twenty-seventh annual reunion of the Eastern Association of Wells College Alumni. Mrs. Cleveland is a member of the association.

Girl Who Fasted 45 Days Arrested.

Cora Osek, 22 years old, was arrested after she had fasted, her friends say, forty-five days. The girl was taken to the county jail in Cleveland, Ohio, where no persuasion could prevail on her to eat. She was so weak that she could not stand upright, but she insisted that she would fulfill an oath of fasting for two months, even if it killed her.

Proud Father of Thirty-four Children.

The birth of a healthy baby boy in Dedham, Mass., has made Joseph Sears the father of thirty-four children. He has been twice married in the past forty years, his first wife giving birth to eighteen children and the present Mrs. Sears to sixteen. But twelve of the large family are living. Mr. Sears is 57 years of age.

Give Up Hunt for Green.

The night and day search through half a dozen counties for Robert Green, former banker of Waynestown, Ind., who was charged with horse stealing but escaped from jail at Elyria, Ohio, a week ago, was called off. Deputy Sheriff Peck, who led the man hunt, says there is no reason to believe that Green is yet in Ohio.

The Markers Arrive at Prison.

W. H. Marker and Noah Marker, brothers, were received at the Federal penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kas., from Indianapolis, Ind., under sentence of embezzlement from the First National Bank of Tipton. Their arrival increases the number of bankers in the prison there to thirty-eight.

Miners' Widows Get $1,620.

By a compromise six widows of the victims of the Cherry mine disaster, in which nearly three hundred lives were lost, will receive $1,620 each, judgment being awarded to them in their suit against the St. Paul Coal Company. The women asked for $5,000 apiece.

The Pennsy Raises Wages.

An increase of 6 per cent. in the wages of every employe on the Pennsylvania railroad system, whose salary does not exceed $300 a month, will become effective on April 1st. This announcement was made at Harrisburg, Pa., by the division superintendents. Over 100,000 men are affected.

Protests By G. A. R. Posts.

Protests by forty G. A. R. posts against the acceptance by Congress of the statue of Robert E. Lee for a place in statuary hall were presented to the Senate by Senator Lodge.

Prairie Fire Causes $100,000 Damage.

Prairie fires have destroyed property valued at $100,000 in the Glenn pool oil field near Tulsa, Okla. Twenty-five oil rigs and twenty tanks were consumed.

RAIN OF AETNA LAVA BURIES SICILY HOMES

Four New Craters Disgorge Fiery Streams, but Crisis Is Believed Past.

PEASANTS FLEE FROM HOMES

Vineyards and Fields for Miles Around Devastated by Eruption and Accompanying Quake.

An official report upon volcanic disturbances in the Mount Etna district confirms reports that the situation is grave, but holds out the hope that the worst is over. The craters that properly may be described as new appear to be only four in number. These have opened at the foot of Mount Castellazzo, four miles in the air line from the summit of Mount Etna. The four streams emitted from these craters have united at the foot of Mount Castellazzo and formed a great river of lava that is bringing death and desolation into the invaded districts. Plants, trees, whole vineyards and orchards have been destroyed by the consuming flood. The lava river has extended nearly fifteen miles from its source.

In the path of the advancing flood the people are in great terror and thousands abandoned their homes. The roaring of Mount Etna continues without interruption and a rain of cinders fell for miles around. Several houses of peasants already have been destroyed and it is feared that if the flow does not cease soon the flood will enter Borrelo. Caravans of peasants carrying all their household goods and all of their transportable possessions are moving to places of safety. In their distress they present a pathetic sight. At many homes the molten mass has entered the cisterns and caused destructive explosions.

SENATOR ALLDS FOUND GUILTY

Verdict on Bribery Is 40 to 9—Move to Probe Grafting.

After seven weary weeks of investigation the New York Senate has convicted Senator Jotham P. Allds, of Norwich, of accepting a bribe of $1,000 to influence bridge legislation. The vote against him was overwhelming—40 to 9. By the unexpected move of sending in his resignation Allds relieved the Senate of the painful duty of expelling him. The resignation was sent on the advice of his attorneys, who were convinced that he had lost and who desired to put the blame on political interference with the Senatorial jury from Washington and elsewhere.

There is every indication that Senator Benn Conger, who accused Allds in an effort to defeat him as majority leader, will be expelled within a month unless he resigns in the meantime. A resolution for a committee to prepare charges of bribe-giving against him was offered. Nor will this end the matter. The proposition for a general investigation of all sorts of bribery charges will undoubtedly be presented and can hardly fail of passage.

Ex-Senator Allds declared that he would seek vindication from the Senate verdict and $100,000 damages from Senator Conger in the civil courts.

DRAG HOUSES TO HILLS.

Residents Take Flight When the Missouri River Leaves Bed.

The Missouri river has taken a notion to overwhelm the little town of Barney, Neb., and practically the entire town is on the move, the property owners getting their houses back to the hills as fast as possible.

A month ago Barney was two miles from the river. To-day the stream is right in the town. When the high waters came with the breaking up of the ice in February the current of the Missouri was thrown against the farms between Barney and the river. Those farms have been cut away entirely, and the other day the citizens began moving their houses.

An eighty-foot steel bridge over a tributary of the river was taken down piecemeal and hauled to the hills. Now the river is flowing where yesterday was the bridge. The schoolhouse was moved, as was the big grain elevator and a number of houses. Two miles of Burlington railroad track was washed away. A new town will be built on the hill beyond the reach of the Missouri.

"DRY" PETITIONS THROWN OUT.

Chicago Will Not Vote Upon Local Option Question This Spring.

Chicago will not vote upon the question of discontinuing the licensed saloon and substituting prohibition at the aldermanic election this spring. The Board of Election Commissioners threw out the monster petition of the Anti-Saloon League calling for the submission of the question to the electorate. The commission held the "drys" to be short 19,288 of the 63,511 names necessary to give the petition a legal status, declaring that out of the 74,026 names appearing on the petition 26,128 were not those of registered legal voters and 3,630 were "doubtful." The commissioners did not go into the question of some 2,300 obviously fictitious names, 1,300 duplications and 6,700 forgeries charged by the "wets" who filed objection to the petition.

MOUNT VESUVIUS IN ERUPTION.

JUSTICE BREWER DROPS DEAD.

Heart Disease Brings Sudden End to Long and Useful Career.

David Josiah Brewer, associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, dropped dead in the bathroom of his home, 1923 16th street, Washington, a few minutes after 11 o'clock the other night. Heart disease is believed to have been the cause of death.

Justice Brewer apparently had been in the best of health. He was seventy-three years old and had been a member of the Supreme Court since December, 1889. He was born in Smyrna, Asia Minor, where his parents were residing as missionaries. He was a graduate of Yale College. He was appointed to the Supreme bench from Kansas.

It is within the range of possibilities that the death of Justice Brewer will have far-reaching effects on important cases now pending before the Supreme Court. Justice Brewer was one of the progressive members of the court and inclined to a liberal construction of the laws. He sat in both the tobacco and Standard Oil cases, both of which are on the eve of being decided. It has been the general expectation that the vote of the court in both the tobacco and Standard Oil cases would be close. With Justice Brewer now dead there is a lively possibility that conditions may be reversed one way or the other over the decisions as they would have been rendered had Justice Brewer lived.

KENTUCKY-INDIANA LINE OPEN.

Ride from Louisville to South Bend, 296 Miles, Is at High Speed.

The first through electric car from Louisville, Ky., to South Bend, arrived there the other evening, marking an important epoch in the history of electric railroads in this part of the country. The distance between the two cities is 296 miles. Chicago and South Bend already are connected by trolley. The route was from Louisville to Indianapolis, Peru, Winona, Warsaw and Goshen. An average speed of thirty miles an hour was made and in some places the schedule was as high as sixty miles an hour.

POLITICS and POLITICIANS

Another radical move on the part of the suffrage advocates which is receiving much attention in the eastern part of the country is an organization of college women at Wellesley, Smith, Vassar, Bryn Mawr, Radcliffe and other colleges for women, the members of which promise not to get married until she shall have won over to the cause at least 500 men.

"I have nothing to conceal in connection with my activities in behalf of legislation providing for the payment of subsidies for the upbuilding of the American merchant marine," said James T. McCleary of Minnesota, in commenting upon the report that the committee on the judiciary might subpoena him as a witness in an effort to uphold the charge that unusual methods were followed in an effort to press this legislation through Congress.

Some of the aggressive women of Chicago have now formed an organization the slogan of which is "No vote, no tax," and when certain women property owners appeared in line at the city collector's office the other day members of this new league picketed the line and prevailed upon the women to go home and leave their taxes unpaid. The pickets distributed cards containing the following sentiment: "If you can't be persons and citizens at voting time, don't be persons and citizens at taxpaying time."

GUN BURSTS ON U. S. CRUISER.

Eight Men Reported Victims of Accident on Charleston.

An unofficial report has been received at Manila that a great gun aboard the United States protected cruiser Charleston exploded while the crew was engaged at target practice near Olongapo. It is said that eight men were killed or wounded in the accident. The cruiser now is on its way to Manila, supposedly for the purpose of bringing the victims of the disaster to the marine hospital in Manila. No details of the accident have been reported to the officials, so far as can be learned, and it is expected that none will be given out until the vessel comes to port. The Charleston is the flagship of Rear Admiral John Hubbard, commander in chief of the Asiatic fleet. The commanding officer of the vessel is Commander John H. Gibbons.

$1,000,000 FOR RIVER TRAFFIC.

Kansas City Raises Fund for Boats to St. Louis on Missouri.

Kansas City's million-dollar fund, raised by public subscription to maintain a line of freight boats on the Missouri River between there and St. Louis, became a reality the other afternoon. The use of this stream as a highway for transporting its freight lower than that charged by the railways has been agitated by Kansas City merchants for two years. When the full amount was secured, with nearly a week to go, a big demonstration was held at the boat line headquarters. A message was telegraphed to United States Senator Burton of the National Rivers and Harbors Committee reminding him of his promise to Kansas City made in December, 1906, of a government appropriation for the Missouri River if Kansas City would use the river.

SLAIN AFTER KILLING TWO.

Drink-Crazed Passenger Is Trapped by Wilmington, Del., Police.

Barricaded in the toilet room of a Pullman parlor car, in which he had taken refuge after killing a porter and a conductor, J. H. Bethea, a drink-crazed murderer from South Carolina, held the entire police force of Wilmington, Del., at bay for an hour and twenty minutes. He also tied up traffic on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad for more than an hour. He fired more than 100 shots from an automatic revolver at the besieging force, and wounded two men. Finally the fire department was called and drove him from his retreat with a three-inch stream of water through the window. Half drowned, he staggered on to the railroad station platform and was shot to death as he fired repeatedly toward the police.

TOTAL COTTON SUPPLY SHOWN.

The census report shows the total supply of cotton for the six months ending Feb. 28 to have been 11,552,361 running bales. The distribution is 2,526,983 bales consumed, 4,599,632 exported, 1,674,331 held in mills, 1,983,521 held in independent warehouses, and other stocks 818,844. The number of bales held on Sept. 1, 1909, was 1,483,586; ginned during the six months' period, 9,974,998; net imports, 93,778.

Lover Dynamites Girl's Home.

After dynamiting the home at Northport, Wash., of a girl named Jellison, with whom he was infatuated, and killing the town marshal, who sought to arrest him, Martin Kloose ended his own life with a bullet when brought to bay by a crowd of townspeople, he abandoning hope of escaping.

GIRL IS BURNED ALIVE.

Ruth Wheeler Not Dead When Put in Fireplace, Says Physician.

That Ruth Amos Wheeler, the 16-year-old stenographer who went seeking employment the other day, and whose charred body was found on a fire escape at 224 East 75th street, New York, was burned to death by the slayer, was the statement made by Dr. O'Hanlon, coroner's physician. This assertion came after an autopsy had been made. Dr. O'Hanlon found the lungs congested and a deep mark on the right side of the neck, evidently made by a rope when the murderer sought to strangle his victim. Dr. O'Hanlon said: "Over the right nostril and on part of the face I found the remnant of a square of linen. I believe the girl was smothered, and while still alive but unconscious was put into the fireplace and the body incinerated."

Katchen Muller, or Kate Miller, as she was better known, who was regarded as the wife of Walter Wolters, who is now in the Tombs charged with the murder of the Wheeler girl, was taken into custody. She denied all knowledge of the murder, and the police declared they were inclined to believe her story. Captain Carey spent most of the night with Wolters in his cell, but could not get him to admit any knowledge of the crime.

FIX UP TARIFF TROUBLES.

Taft and Canada's Representatives to Announce Terms at Once.

There is to be no tariff war with Canada. Peace terms have been agreed upon, and the promulgation thereof will be made simultaneously from Ottawa and Washington, the day before the maximum tariff of the United States would go into effect automatically against Canada in the event of no proclamation to the contrary by President Taft.

Details regarding the successful termination of the negotiations between the United States and Canadian officials are being carefully guarded, but it is known that Canada grants its intermediate rates on a small list of articles that do not seriously come into competition with Canadian manufacture. Full details are known as yet only to President Taft and Secretary Knox on this side of the line and to Minister of Finance W. S. Fielding and Minister of Railways George P. Graham and Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Dominion premier, on the other.

Dr. Edward Meyer, professor of ancient history at the University of Berlin and one of the greatest living historians, is giving a series of lectures before the students of the University of Wisconsin.

A lively discussion is in progress in Japan in regard to the advisability of adopting the jury system. Even among the members of the legal profession opinion is divided, but if anything the balance appears to be against the innovation.

A German south polar expedition virtually has been arranged by Lieutenant Filchner, of the general staff of the army, under the auspices of the geographical society. Lieutenant Filchner announced that the expedition would start in October of this year, if the necessary funds were forthcoming.

The Week in Congress

The legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, carrying about $34,000,000, was passed by the Senate Thursday. Very few amendments were adopted. Senator Owen spoke in advocacy of his bill for the creation of a new executive department to be devoted to the preservation of the public health. The pension bill carrying appropriations of about $156,000,000 was passed by the House. Nearly the entire session was occupied by a contest, made chiefly by Republicans against the provision of the measure as reported from the committee on pensions, for the abolition of the eighteen pension agencies now in operation throughout the country. By a vote of 76 to 94 the House refused to overrule the recommendations of the committee. The committee was sustained chiefly by Democratic votes.

The Senate again Friday refused to accede to Senator Elkins' request that a day be fixed for a vote on the administration's railroad bill. A suggestion was made that a month or more might be required for the debate on that measure. Senator Bailey announced he had received assurances that before adjournment there would be a vote on the statehood bill. The new committee on rules of the House of Representatives, as provided for by the Norris resolution, was elected without debate. The members selected by the Republican and Democratic caucuses were named in a resolution brought in by Mr. Currier of New Hampshire. General debate upon the naval appropriation bill was begun. Mr. Bartholdt of Missouri spoke in favor of arbitration and urged the adoption of a naval program to include but one battleship annually, which would, he said, be sufficient to maintain the navy at its present strength.

The Senate was not in session Saturday. General debate on the naval appropriation bill in the House gave an opportunity to several members to deliver political speeches. Mr. Kahn of California devoted considerable attention to muckrakers, citing numerous instances in which men honored by their country had been assailed in newspapers and periodicals of the past. Speeches were made also by Mr. Spight (Miss.) and Mr. Hobson (Ala.).

The Senate Monday adopted a joint resolution authorizing the state of Oregon and Washington to establish a boundary line between those states. As no one was prepared to speak on the administration railroad measure, the Senate took an early adjournment. The passage of bills relating to the government of the District of Columbia occupied almost the entire session of the House. Attorney General Wickersham's formal denial to the charge that he had ever been counsel for the "sugar trust," the denial being contained in a letter written by Mr. Wickershaw to Representative Bennet, of New York, was read in the House in reply to a speech made by Mr. Martin, of Colorado, several days ago.

In the Senate Tuesday Senator Chamberlain spoke in support of a bill providing for the withdrawal from entry of the public lands of the country. When the Senate adjourned early in the day out of respect to the memory of the late Justice Brewer, Mr. Bailey suggested that such an adjournment established an awkward precedent. The House gave full authority to committee to investigate all charges concerning the existence of a lobby to influence ship subsidy legislation. Mr. Fowler in an extended speech defended his plans for currency reform and spoke vigorously against the establishment of a central bank or of postal savings banks. Mr. Martin, of Colorado, suggested that the Attorney General in his denial that he had acted as counsel for the sugar trust had not informed the country of the amount of the fee paid to his partner, who acted in that capacity, and whether he had participated in that fee. The failure of the Attorney General to enforce more fully the Sherman anti-trust law was the subject of remarks by Mr. Martin, of South Dakota, while the improvement of the Mississippi River was discussed by Mr. Thistlewood, of Illinois.

ALL AROUND THE GLOBE.

Senator Tillman has it in mind to spend the summer resting in one of the quiet London suburbs, according to his family physician, in an announcement at Columbia, S. C.

Five hundred men in the Busby Chain mines at Wilburton, Okla., struck. They say the operators demanded that they purchase all their black powder and dynamite from the company stores.

An amendment granting equal suffrage at all municipal elections and the privilege for women of running for office is the demand by clubwomen of Los Angeles upon the committee in charge of the city charter revision.

Robert Mather, chairman of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, authorized a denial of the Pittsburg report that negotiations are under way for a combination of the Westinghouse and General Electric Companies.

An experimental potato farm has been established near Greeley, Colo. On ten acres 100 varieties of potatoes will be planted, including seed from every foreign country where they have been grown with success. The farm will be maintained by State appropriation of $10,000 a year.

CHAPTER XVI.

It was on the third day of December, a cheerless and comfortless day at the close of the most inclement autumn I ever remember, that the patriot Army of the South was paraded on the courthouse common in Charlotte to listen to the reading of General Gates' final order, the order announcing the arrival of Major General Greene from Washington's headquarters to take over the command of the field forces in the Carolinas.

As Margery had promised, I passed out of my garret prison and out of door on that memorable evening of October 14 to find the British gone from Charlotte and the town jubilant with patriotic joy.

Having nothing to detain me, and being bound in honor by the wish of my dear lady not to follow and give myself up to the retreating British general, I took horse and rode to Salisbury, where I had the great good fortune to find Dick, already breveted a captain in Colonel Washington's command, hurrying his troop southward to whip on the British withdrawal.

Here was my chanve ti drown heartburnings in an onsweeping tide of action, and then and there I became a gentleman volunteer in Dick's company, asking nothing of my dear lad save that I might ride at his stirrup and share his hazards.

Touching the hazards, there were plenty of them in the seven weeks preceding and the month or more following our new general's coming to take the field, as you may know in detail if you care to follow the gallopings of Colonel Washington's light-horse troop through the pages of the histories. But these have little or naught to do with my tale, and I pass them by with the word you will anticipate; that in all the dashes and forays and brushes with the enemy's foraging parties and outposts, no British or Tory bullet could find its billet in the man who was enamored of death.

On a morning I woke to find a letter pinned to the ground beside me with an Indian scalping-knife thrust through it. Dick was sitting by the newly-kindled fire, nursing his knees and most palpably waiting for me to wake and find my missive.

"What is it?" I asked, eying the ominous thing distrustfully.

"'Tis a letter, as you see. Uncanoola left it." Then, most surlily: "'Tis from Madge, and to you. There is your name on the back of it."

At this I must needs read the letter, with the lad looking on as if he would eat me. 'Twas dated at Winnsborough, and was brief and to the point.

"Monsieur:

"When last we met you said the Church might undo what the Church had done. I have spoken to the good Pere Matthieu, and he has consented to write to the Holy Father at Rome. But it is necessary that he should have your declaration. Since the matter is of your own seeking, mayhap you can devise a way to communicate with Pere Matthieu, who is at present with us under our borrowed roof here."

That was all, and it was signed only with her initial. I read it through twice and then again to gain time. For Dick was yaiting.

"'Tis a mere formal matter of business," said I, when I could put him off no longer.

"Business?" he queried, the red light of suspicion coming and going in his eye. "What business can you have with Mistress Madge Stair, pray?"

"'Tis about—it touches the title to Appleby Hundred," said I, equivocating as clumsily as a schoolboy in a fault. "Of course you know that the confiscation act of the North Carolina Congress re-established my right and title to the estate?"

"No," said he; "you never told me." Then: "She writes you about this?"

"About a matter touching it, as I say."

"As you did not say," he growled; after which a silence came and sat between us, I holding the open letter in my hand and he staring gloomily at the back of it.

When the silence grew portentious I told him of my design to go a-spying. He looked me in the eye and his smile was not pleasant to see.

"You are lying most clumsily, Jack; or at best you are telling me but half the truth. You are going to see Mistress Margery."

"That is altogether as it may happen," I retorted, striving hard to keep down the flame of insensate rivalry which his accusings always kindled in me.

"It is not. Winnsborough is neither London nor yet Philadelphia, that you may miss her in the crowd. And you do not mean to miss her."

"Well? And if I do chance to see her—what then?"

"Don't mad me, Jack. You should know by this what a fool she has made of me."

"'Tis your own folly," I rejoined hotly. "You should blame neither the lady nor the man to whom she has given nothing save——"

"Save what?" he broke in, savagely.

I recoiled on the brink as I had so many times before. The months of waiting for the death I craved had hardened me.

"Save a thing you would value lightly enough without her love. Let us have done with this bickering; find the colonel and ask his leave to go with me, if you like. Then you may do the love-making whilst I do the spying."

"No," said he; "not while you stand it upon such a leg as that."

I reached across and gripped his hand and wrung it. "Shall we never have the better of these senseless vaporings?" I cried. "'Tis as you say; I can neither live sane nor die mad without another sight of her, Dick, and that is the plain truth. And yet, mark me, this next seeing of her will surely set a thing in train that will make her yours and not mine. Get your leave and come with me on your own terms. Mayhap she will show you how little she cares for me, and how much she cares for you."

So this is how it came about that we two, garbed as decent planters and mounted upon the sleekest cobs the regiment afforded, took the road for Winnsborough together on a certain summer-fine morning in January in the year of battles, 1781.

'Tis fifty miles as a bird would fly it from the grazing uplands of the Broad known as the Cowpens to the lower plantation region lying between that stream and the farther Catawba or Wateree; and Richard Jennifer and I ambled the distance leisurely, as befitted our mission and disguise, cutting the journey evenly in half for the first night's lodging, which we had at the house of one Philbrick—as hot a Tory as we pretended to be.

From our host of the night we learned that within two days the British outposts on the Wateree and the Broad had been advanced; and there were rumors in the air that Lord Cornwallis, who was hourly expecting General Leslie with two thousand of Sir Henry Clinton's men from New York, would presently move on to the long-deferred conquest of North Carolina.

Viewing it from the rising ground of approach, Winnsborough appeared less as a town than as a portly fortified camp, as we neared it later. The few houses of the village were lost in the field of tents, huts and troop shelters, and measuring by the spread of these, it would seem that my Lord Cornwallis' army had been considerably augmneted since I had last seen it in Charlotte.

The village tavern, servilely bearing the king's arms thinly painted over the palmetto tree of South Carolina on its swinging sign-board, was a miserable doggery, full over overflowing with a riffraff of carousing soldiery. Separating by mutual consent in the public tap-room, Richard and I presently drifted together at a small table in a corner, with a black boy in attendance to set before us such poor entertainment as the hostelry afforded.

"Well, what luck?" asked Dick, mumbling it behind his hand, though he might safely have shouted it aloud in the din and clamor of the place.

I shook my head. "Nothing as yet, save that I overheard a tipsy corporal telling his tipsier sergeant that the officers would be holding a revel to-night at a Tory manor house situate somewhere beyond the camp confines to the northward; the house of one Master Marmaduke Harndon, if I heard the name aright." Then I added: "This rabble is too drunken to serve our purpose. 'Tis only the common soldiery, and we shall learn nothing here."

"There was at least one who was not a ranker," said Dick, and there was something akin to awe in his voice. Then he leaned across the table to whisper. "Jack, I've fair had a fright! You may grin as you please, but answer me this; do the dead come back to life?"

"Not this side of the resurrection reveille, if we may believe the dominies."

"Then I have seen a ghost—a most horrible mask of a man we both know to our cost. 'Tis the ghost of Frank Falconnet; or else it is what of the man himself the fire hath left. Moreover, if this be Francis Falconnet whom I have seen, your sweetest revenge on him will be to let him live—as he is."

This reappearance of Francis Falconnet was not to be passed over lightly. What would he do, or seek to do? If his thirst was for vengeance, how could he quench it in a deeper draught than my harrying the woman we both loved? 'Twas only by a mighty effort that I could drag myself back to Dick's urging and the needs of the hour.

"To have some chance of hearing gossip to our purpose, we must make shift to gain admittance to this officers' rout at the manor house," I said.

A half-hour later we were tethering our cobs at the already crowded hitching rail in front of a goodly mansion some mile or more beyond the camp limits on the northward road, a rambling manor house to the full as large as Appleby Hundred, with a shaven lawn in front, and within, lights and music and sounds of revelry.

CHAPTER XVII.

For a doorkeeper some one or another of the officer guests had set a sergeant on guard; but though the night was yet young the man passed us into the great entrance hall with a hiccough and a wing that spoke thus early of an open house and freely flowing good cheer.

As we had hoped to find it, this rout at Master Harndon's was a stifling jam, and a good half of the guests were in civilian plain clothes, neither Paris nor London having as yet reached so far into the Carolina plantations to proscribe homespun and to prescribe the gay toggeries of the courts.

Lacking an introducer, and wanting, moreover, nothing save the leave to have standing-room in the throng as lookers-on, we gave Mr. Marmaduke Harndon, a sleek, rotund little gentleman, smirking and bowing and tapping the lid of his silver snuff-box, a wide berth; and with an agreement to meet later for the comparing of notes, Jennifer and I went apart at the door of the ball-room, each to lose himself in the assembled company.

'Twas easily done. Winnsborough had by this time become a refuge camp for all the loyalists in the region roundabout, and there were many in the present company who were strangers one to another, uneasy, shifting figures in the gay throng, beneath the notice alike of haughty dames and prinking dandy officers.

'Twas with some notion of finding ampler room for my feet that I edged away through the fringing wall-crowd in the dancing-room toward a curtained archway at the back. As yet I had overheard naught save the silly persiflage of the belles and beaux, and I was beginning to fear that this was as poor a place to look for information as was the pothouse, when a thing befell to set me a-quiver with all the thrillings the human heart-strings can thrum to in one and the same instant of time.

I had shouldered my way out of the ball-room medley and into the less crowded room at the back. This proved to be a rear withdrawing-room serving for the nonce as a refectory. There were little groups and knots of chatterers standing about; fair maids, each with her ring of redcoated courtiers, laughing and jesting or picking daintily at the viands on the great oaken table in the midst.

Rounding the promontory of the table's-end to come to anchor in some quiet eddy where I could listen unnoticed for the word I was thirsting for, I must needs entangle the button of my coat-cuff in the delicate lace of a lady's sleeve in passing.

The wearer of the sleeve had her back to me, and I saw the white shoulders go up in a little shrug of petulance whilst I sought to disentangle the button. Then she turned to face me and the words of apology froze on my lips. 'Twas Mistress Margery standing at ease with Richard Jennifer and Colonel Banastre Tarleton for her company!

Here was a halter, with a double snaffle at the end of it, was the thought that flashed upon me; and I was gathering my wits to brazen it out in some such manner as to leave Jennifer unattainted, when my lady give a little start and a shriek.

"Le, Mr. Septimus; how you startled me!" she cried. Then, without a tremor of the lip or a pause for breathtaking, she presented me: "Colonel Tarleton; Mr. Septimus Ireton, of Irestondene in Virginia." And next to Dick: "Mr. Richard; my very good friend, Mr. Ireton."

'Twas done so cleverly and with such an air that even Dick, who had known her from childhood, was struck dumb with admiration, as his face sufficiently advertised. And, indeed, I had much ado to play my own part with any decent self-possession, though I did make shift to bow stiffly, and to say: "I see I should have brought the Iretondene title deeds with me to make you sure that I am not my rebel cousin John, Mistress Margery. Your servant, Colonel Tarleton; and yours, Mr. Richard."

Dick's boy was an elaborate hiding of his tell-tale face; but the colonel's was the slightest of nods, and I could feel the sloe-black eyes of him boring into my very soul.

Had my lady given him but a moment's time I make no doubt he would have come instantly at the truth and the little farce would have been turned into a tragedy on the spot. But she gave him no time. The spinet in the ball-room alcove was tinkling out the overture to a minuet, and she laid the tips of her dainty fingers on the colonel's arm.

"This will be ours to walk through, will it not, Colonel Tarleton?" she said, playing the sprightly minx to the very climax of perfection, Then she dipped us a curtsy.

Comparison Shunned.

"You didn't cry at all at the matinee."

"No," answered the reposeful girl; "I couldn't think of such a thing."

"But the young woman with you wept copiously."

All Through With Him.

The professional point of view is rarely one of the humanitarian. A passenger on a London omnibus, says a writer in Sketch, calls out to the conductor:

"'Ere, there! Whoa! There's an old chap fallen off the bus!"

"All right!" responds the conductor, cheerfully. "'E's paid his fare."

Reliable Breakfast Foods.

"What sort of breakfast food do you find the best?"

"Well," replied the well-nourished citizen, "I haven't run across anything yet that beats bacon and eggs, though sausage and buckwheats afford a pleasant change occasionally."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Convenient Fish Hole.

"I have fished here for the last twenty years."

"Ever caught anything?"

"No."

"Then why do you fish here?"

"Well, it's so near my house."—Fliegende Blaetter.

Defer not until to-morrow to be wise.—Congreve.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Mrs. Nancy L. Alexander, aged 94, died at Bloomington a few days ago. She had been a member of the Christian church for many years.

John L. Jackson, postmaster at St. Paul, has been made president of the National League of Postmasters of the Fourth Class, to succeed F. E. Barber, of Dalesville, resigned.

Gurney Hill, grower of original roses at Richmond, received word that the American Rose Society, now holding an exhibit in New York City, had awarded him first and second premier prizes on the Richmond rose, a variety originated by Mr. Hill several years ago.

Workmen are excavating for a three-story business block at Broad and Fifteenth streets in Newcastle and have uncovered a portion of an old corduroy road twelve feet below the surface. They also uncovered a pit of tanbark and had to go six feet deeper to get to solid ground. Older citizens recall that a large tannery flourished on the spot more than fifty years ago.

Miss Amy Lindemuth, a teacher in the public schools at Shirley City, Allen County, is under bond of $100 to appear in the Circuit Court, in Fort Wayne on a charge of assault and battery. The affidavit was filed by Dr. A. P. Betts, a physician at Shirley City, who alleges that Miss Lindemuth used severe methods in inflicting punishment on Dorothy Betts, 12 years old, daughter of the doctor.

Mrs. Eliza Kertley, aged 80, was instantly killed at Speeds, nine miles north of Jeffersonville, by a northbound Indianapolis & Louisville interurban car. Mrs. Kertley was deaf and was struck while crossing the track near the home of her daughter, Mrs. Grace Phipps, with whom she lived, her husband being dead. She was dead before the physician arrived. Two daughters and four sons survive.

A runaway accident at Petersburg resulted in the death of Mrs. Joel Traylor, aged 70, and in the serious injury of her husband, aged 75. Mr. and Mrs. Traylor were leaving Petersburg for home when they met a drove of cattle that frightened the horse, which backed the buggy into a ditch and threw the occupants out. Mrs. Traylor's head struck a nail that pierced her skull, causing death a few hours later. Both were pioneer residents of the county.

Parker Robbins, aged 30, a Lawrenceburg wrestler, had a thrilling experience and was painfully injured, when he attempted to throw the driving horse of Major Aaron Elliott on a wager of $10. Robbins caught hold of the forequarters of the animal and lifted the horse from the ground when it attacked him. He was bitten several times on the face, head and arms before the spectators could rescue him. It required nine stitches to sew up a wound on his scalp and he lost his bet.

Physicians are perplexed over the case of Eddie Loftus, the Richmond boy whose skull was punctured by a steel umbrella rib several weeks ago and who has been lying at Reid Memorial Hospital in a critical condition. While at play with several children the umbrella rib was accidentally plunged into Loftus' eye by a companion. It pierced the skull and penetrated the brain. Blood poisoning developed and Loftus was not expected to survive many days. There is no chance for recovery, physicians say, but the vitality of the lad is regarded as extraordinary.

In a runaway accident near Ladoga Mark Shackleford, a wealthy farmer, narrowly escaped with his life, although his horse was killed when it dashed into a north-bound monon freight train at a grade crossing. Shackleford stepped out of his buggy to adjust the harness and the horse became frightened and started to run. Shackleford, who grabbed the lines, was dragged several hundred feet before he finally let go his hold. The horse continued its mad flight and, striking one of the cars of the train that was crossing the road, was hurled beneath the wheels.

Lon Brown, near Moreland, owns a dog that is responsible for two damage suits being filed in the Circuit Court against Brown, the aggregate amount of the suits being $3,000. The suits are filed by Arthur Khaun and his wife. It is charged that while Mr. and Mrs. Khaun were driving past the Brown home, Brown's dog ran out into the highway and barked furiously at the horse they were driving. As a result of the barking the horse ran away and Mrs. Khaun was thrown out of the buggy to the hard roadway, sustaining a broken leg and other injuries. For this Mrs. Khaun seeks to recover $3,000 from the owner of the dog and Mr. Khaun, for the loss of his wife's services, companionship, etc., seeks to recover $1,000.

Mrs. Martha Anderson, aged 83, died of measles at Nevins, Ill. The epidemic of the disease in Terre Haute is spreading until there is a marked decrease in attendance at the schools.

Roland Rickwood, aged 18, son of Samuel G. Rickwood, president of the Evansville Board of Public Works, has been nominated by United States Senator Albert J. Beveridge as a first alternate-at-large from the State to West Point. He is a senior in the Evansville High School.

David Doty, aged 50, died at Richmond as the result of a fractured skull suffered when he fell through a hay chute at a livery barn.

Because of injuries received when hurled from an automobile when it was struck by a test car driven by William Carr, of Indianapolis, Mrs. Arthur Wellington, of Anderson, formerly Miss Helen Werbe, of Indianapolis, suffered the loss of several teeth. The automobile firm employing Carr settled with the husband of the injured woman for $150.

The Misses Cecelia and Stella Crenhan, Miss Tillie Lowes and Miss Gertrude Penrod, of Lafayette, and Miss Kelly, of Oxford, have left for Sturgis, S. D., where each will enter a home claim of 160 acres of land. The young women kept their plans secret until last week. They hope to get adjoining quarter sections, that they may keep one another company. They will have to live on the claims for fourteen months.

Mayor Chester, of Elkhart, has instructed Chief Rinehart to notify all persons who have been keeping business places open on Sunday that the State law against "following usual avocation on Sunday" will be enforced beginning next Sunday. The instructions by the Mayor are the outgrowth of prosecutions by the Law and Order League of managers who opened theatres for the first time last Sunday. The theatre managers say they will obey.

S. M. Rodgers, who formerly raised tobacco in Spencer County, Kentucky, but is now trying its culture on Indiana soil, says that in Union Township, Clark County, and in the vicinity of Memphis the plant grows to an unusual size, but differs from the Kentucky product, being harder, thicker and bitter. In the eastern parts of the county the tobacco raised has sold this year frequently at 20 cents and has compared favorably with that raised south of the Ohio river.

While en route home from Williamsport in a farm wagon, the team driven by Samuel Kaneer and son became frightened at an automobile and ran into a ditch, throwing the older man beneath the wheels of his wagon, where he suffered fatal injuries. His chest was crushed by the weight of the wagon, and he died at his home a few hours later. Kaneer is a well known farmer of Warren County, his home being in the vicinity of Walnut Grove. The son was uninjured.

Suits against seventy-five Ft. Wayne men to enforce the collection of delinquent taxes have been filed by Prosecutor Albert E. Thomas in the Circuit and Superior Courts and the new Indiana law governing the collection of taxes will get a thorough test there. The amounts range from $6 to $135, and some of the defendants are well known. The filing of the suits, which was not done until County Treasurer Scheiman had exhausted every other means to induce payment, has caused a sensation.

Nineteen years after Robert Adams, a Civil War veteran, had applied for a pension, it was granted, the other day in the sum of $12 a month, together with back pension of about $3,000. But Adams has been for years an inmate of the Eastern Hospital for the Insane. Adams' guardian, Benjamin C. Bowerman, of the Muncie Trust Company, went to the Richmond institution and asked that Adams be released, saying that the latter's daughter, Mrs. F. L. Green, of Muncie, has long desired to care for her father.

When Fred Steed, bookkeeper of a Muncie savings company, saw a team of runaway mules dashing down the street at a breakneck pace and observed a group of kindergarten children and their teacher start across the street directly in the path of the runaways without realising the impending danger, he dashed in front of the frightened animals, grasped the bridle reins and turned them to the sidewalk and against the Central building, where the brick wall stopped them. Steed escaped injury and the children were unhurt. The animals were not seriously injured.

Although James Smith, a rag picker of Muncie, commonly known as the mayor of Shedtown, in which locality he lives, has just inherited $3,700 in cash from the estate of a cousin who died recently in Topeka, Kas., he is not elated over his good fortune nor does he aspire to any higher business than the one in which he is now engaged. "My rag cart is my best friend," says Smith, "and I wouldn't know what to do in any other business. I suppose, though, that instead of my picking rags, some one would be picking me if I tried to go into some kind of business of which I knew nothing." Then Smith, stopping his cart, pulled from his pocket a large roll of bills of various denominations, saying: "I just drew these out of the bank so I would not be broke."

Miss Kate Cash, aged 27 years, died last week in Gallatin County, Illinois. She never weighed over twenty pounds all during her life, although she was not considered a dwarf.

Pret Miles, aged 64 years, and for more than twenty years a banker at Milford, Kosciusko County, died last week. He leaves an estate estimated at $100,000. Miles was born near Dayton, Ohio, April 30, 1845. He was a Royal Arch Mason, an Elk and a Knight Templar.

CROWDS OF STUDENTS HOOT AT ROOSEVELT

He and Mrs. Roosevelt Were Taking Tea with Prince Eitel of Germany.

"Down with the liar!" "A bas Roosevelt!" "Vive Egypt!" "We want a constitution!" "Hurrah for the Assembly!" yelled and howled the tarbouched mob that marched and remarched past Shepherd's Hotel in Cairo the other afternoon. It was the answer of the Nationalists to Colonel Roosevelt's speech at the University of Egypt.

The meetings of protest that began the previous night were continued in various sections of the city, the Nationalists assembled voicing their disapproval of his views, and then marching before the hotel in the hope of letting Colonel Roosevelt see and hear them, so that he might know what they thought of him. They shouted "Down with hypocrites!" a term which is applied to everyone dissenting from the Nationalists' program. The Colonel missed the show, he and Mrs. Roosevelt having gone to take tea with Prince Eitel at the Savoy Hotel.

It was a picturesque sight, but pitiably ineffective, save for the noise. First were heard strange cries in Arabic. Across a corner of the garden came what looked like a moving Turkish carpet traversing the bounding street. The carpet pattern proved to be about 200 students, mostly youths, a large number of them mere boys, led by a black-mustached man who seemed to be the only mature person in the throng.

Reaching the front of the hotel, they shouted with zest. The effect would have done justice to a college crowd. After each yell they vigorously applauded, presumably themselves. They marched and remarched, led by a tired-looking policeman, back to the hall, where they held another meeting and another march.

Condemnation of assassination and a declaration that nations as well as individuals need long and careful preparation for self-government were two of the most striking features of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt's address in the assembly hall of the University of Egypt in Cairo the other morning. On both subjects he had strong words to utter, burning words that went to the kernel of the Egyptian political muddle.

He uttered these words against the advice of missionaries and officials, both native and English, who feared that the result might be personal harm. Every effort was made to dissuade Colonel Roosevelt from talking on either of these subjects, but he resolutely declined to alter his address, his ultimatum being: "If I cannot say what I believe to be true then I won't speak." He spoke and emerged safely, his speech being cheered to the echo, although not by the students, because they were not invited to be present, owing to the apprehension felt by the government officials.

SWOPE CLAIMANT RECOGNIZED.

Alleged Son of Dead Millionaire Signs Over His Rights.

Have Dr. B. C. Hyde and his wife, of Kansas City, who was Frances Swope, a niece and one of the principal heirs of Thomas H. Swope, agreed to recognize the claim of Elmer Swope, of Martinsburg, W. Va., who is trying to establish that he is a son of the late millionaire? Elmer Swope, through his attorney, has filed a quitclaim which exempts from litigation on his part Mrs. Hyde's share of the Swope millions. The consideration named in the deed is "one dollar and other valuable considerations." Mrs. Hyde also has negotiated a loan of $50,000, giving as security part of the property left her by Colonel Swope's will. The money is to be used to defend Dr. Hyde, who is charged with murdering two of the Swope family.

DUPLICATES CUDAHY ATTACK.

Kansas City Man Slashes Wife's Companion—Third Case of Kind.

For the third time within a few weeks in Kansas City an angry husband encountered his wife and a man companion and slashed the man with a knife when C. P. Oard, a piano salesman, met Mrs. Oard at her home early the other morning after she had been "joy riding," it is alleged, and, after bombarding the two men who accompanying her with bricks, cut one of them. The first affair of this kind was that in which "Jack" Cudahy attacked Jere Lillis, banker and clubman, when he found him in his home with Mrs. Cudahy. The second occurred on a recent night when Dr. J. E. King trailed his wife and William A. Young, an actor, to Swope Park and slashed Young.

On Friday, March 25, a destructive fire occurred on the Jennings farm near Newville, which totally destroyed the barn, cow shed and chicken house. The farm machinery, five tons of hay, 60 bushels of oats, two buggies and two sets of harness were consumed by the flames. Two young boys at the risk of their lives got the horses out of the barn, one of the animals being slightly burned. The fire caught from weeds a neighbor had set on fire, the wind blowing sparks into the straw stack. The loss was partially covered by insurance.

THE HORSE WON.

A Race With a Locomotive When Railroads Were New.

In 1822 the first charter was obtained for a railroad in the United States. It was for a line from Philadelphia to a point on the Susquehanna river, but was never built. On the announcement of the project some one asked one of the Baltimore newspapers, "What is a railroad, anyhow?" The editor was forced to reply that he did not know, but that "perhaps some other correspondent can tell."

Seven years later on the little wooden track along the Lackawanna creek the first locomotive had its trial. The experiment was far from successful, and for a number of years afterward the trains on most of the railroads continued to be drawn by horses. The first locomotive on the Baltimore and Ohio had sails attached. So did the cars. These sails were hoisted when the wind was in the right direction so as to help the locomotive.

The rivalry between the railroads using locomotives and those using horses was very bitter. In August, 1830, an actual trial of speed was held between a horse and one of the pioneer locomotives which did not result in favor of the locomotive. The race was on the Baltimore and Ohio, the locomotive being one built by Peter Cooper, who also acted as engine driver.

The horse, a gallant gray, was in the habit of pulling a car on a track parallel to that used by the locomotive. At first the gray had the better of the race, but when he was a quarter of a mile ahead Mr. Cooper succeeded in getting up enough steam to pass the horse amid terrific applause.

At that moment a band slipped from a pulley, and "though Mr. Cooper lacerated his hands trying to replace it the engine stopped, the horse passed it and came in the winner."

As there were no brakes on the early trains, they used to stop and to start with jolts which threw the passengers across the car. The coupling was with chains, having two or three feet of slack, which the engine in starting took up with a series of fierce jerks. The shock on stopping was even worse and "never failed to send the passengers flying."

There were no whistles in the old days. Signals were given by pushing up the valve on the dome by hand and letting the steam escape with a loud hissing noise. On the New Castle and Frenchtown railroad when the signal was heard the slaves around the station would rush to the arriving train, seize hold of it and pull back with all their might while the agent stuck a piece of wood through a wheel.

There were so many collisions and explosions that some southern railroads introduced what they called a barrier car between the locomotive and the passenger coaches of the train. This barrier car consisted of a platform on wheels upon which were piled six bales of cotton, and it was claimed it would safeguard the passengers in two ways—it would protect them from the blowing up of the locomotive and would form a soft cushion upon which the passengers could land in the event of a collision. There is no record of how this experiment worked out.—American Cultivator.

Origin of the Word Canada.

On April 20, 1634, Jacques Cartier sailed from St. Malo, Brittany, with two ships and sixty-one men for Labrador, skirted Newfoundland, named Chaleur bay, crossed the eastern end of Anticosti and then headed for France again. The next year Cartier returned with three ships, thought he saw in the St. Lawrence the wished for passage to India and was only undeceived by the freshness of the water on reaching the mouth of the Saguenay. Then was revealed the majestic size of the continent, for, with the exception of the Amazon and the Orinoco, no American river gives one such a sense of power and grandeur. As the Frenchmen inquired the names of the Indian villages along the banks they were answered "Canada," a Mohawk word meaning village, but which was applied by the Frenchmen to the country.

The Planing Machine.

As to the original inventor of the planing machine there is perhaps scarcely a machine about which there has been more controversy than this, and there are many claimants to the honor. There are records, however, showing that Nicholas Forq, a French clockmaker, used a metal planer in 1751 for machining pump cylinders, apparently being under the impression that they could be made more accurately in this manner than by a revolving cutter.—Cassier's Magazine.

His College Training.

"Has Billie's son ever made any use of his college education?"

"I should say so. He was held up a few nights ago."

"Yes?"

"And he tackled his assailant low and threw him for a loss of four ribs. He learned that trick on his college eleven."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Sapleigh—Bah Jove, you know, an idea has occurred to me— Miss Pert (interrupting)—Pardon me, Mr. Sapleigh, isn't that more than a mere occurrence? I should call it an event.—Boston Transcript.

A Pertinent Question.

Talent is that which is in a man's power; genius is that in whose power a man is.—Lowell.

WOVEN WIRE FENCE.

There is so many makes of fence on the market, some good, some very poor. I have handled a number of different makes and am convinced that the AMERICAN FENCE is the best value for the money of any fence on the market. The strength of fence depends on the weight of the wire in the fence. Now compare the weight of a ROD of AMERICAN FENCE with the weight of a rod of any other fence then compare the price. Do not take the dealers word as to how much it weighs but put it on the scales and weigh it. I can sell you

Can you buy any other fence so cheap?

I have eight different styles on hand now. The American Steel and Wire Company make nearly all the wire that is woven in the different makes of fence and it is folly for an agent of any other make of fence to claim a superior quality of wire or of galvanizing. Every manufacturer of fence has an idea as to what temper the wire should be for a fence and orders his wire tempered accordingly, in other words he experimenting at the Farmers expense. The American Steel and Wire Company have passed the experimental stage and are producing a composition of Steel for Fence that is perfectly adapted for it. Every farmer that has had any experience with wire knows that wire exposed to the weather becomes hard and brittle, this feature has been largely eliminated in the special wire used in AMERICAN FENCE. While the wire is stiff and springy it is flexible enough to be easily spliced and will remain so. We will explain other good features if you will call and see us.

The Baths of Old Rome.

At the end of the third century after Christ there were in Rome 11 large public baths and 926 smaller ones. The baths of Caracalla could accommodate at one time 1,600 people; those of Diocletian, 3,600. Taking 1,500 as the average of each of the public baths and 50 as that of each of the private baths, it appears that at any minute bathing accommodations were possible for 62,000 people in ancient Rome. Counting on a population of 2,000,000, the figure generally given as the correct one, it would thus seem that ample privileges were afforded every day for every inhabitant of the Imperial City.—New York American.

A Gilbert Story.

Sir W. S. Gilbert, who was one of the few playwrights who defended the stage censor, is noted for his caustic criticisms on anything which does not meet with his approval.

While dining out once some one happened to ask him his opinion of Burne Jones' women. "Too long in the neck," remarked the author of "The Mikado." "When I look at one of them I always feel that she ought to have a joint in it and wear a stocking."—London Tit-Bits.

A Pleasure of Memory.

Drolichon bought a phonograph and insisted upon his mother-in-law having her voice registered by the instrument.

As the good woman refused, he added maliciously:

"Oh, come, now; just a few words. You can't think how much pleasure it will give me to hear your voice—when you are gone!"—Paris Figaro.

Nothing of the Kind.

THE DIGNIFIED COURT.

The oppressively conservative United States Supreme Court occasionally sanctions or tolerates some innovation in its environment which jolts sticklers for ancient ritual, says the Kansas City Star. Lately there has been added to the fixtures of the court what the frivolous and irreverent call "the red light" section. It lends a bit of color to the ceremonies, nothing more. It is a red electric light, the purpose of which is to warn persons in the court that the judges are approaching and that everyone must maintain respectful silence.

The red electric bulb is placed immediately over the door through which the judges make their entrance. The moment it flashes red it is a signal for everyone to rise and remain standing until the nine black-robed figures have taken their places. This business of taking their seats in the court as performed by the justices is mighty impressive. It might be termed a function.

The jurists form in line in the little room reserved for their use, with Chief Justice Fuller at the head of the procession. Then follow his associates in the order of seniority—Harlan, Brewer, White, Peckham, McKenna, Holmes, Day and Moody. When they reach the outer corridor leading to the court room a page touches a button and the red bulb glows. With slow ultra-dignified tread the justices enter the court room and file behind the row of pillars in the rear of their seats. The chief justice, Mr. Harlan and Mr. Brewer step behind their respective chairs and stand motionless. When Judges Peckham, Holmes and Moody have reached their places to the left, and White, McKenna and Day on the right, the chief justice steps forward. The others do the same, and then as one man they sink into their seats.

The justices' lunch hour is fixed by the stars and moon and the clock at the national observatory. At 2 o'clock, not one second before or after, the justices return to the court room and the hearing is resumed.

Oil Well a Timepiece.

The queerest of all oil gushers has developed in the field at Sour Lake, Texas. It has eight outbreaks every twenty-four hours, and at each eruption it gushes just fifty barrels of oil. The period of activity lasts only five minutes. The well then suddenly subsides and for three hours it is perfectly quiet, not a sound escaping from the surface opening. When the time arrives for another eruption the earth around the well suddenly begins to tremble, a loud subterranean roar is heard, and out of the pipe spouts the oil to a height of more than 100 feet.

This remarkable well is attracting much attention among experienced oil men. They are unable to account for its peculiar actions. The owners of the well are satisfied to let it "cut up" as it sees fit, so long as it continues to produce 400 barrels of oil a day without pumping.

The gushing of the freak well comes at such regular intervals that the workmen in the field set their watches by it.

"There goes the noon pop-off of the Ransom well," one of the men will exclaim, and it is taken as the signal that it is time to knock off work for dinner.

HUMOR'S PENALTY.

The American public is light-hearted. It loves a laugh. But it is suspicious of the greatness of anyone who is habitually witty. It is safer for a public man to be dull and shallow than wise and sparkling. Although one of the few really humorous speakers in Congress, Representative Cushman soon saw the danger of being classed as a professional funny man, says the New York World. It meant popularity and always assured him an audience, but he had serious ambitions, and he came to realize that too many good stories would be a bar to the political future he had planned for himself. So in his later years he avoided these exhibitions of wit with which he entertained the House when he first appeared in Washington.

Somehow humor is not quite respectable. Buffoonery will always make campaign crowds shriek with delight, but it is fatal for a candidate for high office to be a comedian. Lincoln's reputation as a story teller was far more a handicap than an advantage when he became President. Tom Corwin said that the way to succeed in politics was "to be a solemn ass." By his weakness for joking "Sunset" Cox ruined a promising career, yet when he made a speech that was not funny he was likely to be judged a failure.

If Tom Reed had been less prone to uttering witticisms his abilities as one of the foremost men in politics would never have been disputed and he would have stood a better chance of reaching the Presidency. A reputation for levity hurt him. Mr. Bryan has a sharp tongue and an unusual gift for saying clever things, but he is careful to preserve a grave, impressive manner. Mr. Roosevelt is a man of high spirits who knows how to laugh, but nobody with a true sense of humor could contrive so many ways of making himself ridiculous. In Mr. Taft there are evident at times traces of boylike comic spirit, but as becomes one in his lofty position he keeps himself under severe restraint in public.

Not an Inch of Healthy Skin Left.

My little son, a boy of five, broke out with an itching rash. Three doctors prescribed for him, but he kept getting worse until we could not dress him any more. They finally advised me to try a certain medical college, but its treatment did no good. At the time I was induced to try Cuticura he was so bad that I had to cut his hair off and put the Cuticura Ointment on him on bandages, as it was impossible to touch him with the bare hand. There was not one square inch of skin on his whole body that was not affected. He was one mass of sores. The bandages used to stick to his skin and in removing them it used to take the skin off with them, and the screams from the poor child were heartbreaking. I began to think that he would never get well, but after the second application of Cuticura Ointment I began to see signs of improvement, and with the third and fourth applications the sores commenced to dry up. His skin peeled off twenty times, but it finally yielded to the treatment. Now I can say that he is entirely cured, and a stronger and healthier boy you never saw than he is to-day, twelve years or more since the cure was effected. "'Nature is often beautiful,' he said one evening, as we walked in the park. 'But to-night how hideous she is.'

"Here Sloan shuddered.

"'But, my dear Sloan,' I objected, 'look at the stars. Surely they're very fine to-night.'

"Sloan looked up, then frowned and shok his head.

"'Oh, yes,' he said, 'not bad, not bad; but there's far too many of them.'"

Washing with Clay.

A savage tribe in Africa daubs cloth with clay, then rubs the dirt out in the river. That's a good deal like using a hunk of yellow soap that is made heavy with rosin and stale grease. The rosin stays in the cloth and keeps some of the dirt with it, and then your clothes look streaky. Easy Task laundry soap—the white soap made of cocoanut oil, borax, naptha and wholesome tallow—takes the dirt out. That's its business—taking dirt out and driving disease germs away. Twenty-five years of reputation back of it, and still it is but five cents a cake.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

WEALTH NOT AN EVIL.

By Rev. Edwin Whittier Caswell.

But thou shalt remember the Lord thy God, for it is He that giveth thee power to get wealth.—Deut. 8:18.

It is customary when speaking of wealth to enumerate its evils. We all know that the inordinate, miserly love of money is the taproot of the whisky evil, the slavery evil, the gambling evil, the social evil, the living for pleasure evil and the capital and labor war evil.

But when a man like John Stewart Kennedy departs this life bestowing from thirty to forty millions of property to a multitude of noble charities the public beholds a more optimistic side of the acquisition of riches.

Wealth itself cannot be an evil any more than the wealth of intellect, wealth of heart or wealth of character and influence are evil. It is only when one of the gifts of the Creator is made a god to be worshiped that it becomes sinful. "Ye cannot serve (or worship) God and Mammon." Abraham and Job were millionaires in a time when $1,000,000 was equal to $50,000,000 of present values. Solomon's wealth was beyond all computation. He only asked for wisdom, but received both riches of mind and treasure given him by the Almighty. Zaccheus and Cornelius, two converts of the New Testament time, were men of large property. No one in Bible history is condemned because of possessing great riches, "for the Lord maketh poor and He maketh rich."

The power to acquire riches is as much a God-given gift as the power to move men by oratory or to influence men by love or the power to write like poets, philosophers, historians and scholars, or the power to reveal nature's secrets, like Newton, Watt, Bell, Morse and Edison. The rich men of the past have aided in these wonderful discoveries and shaped the destinies of nations.

George Washington gave not only himself for his country, but poured out his gold in the hour of the Revolution's needs. Stephen Girard of Philadelphia loaned large amounts to the republic and with the remainder of his money founded a college of learning for fatherless boys. Peter Cooper has embalmed his name in the memory of millions; the name of William E. Dodge will never perish from our annals.

We do not need to search history for characters among the wealthy who have been an honor to the race and a blessing to many of their fellow beings. The number of living philanthropists is increasing rapidly every year. We could fill a whole volume with the names of munificent givers who make possible our churches, hospitals, orphan asylums, colleges, universities, our travelers' aid societies, homes for the aged and infirm, children's aid societies, our libraries, museums and charity organizations. There is no question but that the craving of all men is for brotherliness, helpfulness, kindness and friendliness, and this soul hunger is being fed in a larger degree to-day than ever before. The rich and the poor are coming together in harmonious unity, ushering in the day when the war between capital and labor will cease forever.

The river of wealth is as potential for good as for evil. Let all, therefore, endeavor to turn this mighty tide into the broad channels of human need, for everything liveth whither the river cometh. Then the great ministry of wealth will not be to turn the world into a wilderness, but the wilderness into the garden of the Lord.

REFLECTING GOD'S GLORY.

By Rev. Robert Stuart Macarthur.

And it came to pass.....when he came down from the Mount that Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone while he talked with him.—Exodus 34:29.

Very wonderful indeed was the interview of Moses with God on the mount during the period of forty days and forty nights. Moses was there in intimate communion with God, and during this entire period he did neither eat nor drink. He was thus taught, by a strange and blessed experience, that man does not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

In developing the thoughts of this incident, attention may fittingly be called to the shining of the face of Moses. Moses carried with him from God the two tables of the testimony written by the finger of God; but he also carried back to the people the best kind of personal adornment—a shining face. No man is ever so beautifully adorned as the man whose face glows with the light of God.

The face often is the man. The soul looks out through the eyes; the heart often voices itself by the lips. A shining face is suggestive of a peaceful spirit, and a musical voice of a properly attuned soul. It thus comes to pass that when men have lived with God they carry the very glory of God in their faces. It would not be surprising if ever after that moment until his mysterious death Moses was a different man in face and in spirit from what he had been before.

Mysterious joy often comes into the hearts of God's people, and the glory of the Lord often shines in their faces. Christian joy will make a homely face beautiful; a rugged and seamed face, if illuminated with the glory of God, is a sight to charm the soul of an artist and to inspire with joy the heart of an angel. God loves joy and not gloom. The gloomy Christian misrepresents the Heavenly Father; he practically says that God is a hard master. A long face on a Christian man is truly a false face. Do not tell me that men of the world are joyous. They never know genuine joy, such as they might know if they were men of God. They call a life of sin a life of pleasure. It is a life of slavery. He who serves the devil serves a hard master. There is a great difference between joy and happiness. Happiness is just what haps; but joy is not external, it is internal. Joy is not dependent upon what happens; joy springs up from within the soul. We must live with Christ if we would gain His image. A few minutes in the day with God will change the whole day; it will soften the spirit; it will sweeten the life; it will beautify the home; it will make the heart joyous and the face radiant.

If you can do nothing else for God, you can carry a shining face. Charles Kingsley finely said, "If you wish your neighbors to see what God is like, let them see what He can make you like." May we hear the words of the Master, "Even so let your light shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven."

LIFT UP YOUR EYES AND LOOK.

By Bishop William A. Quayle.

"In everything give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you." Thess., 5:18.

A good man and great said this: "In everything give thanks." Nobody but a good and great man could have said it. The sentiment is like Mount Lycabettus from whose top all of historied Greece lies under the eyes without straining an eyeball. All life lies at the base of a mount of vision and of praise like this: "In everything give thanks." The fact which is meant to be lifted into light at this moment is that there is a devotional element in all things whatsoever. We say grace before meals, except we be heathen. We should say grace before labors and battle without or within and reading of books and taking of journeys and husking corn or going to picnics or a stroll through sunburnt fields for the sheer love of the crisp grass under foot and the hot sky overhead. Blessings lie about us thick as blades of grass along a green hillside.

If the giving thanks to people for all trivial services be the easy test of the gentleman or the gentlewoman much more shall the giving thanks to God for all sorts of benefits be good manners toward God. How shall the ungrateful toward God think themselves genteel?

On a radiant day in August, when the windings of a quiet river are lit goldenly with the tawny green of swamp grasses, which answer to all winds with weary reluctance, and the swallow dips with grace unphrasable to the surface of the stream where my boat floats, and life is very wonderful and God is very nigh—why is not that a good place for devotion? Why should some dull-souled sectary with dull prudery of religion think that reading a page from Scripture is more godly than reading this illumined page from the Scripture of the living God who has writ in sunlight and laughter and the flight of birds as certainly as He has written in the Holy Book?

Are we to think it is more pious to pray on the cold flags of a dark cathedral than on the sunny floor of God's cathedral of the sky. Really, which is more accepted will not make long parley in the heart which devoutly loves God, the God of every lovely and every living thing, or such as watch the out-of-door Christ in His goings through the meadow lands and across the winding hills or by the sea where the fisher boats gather at the gray of every morning, or through the wheat fields in the ripening grain. Where He was at home and at prayer we may safely be at prayer and at home.

"Father, I thank thee," says the Christ; and "In everything give thanks," says His brainest follower. And for one I will take this advice and will find provision for devotion in everything, books, folks, church, labor, song, tears and cares. And for the least and the largest to the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ will make my adoration for the Christ, my Saviour and my King.

SERMONETTES.

Most of us would be miserable if we could manufacture no enemies.

The thing that keeps many out of religion is that we make it so petty.

When the church becomes an end in itself it soon makes an end of itself.

Much of our good would be a great deal better if we made less fuss about it.

It's a queer conceit that regards a dime dropped into the plate as a dollar laid up in glory.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't expect your prayers to mean business until you get busy.

Don't imagine you have wings because you are blown about by your feelings.

Don't try to keep beauty on your face when you are hiding the beast in your heart.

Don't fail to observe that when there is a cause in the heart it will get to the muscles.

Don't overlook the fact that love's real wealth is often according to its apparent waste.

Vindictive.

"Ugh!" spluttered Mr. Jones. "That nut had a worm in it."

"Here," urged a friend, offering him a glass of water, "drink this and wash it down."

"Wash it down!" growled Jones. "Why should I? Let him walk!"—Everybody's.

What the Grocer Said.

"This is a nice business," said the grocer to a Fort Wayne reporter. "I sell to the very best people in Fort Wayne, and by the very best I mean the folks who want good things and who pay for them—folks who know how to get the best goods at the price of poorer ones. Take Easy Task soap as an example. It is increasing in demand every day. The reason is that it does half the work itself, and the women know that. Yes, Easy Task not only works by itself, but it sells itself."

GLADNESS COMES

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of illness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact that it is the only remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is, therefore, all-important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to purchase and note that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

It is pleasant and refreshing to the taste, and acts gently yet promptly on the kidneys, liver and bowels, cleanses the system effectually, dispels colds, headaches and fevers and assists in overcoming habitual constipation permanently, also biliousness and the many ills resulting therefrom. The great trouble with all other purgatives and aperients is not that they fail to act when a single dose is taken, but that they act too violently and invariably tend to produce a habit of body requiring constantly augmented doses. Children enjoy the pleasant taste and gentle action of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, the ladies find it delightful and beneficial whenever a laxative remedy is needed, and business men pronounce it invaluable, as it may be taken without interfering with business and does not gripe nor nauseate. When buying note the name, California Fig Syrup Co. printed on the front of every package. Price, 50 cents a bottle.

Fortune Telling

Does not take into consideration the one essential to woman's happiness—womanly health.

The woman who neglects her health is neglecting the very foundation of all good fortune. For without health love loses its lustre and gold is but dross.

Womanly health when lost or impaired may generally be regained by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

This Prescription has, for over 40 years, been curing delicate, weak, pain-wracked women, by the hundreds of thousands and this too in the privacy of their homes without their having to submit to indelicate questionings and offensively repugnant examinations.

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter free, All correspondence held as sacredly confidential. Address World's Dispensary Medical Association, R. V. Pierce, M. D., President, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Pierce's Great Family Doctor Book, The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser, newly revised up-to-date edition—1000 pages, answers in Plain English hosts of delicate questions which every woman, single or married, ought to know about. Sent free, in plain wrapper to any address on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps to cover mailing only, or in cloth binding for 31 stamps.

Sheep are exceedingly fond of turnips. Harvest the largest and leave the remainder for the sheep.

If you cannot afford to buy pure-bred mares at the start, buy the best you can, then trade and buy until you can get the real article.

If the horse's mane is heavy and inclined to work under the collar, thin it out, because it will almost certainly cause a sore spot.

It is easy to teach a suckling colt how to drink milk, and a quart of warm cow's milk in the morning will give it a good start.

Ducks and geese may be raised just as easily away from a pond or running water as with it. Plenty of drinking water is sufficient for their needs.

A well-matched pair of pure bred draft mares ought to be worth, in spite of the autos, $1,000 apiece, and properly bred stallions will bring even more than this.

Colds induce bronchial troubles in fowls as they do in people. The respiratory organs of poultry are subject to the same troubles as those of the human family.

Keep the hens in the best possible condition, clean the houses often, feed carefully of good, clean feed, spray for mites and lice, and you will be as apt as anybody to get eggs.

The chickens should be encouraged to run and scratch in the garden in the winter after the frosts have destroyed the tomatoes and other vegetables the fowls might damage.

Farmers' and stockmens' meetings, college short courses and farmers' institutes are important educational opportunities at this season of the year. It will pay to make the most of them.

If some of the brooder chicks are not quite thrifty as the others they should be put by themselves if possible, where the stronger ones will not run over them and rob them of their feed.

The thrifty farmer pays strict attention to the breeding of his animals. They are carefully guarded as to environment, diet, air and cleanliness, so that the best market value can be reached.

The production, care and application of manure is given the least consideration of the three, in this country, caused, no doubt, by the boundless extent of virgin soil, found by our forefathers.

Farmers with silos are inclined to feel and show greater independence than their neighbors without them. They say they don't care so much what the season is, they are sure of lots of good feed.

While the effect of the cow-peas in maintaining the fertility of the soil, where used as a catch-crop with wheat, is clearly shown by this experiment, the practice can hardly be recommended in general farming.

In feeding milk right to young pigs only a fraction of a teaspoonful must be given to each at a time, yet from five to seven feeds must be given during the day, gradually increasing the amount after the first day, but never giving them all they will drink.

Parasite of Poultry.

The worst external parasite of poultry against which the poultryman and farmers have to contend is the "common chicken mite" or "red chicken mite" (Dermanyssus gallinae, Redi.). There are other species of mites which attack poultry, but they do much less damage. This bloodthirsty pest causes great loss to the poultry industry of the country by killing adult fowls and chicks, and cutting down egg production. It not only attacks poultry, but horses and even man as well.

Selected Eggs for Setting.

A selected lot of one dozen hens will lay as many eggs as the average farmer will care to have hatched, and, if the hens are re-mated to a pure-bred cock he will be the sire of all the chickens hatched on the farm, thus securing uniformity in color and general characteristics, instead of having chicks of all shapes, sizes and colors and not of a characteristic merit. The hens not in company will lay just as many eggs as if with them, and the eggs will possess better keeping qualities than those that are fertile.

Length of Animal Life.

Various attempts have been made to discover the law governing the length of life of different species of animals. A general rule, subject to many exceptions, is that the life of large animals is longer than that of small ones. But, although an elephant may live 300 years, and a horse not more than 40, a man outlives a horse, and a cat or a toad may equal a horse in length of years. One authority holds that the length of life of a species is something as characteristic of that species as of any of its structural or physiological properties. The length of life is predetermined with the advent of the new form and is not subsequently regulated for the benefit of that particular species amid a new environment.

Feeding Skimmed Milk Warm.

After the first two weeks you can get the calf into skim milk. Whole milk is too expensive to raise calves on. Calves thrive much better on the warm skimmed milk from the hand separator than on the skimmed milk brought home from the creamery, where the milk of several hundred cows is probably mixed, or the milk set in pans and crocks or deep cans, which, when the cream is taken off, is always cold and usually half sour. Skimmed milk may be fed to calves with more profit than to any other thing about the farm, unless it be the poultry.

Horse Blood a Styptic.

That the blood of a horse has the peculiar property of acting as a styptic and assisting the formation of a cicatrix when applied to fresh wounds is a fact well known to the medical profession. The difficulty about its application has hitherto been how to obtain fresh, germ free horse blood in an emergency.

Doctors Robert and Chody, at a recent meeting of the Therapeutical Society in Paris, gave demonstrations with a powder obtained by a new antiseptic method from the blood of sound, healthy horses which has preserved the styptic properties. Dissolved in water, it acts in the same way as fresh horse blood. This dried blood powder, it is declared by Doctors Robert and Chody, is also efficacious taken internally as a cure for hemorrhage.

Ration for Dairy Animal.

The Canadian Farmer has this to say about the ration of a cow that is kept for the milk she produces: "A good ration for a dairy cow giving a fair flow of milk should contain about 29 pounds of dry matter, 225 pounds of protein, 13 pounds of starchy feed for carbohydrates and ½ pound of fat. All these figures represent the amounts of digestible in the feeds. The protein should be in the feed at the rate of one of protein to about 5.5 starchy matter. Figuring on this basis the following ration of feeds grown on the farm will be found to give good results: Corn silage, 30 pounds; alfalfa hay, 10 pounds; oat straw, 5 pounds; ground oats, 5 pounds, and ground peas, 4 pounds. This will give a nutritive ration of 1.58, or, in other words, there should be one pound of proteids for every 5.8 pounds of starchy feeds."

Making Farm Life Attractive.

In a large number of farm homes about the only time that the family are together is at meal times. It should be the duty of parents to spend at least an hour each day with the children, letting the boys and girls feel that their interests are their parents' interests also, for in no other way can the fathers and mothers keep so firm a hold on their young lives.

Do something, read something, study something or think something during the time you are in the habit of doing nothing. Think of the odd 20 minutes before meals or after dinner and improve it by reading, writing or thinking.

Nothing bespeaks the character of a man more than an attractive home, a well kept lawn and a happy wife and family and these all represent giving attention to the often neglected odds and ends of our time.

We should never be above utilizing the odds and ends of our time to make our homes beautiful, attractive and pleasant. It costs very little to maintain order and system about our homes and yet nothing pays better.

Enjoyment is the attraction of life and all that contributes to that end and increases the happiness of living. These things do not call for large outlays of time or money, but they are certain of rendering large returns.

Ticks Lessen Yield of Beef and Milk.

A cattle tick that has reached the ingorged stage weighs about five grains, and about 1,500 such ticks weigh a pound. As cattle in the tick region often carry many thousands of these blood-sucking parasites, and as each tick during the period of its attachment to an animal draws considerably more than its own weight in blood, it can be seen that these ticks constitute an enormous drain on the cattle which they infest.

This accounts for the fact that under such conditions it is impossible to fatten cattle even on rich pasture and with an abundance of good feed, says a government bulletin. A large part of the nourishment that should go toward producing beef and milk is consumed by the ticks. In addition to the loss of blood and nourishment there is the never-ceasing irritation caused by the ticks, so that the existence of the infested cattle is beset with continuous suffering, and this of course also tends to keep them in poor condition.

The shrinkage in the milk production of a cow harboring many ticks will average one quart a day, and the loss occasioned thereby at 3 cents a quart for the 875,000 ticky dairy cattle, out of more than 4,000,000 below the quarantine line, would amount to $26,250 a day. Counting 300 milking days for each cow to the year would make the loss from this cause $7,875,000 per annum.

Have You Tried?

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound? We can furnish positive proof that it has made many remarkable cures after all other means had failed.

Women who are suffering with some form of female illness should consider this.

As such evidence read these two unsolicited testimonial letters. We guarantee they are genuine and honest statements of facts.

Cresson, Pa.—"Five years ago I had a bad fall, and hurt myself inwardly. I was under a doctor's care for nine weeks, and when I stopped I grew worse again. I sent for a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, took it as directed, and now I am a stout, hearty woman."—Mrs. Ella E. Aikey, Cresson, Pa.

Baird, Wash.—"A year ago I was sick with kidney and bladder troubles and female weakness. The doctors gave me up. All they could do was to just let me go as easily as possible. I was advised by friends to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier. I am completely cured of my ills, and I am nearly sixty years old."—Mrs. Sarah Leighton, Baird, Wash.

Evidence like the above is abundant showing that the derangements of the female organism which breed all kinds of miserable feelings and which ordinary practice does not cure, are the very disorders that give way to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Women who are afflicted with similar troubles, after reading two such letters as the above, should be encouraged to try this wonderfully helpful remedy.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

FASHION HINTS

Foulards are coming in such lovely shades and patterns, that it's no wonder they are to be more than ever popular this season. One of wistaria, figured over with irregular dashes of white, is shown here. It is designed for general wear. A little hand embroidery on the vest adds to its attractiveness. The "kimona" or "peasant" type of shoulder-and-sleeve-in-one, is again fashionable.

Beautiful Wall Coatings for Homes.

In line with the progress of all other things in these modern days is the beautiful, perfect and sanitary wall coatings for our homes. Alabastine is the name of a rich, soft and velvety preparation for the decoration of walls and ceilings. It adheres to the walls of its own adhesive qualities. It is inexpensive, clean, artistic and so easily put on that any one can follow the printed directions on every package. Any shade or tint is easily produced. Alabastine is proof against insects or disease germs so prevalent in wall paper. It does not rub off and flake like kalsomine. A complete color plan for the walls of the home and stencils to help make the home beautiful, together with a book about home decorations and samples of color effects will all be sent free by the Alabastine Company, 482 Grandville avenue, Grand Rapids, Mich. This liberal offer to home decorators deserves careful perusal.

WESTERN CANADA

What J. J. Hill, the Great Railroad Magnate, Says About its Wheat-Producing Powers

"The greatest need of this country [United States] in another generation or two will be the providing of homes for its people and producing sufficient for them. The days of our prominence as a wheat exporting country are gone. Canada is to be the great wheat country."

Upwards of 125 Million Bushels of Wheat

were harvested in 1909. Average of the three provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba will be upwards of 23 bushels per acre.

Free homesteads of 160 acres, and adjoining pre-emptions of 160 acres (at $3 per acre), are to be had in the choicest districts.

Schools convenient, climate excellent, soil the very best, railways close at hand, building lumber cheap, fuel easy to get and reasonable in price, water easily procured; mixed farming a success. HOT WAVE MYSTERY.

The Unbearable Conditions in New York's Congested Districts.

Few persons have any idea of the misery that is endured by the poor and the near-poor of New York City during the hot waves that make life fairly unbearable even in the country. They might as well be so many beans in the cooking jar of an old-time brick oven, these poor devils, hived as they are in the brick heaps of Manhattan. Like a gigantic storage battery, brick and stone and steel absorb heat only to send it forth again. It is the refinement of cruelty. Helpless humanity has its misery baked into it by day and sweated out of it at night. Endured? Yes, by thousands, but not by all. There are many babies, children who are physically weak, fathers and especially mothers whose health has been impaired by too much work and worry, and grandparents whose power of resistance has become lessened by age—these perish most miserably, for it is only the very strong who can endure continuous broiling several days at a time in those stifling holes that are by courtesy called tenement rooms and flats.

It is no wonder that at such times the recreation piers are crowded all day and far into the night with men, women and children. These piers, built by the city along the water front, are a godsend to the poor who live in crowded tenements. Equally valuable to the young people on a hot day are the swimming baths. These are crowded and there is always a long line of children awaiting their turn. Along the river front crowds of boys enjoy a dip in the cooling water, with one eye open all the time for "de cop." Police regulations are a little lax on hot days. Stern justice is tempered with mercy and the boys are permitted to take their informal bath without interruption, unless "de cop" happens to have a grouch.

The rules which govern the parks are relaxed, too. The benches are filled all day with men who take surreptitious naps while pretending to read newspapers. And the "sparrow cop" or park policeman ignores the violation of the rules and even looks into the distance when he comes on the dog-tired man sleeping on the sun-burned turf. At night these numbers are greatly increased by men who have been doing some kind of work during the day. All these are usually without homes and consequently somewhat indifferent about results. Others there are, however, men with homes and families, who are actually driven out by the heat in their cramped tenement rooms and seek the park for relief. It is not a happy sight, when men are driven to such extremities.

JAPS IN PERU.

Restless Workers Trying Out New Territory in South America.

News comes from Tokio that the restless workers of the Emperor's domain have discovered a new outlet from overcrowded Japan, this time in Peru. The Meiji Shokumin Goshi Kaisha, which is nothing but an emigration company, despite its name, has sent 800 laborers to Peru within the last six months and is now canvassing for 500 more.

A Japanese in Peru must be a new spectacle. The Chinese have been there for years, but the eastward tide of Japanese to America had not found anything to attract numbers to the South American republics. Labor is so cheap there that it hardly appears possible that any number of Japanese could be found to compete with the half-breed peon of the Andean country.

The news from Japanese sources has it that the laborers bound for Peru are going to work on sugar plantations and in the rubber forests. Those on the plantations are promised 60 cents a day; the laborers among the rubber trees will receive $1.25. The emigration company holds out the lure that living expenses in Peru will amount to only $4 a month. If the Japanese work diligently and live economically they will be able to save about $10 a month against the time when they desire to return to the home and be little millionaires among their former associates.

Just one stumbling block has the Tokio emigration company found in its path. The Japanese of the coolie class believe that all North Americans are barbarians who will stone them and bully them on slight provocation; they want to know if the South Americans are not ainu, or savages. To offset the coolie distrust, the company has had to include in its prospectus some reassuring statements regarding the peaceful habits and general lovableness of the Peruvians.

Flowery Sentences Retained.

"The mantle of darkness" and "the dome of the sky" are survivals from the days when the sky was believed to be a solid dome resting upon the edge of the earth, over which blankets of different colors hung at dawn and dusk.

THE DIVORCE QUESTION.

Varying Laws of Individual States Produce Curious Results.

The question of divorce was among the many matters which the framers of the constitution left to the decision of the inhabitants of the various States. There is only one State in the Union that does not recognize divorce. This is South Carolina. There the courts do not grant decrees of divorce, and a marriage ceremony is of no force when either of the contracting parties has been divorced, even though the divorce had been perfectly legal in the State where it had been obtained.

The confusion resulting from the varying laws of the individual States on the divorce question has had numerous illustrations, and the conflict of jurisdictions has produced some curious results. A compiler of these happenings relates how one resident of New York moved to Connecticut and there found a lady who pleased him more than his wife. He accordingly procured a Connecticut divorce and married his new affinity. She naturally supposed that a marriage acknowledged in Connecticut by law and by her friends would be legal anywhere. But when her husband died she was amazed to discover that neither she nor her children had any share in his real estate in New York.

In another case the wife of a New Yorker obtained a divorce in Rhode Island. The husband refused to have an attorney appear for him in the action. After gaining her freedom she went to Europe, taking the children. Upon her return to New York the courts decided that the husband had an equal right to the children, without respect to the Rhode Island decree. In Nevada, on the technicality of the residence clause, a decision was rendered denying the petition of a wife from New York which will affect the issue in more than a score of pending cases. In Connecticut a divorce was granted to a man whose former wife had secured at her old home in Georgia a decree perfectly legal in that State, on the strength of which she had married again.

There is also the story of the man who paid a double fee to an attorney in Rhode Island—one for having his wife bring a suit for divorce against him in Massachusetts and another for services in procuring the divorce in Rhode Island of another woman from her husband so as to enable him to marry her after his divorce had been obtained.

Divorce statistics compiled by the census bureau for the ten years preceding 1906 show that while Illinois heads the list of States in the number of divorces granted, these numbering 82,000, Indiana exceeds all others in the number of divorces as related to population. Delaware shows the smallest percentage, 16 to every 100,000, and, singular as it may seem, New York and New Jersey come next in the lower percentage, each being 23. The total number of divorces granted in New York State from 1887 to 1906 was 29,125, as against 15,355 for the preceding decade.

MADE HUMAN SACRIFICES.

Russian Police Capture Members of Sect That Has Slain Many.

For several months the police of the Perm government in Russia have endeavored to trace a number of persons who have mysteriously disappeared from that district, says the Washington Post. These people were mostly young men and girls. Recently they received information that led them to connect the disappearances with a certain religious sect, known as the Krausobosnik. The police discovered that the sect met at a deserted spot, and one of these gatherings was watched.

The people were found to be worshiping idols rudely carved in wood, both the priests and their audiences being in a state of frenzied exaltation. At a sort of altar a boy was lying bound, while over him stood a priest chanting in a strange tongue and holding a long knife. There could be little doubt that a human sacrifice was about to take place and the police promptly arrested all those present.

On a search being made, within a cave hidden by the rocks, the police exhumed a number of bodies which were identified as those of persons for whom they were seeking. It is stated that the victims had all gone voluntarily to death. Charges of murder will be preferred against all the members of the sect.

A Paradise for Suffragists.

According to a French explorer just returned from Africa, that district of the Sahara inhabited by the tribe called Tuaregs is really a paradise for suffragists. The members of the tribe are as a whole crafty, cruel and treacherous, but they are ardent apostles of femininism. The Tuareg women are indeed privileged beings. They have camels of their own, which their husbands are not allowed to mount, and their household duties are, so to say, nil.

They are allowed to have an admirer who saddles their camels and runs errands for them. The attitude of their admirer must remain strictly platonic, for if he starts making love to the lady the husband flies into a temper, and an angry Tuareg becomes a dangerous creature. According to the laws of the country the Tuareg woman need not follow her husband unless she wants to do so, nor is she compelled to serve her spouse. She is educated, for she can read, and this accomplishment, not shared by the other sex, gives her a privileged position in so far that she acts as judge or arbitrator in all difficult cases.

Horses Scare at Automobile.

Monday evening about 5:30 o'clock of this week, Henry Milliman and son Frank were driving up main street on their way home. Just west of the post office they passed an automobile which frightened the horses and they were unable to manage them. The horses shied to the north side and run into a shade tree in front of Mahlon Baker's house. The tongue and doubletrees were broken letting the horses loose from the wagon. The one horse stopped while the other one run to the B. & O. railroad where it was caught. When the wagon struck the tree, Henry Milliman failed to stay on and in a short time he was found picking himself up in the road several feet away, without any injuries. The automobile stopped immediately and the men came to their assistance and the broken parts were remedied and in a short time they were ready to move on. The black horse was all unstrung and made great leaps when starting up.

Saved From the Grave

"I had about given up hope after nearly four years of suffering from a severe lung trouble," writes Mrs. M. L. Dix, of Clarksville, Tenn. "Often the pain in my chest would be almost unbearable and I could not do any work, but Dr. King's New Discovery has made me feel like a new person. Its the best medicine made for the throat and lungs." Obstinate coughs, stubborn colds, hay fever, lagrippe, asthma, croup, bronchitis and hemorrhages, hoarseness and whooping cough yield quickly to this wonderful medicine. Try it, 50c and $1 Trial bottles free. Guaranteed by H. L. Dunkle.

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Telegraphic Information Gathered by the Few for the Enlightenment of the Many.

Judge J. W. Adair is Dead.

Judge Joseph W. Adair, of Columbia City, Ind., who underwent an operation at a Fort Wayne hospital, is dead. With him when death came was his daughter, Mrs. E. K. Strong, and her husband, of Columbia City, and the Rev. J. W. Ziegler, pastor of the Columbia City English Lutheran church, of which Judge Adair had been a member for many years. Judge Adair had been in failing health and under the care of a physician for more than a year. His affliction was in the form of a cancerous growth in the abdomen, which refused to yield to medical treatment. Twelve weeks ago he was taken to his bed and for six weeks his condition had been critical, an operation finally being decided upon as the only chance for relief. The death of the Hon. Joseph W. Adair not only deprives Whitley County and Columbia City of one of its foremost citizens and public spirited men, but takes from the bar of the State one of its keenest and most widely read lawyers. It takes from the list of those men who sat upon the bench distributing with impartiality, the justice ordained by law, one whose name had been recorded near the top. It removes one more of those men, who by their efforts have attained distinction and merited honor.

Narrow Escape From Death.

Fire in the shaft above their heads threatened the lives of five men working in a caisson 125 feet below ground in the foundation of the new municipal building under Brooklyn bridge terminal, New York. Dense volumes of smoke poured from the shaft, where electric wires had become crossed, and had ignited combustibles nearby. Fearing the men would be suffocated the foreman on the work hastily ordered the steel bucket lowered. The men scrambled into it and the car shot them up through the smoke. They reached the surface in a fainting condition, but were soon revived. Firemen flooded the caisson, putting out the blaze.

Pencil Pierces Her Eye.

Nellie, the 11-year-old daughter of Harry Woodington, of Mount Holly, N. J., is in a serious, but not dangerous condition as a result of shocking accident while on her way to school. While carrying a nicely sharpened pencil she slipped and fell, the pencil point piercing the eye and penetrating the brain. The sight of the eye will be destroyed, but up to this time there does not seem to be any serious effect from the injury to the brain. The attending physician, however, is not certain as to the outcome of the little girl's injuries.

A Tragedy of the Air.

The German balloon Pommern, which made an ascension at Stettin, Germany, met with a series of accidents which ended in disaster in the Baltic Sea. Three men lost their lives, including the radical member of the Reichstag, Werner Hugo Del Brueck. He and another member of the party were dorwned, a third occupant of the car picked up unconscious and died from his injuries, while the fourth was rescued in a serious condition.

Little Boy Dying of Drink.

Frank Stachura, 6 years old, is though to be dying from what the physicians say is acute alcoholic poisoning. The child was found unconscious in an alley in Chicago, Ill. His condition has grown more serious. It is believed whisky was given him by his companions.

Accidentally Shot by a Boy.

Harry Fagin, son of former United States Marshal Vivian Fagin, was shot and killed in an office in the Palace Hotel, Cincinnati, Ohio. Bernard Niehaus, a stenographer, 15 years of age, did the shooting. It was accidental, as the boy did not know the pistol was loaded.

Owes Million; Assets $400.

Liabilities of $1,120,000 and assets of $400 were listed by Joseph G. Ebersole in a petition in bankruptcy filed in the United States District Court at Cincinnati, Ohio. The bankruptcy is voluntary and personal to Mr. Ebersole.

Farmer Kills Himself.

Henry Appman, a farmer, aged 45, living near Evansville, Ind., committed suicide by taking a dose of laudanum. No cause is assigned for his act. He is survived by a family.

Engraved First Greenbacks.

John Gillham, 79 years old, who assisted in engraving the steel plates for the "Greenbacks" used by the United States, died recently at his home in Kansas City, Mo.

270,000 MEN WALK OUT OF COAL MINES

Two-Thirds of Bituminous Supply of the United States Threatened in the Struggle.

SUSPENSION FOR SHORT TIME?

Trouble Is Not Called a Strike and Hope Is Expressed That It Will Be Soon Over.

Two hundred and seventy thousand mine workers, producing more than two-thirds of the total output of bituminous coal in the United States, laid down their tools the other night for an indefinite period. From various sections of the country optimistic reports were received that the suspension would be of short duration and that the supply of coal above ground, with the output of nonunion mines, would be sufficient to keep the wheels of industry moving until new wage contracts were negotiated. Neither the coal operators nor the United Mine Workers admit that the trouble amounts to a strike. They prefer to term it a "suspension," but whatever name it goes under the production of coal has stopped in the districts affected and no one is able to say when it will be resumed.

The total bituminous coal production in the United States in 1907, which was the banner year, was 394,759,112 short tons. In 1908 the production, due to the trade depression, fell off about 60,000,000 tons, but last year it increased to close to the 1907 total. The production of anthracite amounts to approximately 80,000,000 tons a year.

In the eleven States affected by the suspension, the shutdown is complete in all except Pennsylvania. In the latter State only the Pittsburg district, employing about 35,000 men and producing about 60,000,000 tons, is involved. In central Pennsylvania a majority of the mines are not organized, and as the nonunion mines have posted notices of an increase in wages, it is said no effort will be made by the union to have them shut down. Internal strife among the United Mine Workers may prolong the suspension beyond present indications, according to those who are familiar with conditions.

HALLEY COMET DRAWING NEAR

Earth Will Pass Through Tail of Traveler on May 18.

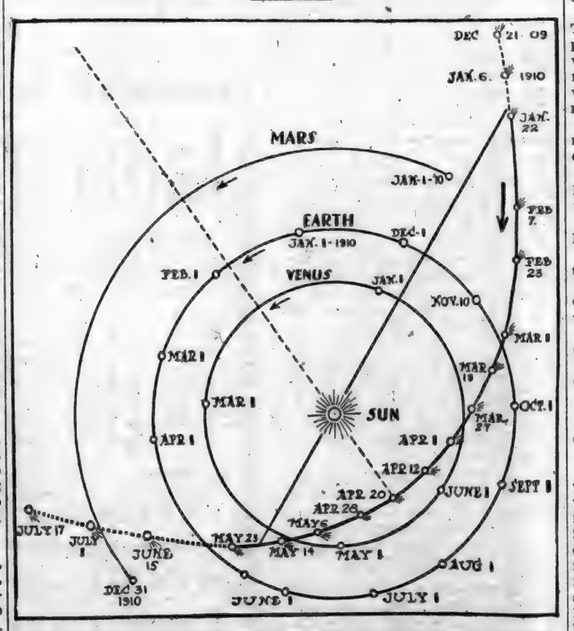
Halley's comet, coming toward the earth's orbit at a rate of nearly 2,500,000 miles a day, is rapidly approaching the point where it will be observable in the sky again, reappearing from behind the sun where it had been obscured since March 26. On account of its position to the right of the sun the comet will soon be visible in the morning sky before sunrise, when any observer who has the desire to arise before the sun will see Halley's comet, then about 125,000,000 miles from the earth, a brilliant spectacle in the skies of dawn.

On the 20th of April Halley's comet will be at its nearest point to the sun and will therefore be at its brightest, as its brilliancy corresponds with its nearness to the sun. But since the comet keeps coming closer to the earth until May 18, it will seem more brilliant to us after that date, when it will be visible in the evening sky. On the 18th of May the earth will pass through the tail of Halley's comet. What will happen in that case? The comet itself will be 13,300,000 miles from us, the nearest approach of any heavenly body to the earth except the asteroid Eros.

Prof. Edwin Brant Frost, director of Yerkes observatory, has already determined by means of the spectroscope that the comet's tail has cyanogen gas as it predominant element. This discovery has led to the theory that the earth will be devasted by the poisonous vapors of the gas, a theory discredited by Professors Frost and Barnard because of the exceedingly rarified atmosphere of the comet's tail. They point out that the earth passed through a comet's tail in 1861, and that no one observed anything unusual.

Although the principal astronomers of the world deprecate any idea of disaster attending the passage of the earth through the comet's tail, others, notably Flammarion, advance theories that instant death to all life on the earth will be the result of the contact of the planet with the luminous tail which trails some possible 100,000,000 miles behind the comet. If the worst does not happen—and all exact astronomers expect little disturbance—the spectacle of the comet in the evening sky from that time till the end of the month will be one of such magnificence as has distinguished Halley's comet in its many appearances every seventy-five to seventy-nine years.

HOW THE COMET IS RUSHING NEAR EARTH.



12-YEAR-OLD GIRL ABDUCTED.

Lucyle Wooka, 12 years old, daughter of F. G. Woodka, a wealthy Polish butcher of Toledo, was kidnaped at 1 o'clock the other afternoon by an unknown man and woman. The Woodka girl was on her way to school for the afternoon session when she was accosted by the pair, who induced her to go to the Union Station, where tickets were purchased for Chicago. Woodka can give no explanation of the abduction and declares that he has no relatives who might be implicated in the affair. There has so far been no hint of ransom.

BANK'S LOSS IS $2,000,000.

Montreal Institution Is Heavily Mulcted in Mexican Crash.

Considerable interest is taken in the smash of the United States Banking Company of the City of Mexico, in which the Bank of Montreal (Canada) is heavily involved. The first information in connection with the bank crash stated that the losses would amount to upward of $7,000,000, this being Mexican money, but it is now conceded that this is too high. It is understood, however, that the Bank of Montreal will be interested at least to the extent of $2,000,000, and just what assets will be set off against this claim is hard at present to arrive at.

BEVERIDGE SCORES TARIFF LAW

Makes an Impassioned Speech Before Convention of Republicans.

After an impassioned attack on the Payne-Aldrich tariff law by Senator Albert J. Beveridge the Republican State Convention of Indiana went on record in Indianapolis in favor of a new revision of the tariff schedules under a tariff commission plan. Delegates and galleries gave Senator Beveridge storms of applause as he reached climax after climax in attacking the action of those who enacted the present law, against which he voted in the United States Senate. "I could not stand for it then, and I can not stand for it now," said the Senator repeatedly, as he enumerated the faults he found in the law. He said also that President Taft agreed with him in his demands, but "they gave us a mockery."

The platform indorses President Taft's administration, the "Roosevelt policies," and Senator Beveridge's work in Congress. It assures him of re-election. While it stands for a revision of tariff schedules, it insists on maintaining the protective principle.

The following nominations were made by acclamation, there being only one candidate for each office:

Secretary of State—Otis E. Gulley, Danville.

Auditor—John E. Reed, Muncie.

Clerk Supreme Court—Edward V. Fitzpatrick, Portland.

Judge Supreme Court, Second District—Oscar H. Montgomery, Seymour.

Treasurer of State—Jonce Monyhan, Orleans.

Attorney General—Finley P. Mount, Crawfordsville.

PAINTERS ON A STRIKE.

One Thousand Men Fail to Report for Work in Chicago.

Painters and decorators in Chicago who have been denied an increase in wages by contractors failed to report for work at houses, apartment buildings and business structures throughout the city the other day. The strike followed the threat of the labor union that unless the members received an advance in wages of 5 cents an hour a walkout would result. A number of contractors signed the scale demanded by the union. About 1,000 men failed to resume their work at 8 a. m. It was said that 4,000 painters would be idle by night.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY.

Andrew Swanson, of Becker, Minn., recently sold a hog to a live stock dealer at that place for $58.50.

For the fourth time within four months, the 4,000 employes of the Waltham Watch Company's big factory at Waltham, Mass., have been notified that the plant will be shut down to currtail production.

The Nassau mine, near Hibbing, Minn., which was controlled by the Pittsburg Iron Ore Company, has passed to the control of the Interstate Iron Company, which is the mining division of the Jones & Laughlin Iron Company. The Nassau adjoins the Longyear, which is also controlled by Jones & Laughlin, and the two properties will make a large stripping proposition. The Nassau is listed by the tax commission at 4,000,000 tons.

It is expected that more land will be sown to wheat and oats and other grains in the region about Sauk Center, Minn., as the potato crop last year was not so successful, and farmers are selling potatoes at 20 cents a bushel to the cities. Many of the farmers also will grow corn to fatten hogs and cattle. Many acres of land have been broken up in this vicinity. Last year was the most profitable to farmers in this territory for many years, and land is high-priced.

A Holstein cow owned by the Dairy Department of the University of Missouri in one year produced more human food in her milk than is contained in the complete carcasses of four steers weighing 1,250 pounds each. This statement, impossible as it seems, is not only true, but does not even do full justice to the cow. The solids in the milk which are completely digested and used by the body are counted against the entire carcass of the steer which is only in part edible.

ELECTION RESULTS IN SEVERAL STATES

Illinois Poll Shows That the Wets Have Regained All the Big Dry Centers.

SOCIALISTS WIN IN MILWAUKEE

Illinois.

"Wet" victories were recorded Tuesday in almost every important center of Illinois where the saloon question was at issue. In the cherished "dry" strongholds of Rockford, Decatur, De Kalb, Dixon, Mattoon, Keithsburg, Shelbyville and a long list of other local option towns the anti-saloon forces were routed. In the saloon towns where the "drys" made their hardest fights—Springfield, Danville, Aurora, Bloomington, Woodstock, Freeport and others—the "wets" carried the day, in many cases by larger majorities than they obtained two years ago. The most important victories gained by the "drys" were at Monmouth and Canton, where the saloons were voted out. In the light of the election returns, Illinois plainly has reversed itself on the saloon question since two years ago. In all parts of the State the pendulum swing from the dry to the wet sentiment has made itself manifest.

Wisconsin.

While on the face of the early returns neither the liquor people nor the drys had much to boast of, neither gaining any considerable new ground, the drys carried the fight into new territory and into large cities, compelling the wets to put up strong fights to hold their own. In Milwaukee Social Democrats made a clean sweep and elected Emil Seidel Mayor by a plurality of more than 3,000, seven Aldermen-at-large and carried fourteen wards. The Socialists will control the city for the next two years. Seidel's plurality is the largest of any party in a similar contest in the history of the city. The feature of the campaign this spring was that the platforms of the three parties were essentially the same, the Democratic and the Republican parties espousing Social Democratic principles like the referendum, the initiative, the recall and home rule for Milwaukee, all four of which were first espoused by the Socialists, at which time they were derided by the other parties.

Michigan.

In Michigan the total vote gives majorities for "wets" of 15,572 and for "drys" of 9,353, forcing "drys" to abandon plan to force vote on statewide prohibition. Complete returns on the local option election held in thirty-six counties show that twenty counties out of the thirty-six have decreed the abolition of the saloon for two years, while sixteen repudiated local option and declared for the licensed saloon. Two hundred and eighty-two thirst parlors, of the 1,161 whose existence depended on the vote, were put out of business. The map of Michigan shows forty-three counties of the state in the "wet" column and forty where the saloon must go. It is this fact which satisfies the "wets" that Michigan will never go totally "dry" and which causes them to claim Tuesday's election to themselves. The "dry" counties are scattered over the lower peninsula, the upper being entirely "wet."

Nebraska.

Practically the only issue in the Nebraska municipal elections was the question of saloon license, and returns from fifty towns and villages in eastern and central sections of the state show no marked change from a year ago, the advantage, if anything, being slightly with the "wets." The notable victory for the "dry" element was the capture of Havelock, the Burlington railroad shop town, outside of Lincoln city limits, which voted against license by 93 majority. Havelock the past year has been the "source of supply" for Lincoln. Offsetting the "dry" victory at Havelock is the return of Beatrice to license after a year without saloons. The "drys" retain Tecumseh, where another bitter fight was waged. Most of the larger towns aside from Beatrice voted for license.

FATHER IS SLAIN BY BOY.

Mother and Four Children Charged with Death of Family Head.

Mrs. Elias Shafer and her four children are in jail in Berryville, Ark., charged with the murder of Mrs. Shafer's husband near Blue Springs. It is charged that one of the boys took Shafer's revolver from under his pillow while he slept and killed him. The boy said that his father threatened to kill the whole family.

Bank Robbed of $10,000.

The safe of the First National Bank in Randolph, Neb., was blown open and robbed of $10,000 in gold and currency early the other day. Town Marshal Carroll was held up on the street, bound and gagged, relieved of his weapons and placed in a bank room while the vault was wrecked with seven explosions, requiring forty-five minutes. Three masked men did the job and escaped.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of Chicago trade says:

"Business generally exhibits a prompt response to the seasonable weather. Payments through the banks, deposits and loans, are seen to be far above all previous records, a convincing testimonial to improve activity in the leading industries and investments. Movements have become remarkably extended in heavy materials, raw supplies and factory outputs, but those of grain, live stock and provisions show declines. Forwardings of general merchandise to the interior exceed those of a year ago.

"High prices still affect the markets for the principal foodstuffs and buyers operate cautiously. Farm reports reflect gratifying progress in seeding, and the anxiety to complete spring work soon accounts for smaller crop marketings at this time.

"Heavy deliveries indicate that manufacturers increase outputs of machinery, implements, hardware, leather and brass and woodwork. The market for factory needs reflect strong buying against future consumption, and hides recovered 1 cent of the recent decline. Building operations here and at interior points compare favorably in the aggregate with this time last year and the eagerness of buyers causes firmer prices.

"Despite the largely increased resources of the banks the discount rate for choice commercial paper is held firmly at 4½@5 per cent.

"Bank clearings, $269,380,676, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1909 by 6.4 per cent, and compare with $234,232,663 in 1908. Failures reported in the Chicago district numbered 27, as against 24 last week, 21 in 1909 and 16 in 1908. Those with liabilities over $5,000 numbered 8, as against 10 last week, 4 in 1909 and 3 in 1908."

NEW YORK.

Trade reports are rather more irregular, with distribution rather less active than in the preceding two weeks. Retail trade so far has been better than a year ago, but from many centers reports say the volume of jobbing trade is not up to expectations, for which high prices and industrial unrest are assigned as the reasons. The two features really attracting chief interest have been the outburst of activity in agricultural sections and the many movements toward readjustment in industrial lines.

Business failures for the week ending with March 31 in the United States were 229, as against 231 last week, 204 in the like week of 1909, 247 in 1908, 137 in 1907 and 151 in 1906.—Bradstreet's.

The Master of Appleby

THE BOWEN-MERRILL COMPANY

CHAPTER XVII.—(Continued.)

When they were gone, Dick laughed sardonically.

"Saw you ever such a cool-blood little jade in all your life? 'Twas with me as it was with you; I, too, stumbled upon them, and the colonel bustled me and set his heel on my foot. I daresay I should have had myself in irons in another moment but for Madge. She slipped in between and introduced us as sweetly as you please."

"Nevertheless," said I, "the colonel recognized us both."

"No! Think you so?"

"'Tis certain enough to play upon. What we do now must be done quickly or not at all. What have you overheard?"

"Never a word; less than nothing of any interest to Dan Morgan."

"We must try again. 'Twill surely be talked of here if the army is about to move. Do you take a turn in the anteroom and meet me in a quarter of an hour at the outer door."

At the word, Dick promptly lost himself in the throng whilst I made a slow circuit of the refreshment. Once I thought I had the clue when a girl hanging on the arm of an infantry lieutenant said: "Will it be true that you will presently go out to hunt the rebels down, Mr. Thorncroft?" But the prudent lieutenant smiled and put her off cleverly, leaving his fair questioner—and me—none the wiser.

I went on, drifting aimlessly from group to group and dallying of set purpose. If I had read Colonel Tarleton's glance aright, the moments were growing diamond-precious; but as yet neither half of my errand was done. Come what might, I must see Margery again and have her tell me where and how to find the priest; and 'twas borne in upon me that she would come back to see me as soon as she could be free of her partner in the dance.

The forecast as to my lady had its fulfillment while yet the spinetter was striking out the final chords of the minuet. A lady dropped her kerchief, and I was before her swain in stooping to pick it up. As I bowed low in returning the bit of lace to its owner, a voice that I had learned to know and love whispered in my ear.

"Make your way to the clock landing of the stair; I must have speech with you," it said; and for a wonder I was cool enough to obey with no more than a sidelong glance at my lady passing on the arm of another epauletted dangler. She was before me at the meeting place, and there was no laughing welcome in the deep-welled eyes. Instead, they flashed me a look that made me wince.

"What folly is this, sir?" she demanded. "Will you never have done taking my honor and your own life into your reckless hands?"

I bowed my head to the storm. With the dagger of my miserable errand sticking in my heart there was no fight in me.

"I am but come to do your bidding," I said, slowly, for the words cost me sorely in the coin of anguish. "I had your letter, and if you will say how I may find Father Matthieu——"

She broke me in the midst. "Could I guess that you would come here, into the very noose of the gallows? Oh, how you do heap scorn on scorn upon me! Once you made me give silent consent to a falsehood you told; twice, nay, thrice, you have made me disloyal to the king; and now you come again to make me look the world in the face and tell a smiling lie to shield you!" And with this she put her face in her hands and began to sob.

Now we were only measurably isolated on the stair, and some sense of the hazard we took—a hazard involving her as well as Richard and myself—steadied me with a sudden shock.

"Control yourself," I whispered. "What is done, is done; and the misery is not all yours to suffer. Tell me how I may find the priest, and I will do my errand and begone."

"You can not stay to find him now—you must not," she insisted, coming out of the fit of despair with a rebound. "He is in the town—indeed, I know not where he is just now. Can you not endure it a little longer, Captain Ireton?"

"No," said I, sullenly. "I have been living a lie all these months to the friend I love best, and I will not do it more."

Could I be mistaken? Surely there was a flash not of anger in the eyes that were lifted to mine, and a tremulous note of eagerness in the voice that said: "Then Dick does not know?—you have not told him?"

"No; I have told no one."

"Poor Dick!" she said, softly. "I thought he knew."

She paused, and in the pause it flashed upon me how she had wronged my dear lad; how she had thought he would make brazen love to her knowing she was the wife of another. I thanked heaven in my heart that I had been able to right him thus far.

After a time she said: "Why did you make me marry you, Monsieur John? Oh, I have racked my brain so for the answer to that question. I know you said it was to save my honor. But surely we have paid a heavier penalty than any that could have been laid upon me had you left me as I was."

"I was but a short-sighted fool, and no prophet," I rejoined, striving hard to keep the bitterness of soul out of my words. "At the moment it seemed the only way out of the pit of doubt into which my word to Colonel Tarleton had plunged you. But there was another motive. You saw the paper I signed that night, with Lieutenant Tybee and your father's factor for the witnesses?"

"Yes."

"'Twas the last will and testament of one John Ireton, gentleman," in which he bequeathed to Margery, his wife, his estate of Appleby Hundred."

"Appleby Hundred?" she echoed. "But my father——"

"Your father holds but a confiscator's title, and it, with many others, has been voided by the Congress of North Carolina. Richard Jennifer is my dear friend, and you——"

"I begin to understand—a little," she said, and now her voice was low and she would not look at me. Then, in the same low tone: "But now—now you would be free again?"

"How can you ask? As matters stand, I have marred your life and Dick's most hopelessly. Do you wonder that I have been reckless of the hangman? that I care no jot for my interfering life at this moment, save as the taking of it may involve you and Richard?"

"No, surely," she said, still speaking softly. And now she gave me her eyes to look into, and the hardness was all melted out of them. "Did you come here, under the shadow of the gallows, to tell me this, Monsieur John?"

"There shall be no more half-confidences between us, dear lady. I had my leave of General Morgan on the score of our need for better information of Lord Cornwallis' designs; but I should have come in any case—wanting the leave, my commission as a spy, or any other excuse."

"To tell me this?"

"To do the bidding of your letter, and to say that whilst I live I shall be shamed for the bitter words I gave you when I was sick."

"I mind them not; I had forgotten them," she said.

"But I have not forgotten, nor ever shall."

We had talked on through the measures of a cotillion, and the dancers, warm and wearied, were beginning to fill the entrance hall below. Our poor excuse for privacy would be gone in a minute or two, and she spoke quickly.

"You shall see Father Matthieu, and I will help you. But you must not linger here. In a few days the army will be moving northward—oh, what have I said!"

"Nothing," I cut in swiftly; "you are speaking now to your husband—not to the spy. Go on, if you please."

"We shall return to Appleby Hundred within the fortnight. There, if you are still—if you desire it, you may meet the good cure, and——"

A much-bepowdered captain of cavalry was coming up the stair to claim her, and I was fain to let her go. But at my passing of her to the step below, I whispered: "I shall keep the tryst—my first and last with you, dear lady. Adieu."

So soon as she was gone I made haste to find Richard, having, as I feared, greatly overstayed my appointment to meet him at the door. He was not among the promenaders in the hall, so I began to drift again, through the ballroom and so on to where the spread table stood ringed with its groups of nibblers. I had made no more than half the round of the refectory when I saw Margery standing in the curtained arch, looking this way and that, with anxious terror written plainly in her face.

"What is it?" I asked, when she had found me out.

"'Tis the worst that could happen," she whispered. "You are discovered, both of you. Colonel Tarleton was too shrewd for us. He has let it be known among the officers that there are two spies in the house, and now—Hark! what is that?"

We were standing in a deep window-bay and I drew the curtain an inch or two. The air without was filled with the trampling of hoofbeats on greensward. A light-horse troop was surrounding the manor house.

I drew her arm in mine and led her back to the ball-room; 'twas now come to this, that open publicity was our best safeguard. "We must find Dick," said I. "Have you seen him?"

"No."

Together we made the slow circuit of the dancing-room, but Jennifer was not to be found. Out of the tail of my eye I saw a soldier slipping in here and there to stand statue-like against the wall. This brought it to a matter of minutes, of seconds, mayhap, and still we looked in vain for Dick.

"Oh, why did you bring him here? He will surely be taken!" Her voice was tremulous with fear, and I answered as I could, being sore at heart, in spite of all, that her chief concern should be for Richard.

But by now my purpose was well taken, and though it appeared that Richard Jennifer was more than ever my successful rival, I pledge you, my dears, I had no thought of leaving him behind. So we made another slow round of the rooms, and whilst we were looking for Dick I spoke in guarded whispers to warn my lady of Falconnet's return. But the warning was not needed.

Her shudder of loathing shook the hand on my arm. "That man! Oh, Monsieur John! I fear him day and night! If I could but run away; but we are not finding Dick—we must find him quickly!"

There was no other place to look save in the entrance hall, and at the door one of the statue-like soldiers took two steps aside and barred the way. I faced about and we plunged once again into the throng, but not before I had a glimpse of Richard in the hall beyond. When the chance offered, I bent to whisper.

"Dick is in the hall, looking for me, so you to him and warn him. I may not pass the door, as you have seen."

"He will not escape without you," she demurred.

"Tell him he must. Tell him I say he must!"

She glanced over her shoulder with a look in her eyes that made me think of a wounded bird fluttering in the net of the fowler.

"Oh, 'tis hard, hard!" she murmured.

I snatched the word from her lips. "To choose between love and wifely duty? Then I make it a command. Go, quickly!"

She went at that, and I made my way slowly to the far side of the ball-room, taking post in a deep-recessed window giving upon the lawn. Though it was January and the night was chill and raw, the rooms were summer warm with the breath of the crush, and some one had swung the casement.

Without, I could hear the horses of the waiting troop champing restlessly at their bits, and now and again the low gentling words of the riders. Why the colonel did not spring his trap at once I could not guess; though I learned later that he had magnified our two-man spying venture into a patriot foray meant to capture the whole houseful of British officers at a swoop, and was taking his measures accordingly.

'Twas while I was listening to the champing horses that I heard my name whispered in the darkness beyond the open casement. I turned slowly, and the nearest of the soldier watchers began to edge his way toward my window.

"'Tis I—Dick Jennifer," whispered the voice without. "Swing the casement a little wider and out with you. Be swift about it."

"I am fair trapped," I whispered back. "Make off as you can."

"And leave you behind?" So much I heard; and then came sounds of a struggle; the breath-catching of two men locked in a strangler's hold, a fall on the turf under the window, followed by the soft thudding of fist blows. I could bear it no longer. The edging soldier had come within arm's reach, and when I swung the casement a little wider, he laid a hand on my shoulder.

"In the name of the king!" he said; and this was all he had time or leave to say. For at the summons I drove my fist against the point of his wagging jaw, to send him plunging among the dancers, and the recoil of the blow carried me clear of the window-seat with what a din and clamor of a hue and cry to speed the parting guest as you may figure for yourselves.

The alighting ground of the leap was the body of Dick's late antagonist lying prone beneath the window ledge; but the lad himself was up and ready to catch me when I stumbled over the vanquished one.

We darted through the thin line of encircling horsemen and were flying down the broad avenue with all the troopers who had caught sight of us thundering at our heels.

"Courage!" shouted Dick. "There is help ahead if we can live to reach the gate!"

The help was nearer at hand. Half way down the box-bordered drive the shrill yell of the border partisans rose from the shrubbery on the right, and a voice cried out:

"Stiddy, boys! stiddy till ye can see the whites o' their eyes! Now, then; give it to 'em hot and heavy!"

A haphazard banging of guns followed and the pursuit drew rein in some confusion, giving us time to reach the great gate and the horse-rail, and to loose and mount the gray and the sorrel we had marked out.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Terre Haute poultry fanciers have formed a corporation, as an educational enterprise, to hold monthly meetings and to promote a poultry show annually. The membership is limited to fifty.

Hundreds of fish are dying in Fish creek and St. Joe rover, each of Auburn, the result, it is alleged, of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company emptying a thirty thousand gallon tank of ammonia into the stream. Large fish have been picked up along the shore.

While engaged in exterminating all dogs running at large in the city of Wabash, Partolman Emanuel Hann was attacked and bitten by a dog. Medical treatment was at once given the wound and the animal is being watched to ascertain whether it is suffering from rabies.

Karl Selling, a Fort Wayne youth, submitted to a surgical operation a few weeks ago in order that he might enlist in the navy, a slight deformity of the toes barring him from the service. When the wound had healed, he presented himself a second time for enlistment and was accepted.

The official call for the employes, performers, etc., of the Hagenbeck & Wallace shows, has been issued and all are to report in person to their respective department managers in Peru not later than April 20. The circus will give its initial performance of the season in that city on April 23.

The near approach of Halley's comet is believed to be having a mysterious effect on the hens in the vicinity of Owensville. A hen egg resembling a comet is on exhibition in Owensville and is attracting much attention. The egg has a shell like a tail, four inches long. The hen belongs to Sanford Garrison.

At a recent meeting of poultry fanciers of Portland and vicinity, steps were taken in the organization of the Jay County Poultry Association. Committees on by-laws and on solicitation of new members were appointed and a second meeting will be held to perfect the organization by the election of officers and the adoption of the by-laws.

A. S. Meade, road foreman of engines on the Peru division of the Wabash railroad for a number of years, has resigned, to devote his attention to farming. His successor is Engineer A. F. King, of the Wabash passenger service between Toledo and Montpelier, Ohio. Mr. King will move from Toledo to Peru, and will make his headquarters there.

A big shepherd dog went mad and started on a run through the fields west of Petersburg. It bit a dog belonging to John Stewart, sprang upon and bit a mule belonging to Charles Coffman, and bit a mule valued at $300 owned by Tom Price. The whole country-side pursued the dog with shotguns and rifles, and after a seven-mile run it was killed.

Professor W. C. Latta, of Purdue University, Lafayette, was in Portland last Saturday and organized the young people of the county for the coming corn and domestic science contests to be held this fall under the auspices of the Jay County Farmers' Institute. The contests will be similar to others held in various parts of the State, and open to boys and girls between the ages of 12 and 18.

A plant for the manufacture of peat will be erected at Lakeville, St. Joseph County, next month. The cost of the plant, according to J. H. Van Glahn, consulting engineer of the Peat Products Company, will be $100,000. The factory, which will be in operation by September 1, will employ forty men and will manufacture peat for fuel, fertilizing purposes and filler. The main offices of the company will be in South Bend.

Meri Funk, of Warsaw, is the undisputed rod and reel champion of Kosciusko County. While fishing from the shore of Pike Lake, he caught a pike weighing 16¼ pounds. This is the largest fish ever landed in any of the lakes of this section with a rod and reel. Edgar Haymond caught a pike weighing twenty-seven pounds several years ago, but with a throw line instead of a rod. Mr. Funk worked hard for thirty minutes in landing the big fish.

An electric light bulb, covered with paper, generated sufficient heat to cause a fire and damage to the extent of more than $2,000 in the basement of the H. H. Locker buggy and harness store in Newcastle. In showing a prospective customer a new style buggy a salesman turned on the current and then put the bulb on the floor, while he tore the paper wrapping off the buggy. He threw the paper down on the bulb, hiding it, and some time after he left the basement the fire started. Several new buggies stored in the basement were damaged. The loss is fully covered by insurance.

Ethel, the 6-year-old daughter of Nelson Fishel, of Helmsburg, was disfigured for life while romping with a shepherd dog. The animal suddenly sprang at the little girl and tore off her nose.

Refusing to accept public charity and feeling financially unable to defray the usual funeral expenses themselves, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Barbitsky, of Wabash, buried the body of their child in an ordinary store box last week.

Mrs. E. B. Meyers, aged 70, wife of Prof. Meyers, Principal of the Central School of Elkhart, committed suicide by cutting her throat. Her mind had been affected.

Charles E. Dean, a leading fruit grower of Madison, has six thousand peach trees in full bloom. Present prospects are bright for a big yield both of peaches and apples.

Mizpah Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Fort Wayne, received a class of seventy candidates in a ceremonial session last week. Many prominent Masons from Northern Indiana points were in attendance.

A belled buzzard, which had caught its foot in the forks of a tree, was captured by Lee Kintner, southwest of New Albany, the jingling of its bell attracting his attention. On a band on its leg was inscribed "B. H. Crone, Tyrone, W. Va., July 4, 1886." The bird will be liberated.

The freight car on which he was setting brakes being struck and sideswiped by another freight car at Wabash, A. G. Doell, aged 30, switchman, was thrown and the car hurled over him. Loose oats flowed about him, and only by a valiant struggle was he able to escape being smothered. He was taken to the hospital seriously wounded.

Harold Barnes, of Princeton, was elected president of the Southern Indiana Teachers' Association at their recent meeting. Other officers are as follows: Secretary, Mabel Bishop, Brazil; Treasurer, E. G. Allen, Indianapolis; executive committee, C. M. Marble, Jeffersonville; A. E. Humpky, Edinburg; J. T. Vansandt, Greencastle; W. C. Goble, Greenfield; J. W. Holton, Sullivan.

Omar F. Neff, of Milford, has made an announcement that he is back of the projected electric railway to connect Bremen and Mishawaka. The route of the proposed line is through a rich farming region. With a line running into Mishawaka connection can be easily made with the several trunk lines of steam railways and all of the important interurban lines running across Northern Indiana.

After being a steeple jack for several years, painting many tall stacks and cupolas without a serious accident, Isaac Gunn, of Anderson, is at St. John's hospital and may be crippled for life, one of his feet being badly crushed and broken. Gunn, with other men, was trying to take down a tall water tank at the tin plate mill in North Anderson, when the tank and platform collapsed and Gunn was caught beneath the wreckage.

Alverio Miestian, a Sicilian, six feet two inches in height, and weighing more than two hundred pounds, attempted to chastise an unknown Italian at Elkhart for applying an epithet to his son. He is alleged to have struck him with his fist, but he killed him instantly. The dead man and the son of Miestian were just outside the house and apparently were jesting. After striking the fatal blow Miestian fled, taking his son, aged 15, with him. The police are hunting for him.

Melchert Z. Miller, collector and resident of Port Fulton, an eastern suburb of Jeffersonville, was badly hurt while returning in an interurban car from Louisville by a stone thrown through the window by some one unknown. He received a fracture of the nose and possible injuries to the eye. A second stone thrown through the window a little later caused a panic among the women and children, although it struck no one. The car men think it was an attack by rowdies who had a grudge against the company.

A remarkable run of fox hounds began three miles south of Elizabethtown and continued for twenty-three hours. It was witnessed by many farmers from the neighborhood. A 7-months-old pup, owned by E. E. Sisco, and an 8-year-old dog owned by W. H. McCord started the fox, and later seven fresh dogs were put in the chase against them. After several hours all but the Sisco and McCord dogs, the original starters, had quit the chase. They finally ran the fox to his hole on Bear creek, ten miles east of Elizabethtown.

Jeff Clarke, a farmer living near Owensville, owns a mule that plays the part of an alarm clock every morning with such regularity that Clarke has about discarded the little alarm clock that hangs on the bedpost. Promptly at 4 o'clock this mule kicks the side of the barn four times in succession. At first Clarke thought the animal was ill, and for several mornings he got up and investigated. He took note, however, that the gong of the alarm clock started buzzing when the mule started kicking. He put two and two together and reached the conclusion that the mule knows the hour when the Clarke household should arise and begin the day's work.

Sixty dollars a dozen is high for eggs, but that is the price J. C. Fischel, of Hope, obtained from Joseph Strasburger. He sold him fifteen eggs of the white Wyandotte variety for $75.

Do His Cuffs Need a Shave?

Ever notice sometimes a man's cuffs have whiskers? His collar, too? Know what does that? The shirt and collar have been washed with yellow soap, full of rosin and strong caustics, and between them they can eat and rot the finest linen ever made. Try a cake of Easy Task Laundry Soap. It is a friend to fabrics and an enemy to dirt. It doesn't cost a whit more than the bad kinds of soaps, but it pays for itself ten times over in the saving of clothes and trouble and health.

EARLIEST "DRY FARMERS."

How Navajo Indians Cultivated Scant Patches in the Desert.

Physically, morally and intellectually the Navajo is superior to other nomadic tribes, such as the Utes, Apaches, Comanches, Sioux and Cheyennes. He has always been self-supporting, receiving no rations or other assistance from the government. When there is work to be had within their capacity the men labor willingly and efficiently, grading on the railroads, constructing irrigation reservoirs and ditches and weeding or harvesting sugar beets in the beet fields of Colorado.

They cultivate their scanty patches of corn and beans on thousands of places in the desert, having been real "dry farmers" centuries before the Campbell system was born of the brain of the Nebraska experimenter or the Dry Farming Congress that meets in October in Billings, Mont., conceived of. They build their humble hogans of stone or of timber banked up with clay, wherever there happens to be water for their flocks and herds.

They are neither nomads, like the wandering tribes of the plains, nor settled agriculturists, like the Pueblos, but rather Bedouins of the American desert, moving when necessary to secure better pasturage or a more abundant supply of water for their livestock. Their blankets, woven exclusively by their squaws, have made their tribal name a household word wherever barbaric beauty or next to everlasting durability is prized.—Los Angeles Times.

ROSY COLOR

Produced by Postum.

"When a person rises from each meal with a ringing in the ears and a general sense of nervousness, it is a common habit to charge it to a deranged stomach.

"I found it was caused from drinking coffee, which I never suspected for a long time, but found by leaving off coffee that the disagreeable feelings went away.

"I was brought to think of the subject by getting some Postum and this brought me out of trouble.

"It is a most appetizing and invigorating beverage and has been of such great benefit to me that I naturally speak of it from time to time as opportunity offers.

"A lady friend complained to me that she had tried Postum, but it did not taste good. In reply to my question she said she guessed she boiled it about ten minutes. I advised her to follow directions and know that she boiled it fifteen or twenty minutes, and she would have something worth talking about. A short time ago I heard one of her children say that they were drinking Postum now-a-days, so I judge she succeeded in making it good, which is by no means a difficult task.

"The son of one of my friends was formerly a pale lad, but since he has been drinking Postum, has a fine color. There is plenty of evidence that Postum actually does 'make red blood,' as the famous trade-mark says."

Ft. Wayne News, April 7.

William H. Ringwalt, aged sixty-five years, a pioneer resident of Allen county and formerly a farmer and brick and tile manufacturer, died at 6:20 o'clock Wednesday evening at his home, 1001 Lake avenue, death following a seven months illness from complications.

The deceased was born in Springfield township in 1845 and had always been a resident of this county. Up until seven years ago he had been engaged in the manufacturing of brick and tile, but at that time he retired from business and moved to the city. For a number of years he took active part in politics and served three consecutive terms on the county council. Three years ago his last term expired. During the civil war he served for two years and nine months as a member of the Twenty-third Indiana battery and received an honorable discharge at the close of the war. He was married on Oct. 24, 1875, to Miss Anna Boger. He was a member of the First Methodist Episcopal church and was widely known throughout the county and leaves a large circle of friends who mourn his death.

Surviving relatives include the wife and four children—Orin, of Minneapolis, Minn.; Elza, Miss Mae and Mrs. Gladys Crawford, all of this city. A son, Ray, died twenty-three years ago. There is also one brother and four sisters—Eli Ringwalt, of Milan township; Mrs. Elizabeth Lampman, of Hicksville, O.; Mrs. Catherine Rafferty, of Napoleon, O.; Mrs. Mary Lichner, of Harlan, Ind., and Mrs. Ellen Burke, of this city. The funeral service was held Saturday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock from the residence. Interment at Lindenwood cemetery.

Mr. Ringwalt is well known in this vicinity and has been a reader of the ST. JOE NEWS since its establishment.

Massive B. & O. Engines.

Included in the orders for new motive power and equipment recently placed by the B. & O. railroad were 26 high-power passenger locomotives of the Atlantic type, which are now being delivered and placed in immediate service. These locomotives are designed to meet the present day demands for speed, comfort and safety and in them is represented the most advanced art in the construction of high speed locomotives. The Atlantic type engine is a modification of the old American type, the modification consisting in the addition of a "trailor" truck for carrying the larger firebox found necessary for hauling the heavy express trains. The fireboxes of these locomotives are 6 foot wide by 9 foot long, or about the size of a single benchamber in one of our seaside hotels, and therefore need a special means for carrying, hence the "trailor" truck. The height of the firebox is 70 inches, or high enough for a man of ordinary height to stand erect when inside.

With the cabs constructed of steel, a new departure in locomotive building, the engines have two pairs of driving wheels 80 inches in diameter, three revolutions of which would carry a locomotive across a 60 ft street. The total length of the engine and tender is 38 ft. 7½in., or longer than necessary to reach from house to house across a 60-ft street.

The weight of the locomotive, including the tender, is about 350,000 pounds, or 175 tons; in other words bringing it down to ordinary measure it would represent a weight equivalent to 175 cartloads of dirt which if strung out close together in a line, would make a train of carts 2,800 feet long, or over half a mile in length. The capacity of the tender for coal and water for the locomotive is 7,000 gallons of water, or 222 barrels, and 15 tons of coal or 15 cartloads.

The Atlantic type locomotive will haul on a straight level track a passenger train of 25 passenger coaches, 10 baggage, 7 Pullman and 8 postal cars a total of 50 cars in train, at a speed of 40 miles per hour, and is capable of hauling a passenger train of ordinary size at a speed of 80 miles per hour.

As a means of safety the engines are equipped with the latest type of automatic high speed driving and truck brakes to all wheels of the locomotive. The high speed brake permits the locomotive to be run for a maximum proportion of the time at the highest speed, with as little loss of time as possible to bring it to a full stop.

The boiler is 73 inches in diameter and contains 247 tubes for the radiation of heat through the boiler, each being 2¼ inches in diameter and 15-ft. 1-in., long. These tubes, if in one continuous pipe, would have a length of 3,728 feet, or nearly three-quarters of a mile.

To further prevent loss of time the locomotives are provided with a water scoop for filling the tank with water while the train is in motion. These scoops are controlled by cylinders operated by compressed air. The locomotive bells are operated by pneumatic bell ringers to enable the fireman to give more attention to the firing of the locomotive.

Library of Immortal J. N.

Hidden away in the most unlikely place in the world, a shabby, woefully prosiac, little cottage in a country town is a library so unique and valuable that to wonder among its ancient tomes and fondle their ponderous clasps and worm eaten pages would plunge the ordinary bibliomaniac into what Robert Lois Stevenson calls "a fine, dizzy, muddle headed joy."

Since there is no real reason for preserving the secret forever inviolate, let it be told that the village is McCutchenville, in Wyandot County, O., and the owner of the library is Mrs. Elias Cooley. While this name may not convey any special significance, Mrs. Cooley is the sister of the late Jacob Newman Free, better known as the Immortal J. N., and the last surviving member of an extraordinary family.

The Immortal J. N., who often visited Bryan, was one of the most eccentric and at the same time pathetic characters who ever lived in Ohio. He first came into public notice at the time of the civil war by means of his frequent journeys between Abraham Lincoln and Jefferson for the purpose of "removing the pressure," i. e., restoring peace. Through overstudy and brooding over the tragedy of the rebellion he had become mentally unsound and through all the rest of his long life he remained resolved upon one thing, "to lift the pressure."

Today his splendid library is piled in confusion in the little McCutchenville cottage in mute testimony of his erudition. In the old home one side of the front room floor to ceiling was lined with volumes and table in front of the shelves was heaped with them. The collection numbers about one thousand volumes. They are printed in many languages—Latin, German, Greek, French, Hebrew, Sanskrit and Chinese. Some of them date as far back as the middle of the sixteenth century. These are staunch old tomes but the worms have bored their neat little tunnels quite through the heavy bindings of wood and leather. Some are pierced in this way from cover and a few are gnawed by the rats.

One book dated 1570 and written in Latin contains the works of Eusibius Bishop of Caesaria in Palestine. The covers are a quarter of an inch thick and covered with leather, and the front is closed with metal clasps. Another similar in date and binding is devoted to the works of Chrysostom. A sixteenth century bible is over two feet long. The front cover and the back are torn off and reveal the methods of binding. The works of Justin, the philosopher and martyr, printed in Constantinople in 1686, are a curious commingling of Latin and Greek and is abundantly interlined with notes in the same language.—Ex.

WOVEN WIRE FENCE.

There is so many makes of fence on the market, some good, some very poor. I have handled a number of different makes and am convinced that the AMERICAN FENCE is the best value for the money of any fence on the market. The strength of fence depends on the weight of the wire in the fence. Now compare the weight of a ROD of AMERICAN FENCE with the weight of a rod of any other fence then compare the price. Do not take the dealers word as to how much it weighs but put it on the scales and weigh it. I can sell you

Can you buy any other fence so cheap?

I have eight different styles on hand now. The American Steel and Wire Company make nearly all the wire that is woven in the different makes of fence and it is folly for an agent of any other make of fence to claim a superior quality of wire or of galvanizing. Every manufacturer of fence has an idea as to what temper the wire should be for a fence and orders his wire tempered accordingly, in other words he experimenting at the Farmers expense. The American Steel and Wire Company have passed the experimental stage and are producing a composition of Steel for Fence that is perfectly adapted for it. Every farmer that has had any experience with wire knows that wire exposed to the weather becomes hard and brittle, this feature has been largely eliminated in the special wire used in AMERICAN FENCE. While the wire is stiff and springy it is flexible enough to be easily spliced and will remain so. We will explain other good features if you will call and see us.

For the clothes-line: Screw some strong steel hooks into the posts or trees where you wish to have the line, slip these over the hooks and see how nicely they work. Last year we had excellent success in keeping hams in good condition through the warm weather. Before the flies had a chance to deposit their eggs in them, we dusted some cayenne pepper into the hock end, wrapped the whole ham closly in brown paper, then in coarse muslin sewed to fit closely. Lastly we gave them a coat of thick whitewash and hung them where it was cool, dry and dark, and they did not even mold on the outside.

To can asparagus: Tie it in bundles each the size to fit in a jar, and cut off the stem end so that the bundles are an inch and a half shorter than the jar. Lay them in a saucepan, putting in the cut-off ends also. Boil until they begin to be tender, but not soft. Take out, untie, and fit into the jars, stem end down. Set each jar on a perforated board in a boiler. Put in the small pieces cut off; add a teaspoonful of salt for each bunch to the water in which they were boiled and devide it among the jars, filling up with boiling water till full. Put on the lids, but not the rubbers, pour around them hot water to the neck of the jar. Bring to a boil, and then with less heat boil steadily for half an hour. Take out one jar at a time, remove the top, put on a new rubber, after scalding it, and screw on the top. When all are done go over them and tighten the tops if needed. Set upside down in paper bags and put in a dark place. Keep standing on their heads and do not shake more than necessary.

Money Coming to You.

Put $100 in this bank, at the end of one year you will have that $100 and also $4.00 coming to you as interest.

At the end of the second year, you will still have $100 in the bank; you have had $4.00 interest and have $4.00 more coming to you.

There will be money coming to you as long as savings are in the bank.

Ladies visiting Chicago should take notice that a city ordinance just passed makes it a misdemeanor and renders a fine of $50 00 possible for any woman who in any public place wears a hat pin which extends over half an inch from the crown of her hat. Indianapolis is about to pass a similar ordinance.

Easily Solved

The question of why living is more expensive than it used to be should not be hard to answer. The producing class formerly numbered 90 per cent of the whole population, now it is reduced to forty. The present tendency of the people to flock toward the cities has reduced the producing class and added to the consuming class and the increased yield per acre because of improved methods of farming has not kept up the supply in proportion to the increase demand. The live stock killed for food must be fed. Land sown to alfalfa and hay to feed these cattle and hogs can not produce wheat or corn, and fewer acres must necessarily call for higher prices. Those higher prices paid for feed must result in higher priced meats. Almost every article the farmer uses in producing his crops and a great many articles the manufacturer uses in putting out his goods are produced on an eight hour labor day scale, which increases the cost over former years. If the farmer were to work only eight hours per day and produce only what he could in that time, can you conceive of what living would cost?—Ex.

Points Regarding the Census

The enumerators will wear a badge inscribed "United States Census, 1910."

The law requires every adult person to furnish the prescribed information but also provides that it shall be treated confidentially, so that no injury can come to any person from answering the questions.

The Census Bureau, prior to April 15, will distribute to every farm owner and tenant in this state a blank or schedule containing the Census questions relative to farm operations and equipment. This should be filled up if possible, not later than the morning of April 15, but if anyone has been unable to fill it up by that time, he should do it as soon afterwards as he can.

People who do not speak English or who do not understand the schedule completely should get help from others, if possible, in filling it up.

The President has issued a proclamation, calling on all citizens to cooperate with the Census and assuring them that it has nothing to do with taxation, army or jury service, compulsory school attendance, regulation of immigration, or enforcement of any law, and that no one can be injured by answering the inquries.

It is of the utmost importance that the farm census of this state be complete and correct.

Therefore every farm owner and tenant should promptly, fully, and accurately fill up the "Advance Farm Schedule" and carefully preserve it for the enumerator when he calls.

AFTER DOCTORS FAILED

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Cured Her

Knoxville, Iowa. — "I suffered with pains low down in my right side for a year or more and was so weak and nervous that I could not do my work. I wrote to Mrs. Pinkham and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills, and am glad to say that your medicines and kind letters of directions have done more for me than anything else and I had the best physicians here. I can do my work and rest well at night. I believe there is nothing like the Pinkham remedies." — Mrs. CLARA FRANKS, R. F. D., No. 3, Knoxville, Iowa.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills, and suffering women owe it to themselves to at least give this medicine a trial. Proof is abundant that it has cured thousands of others, and why should it not cure you?

If you want special advice write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for it. It is free and always helpful.

Riding Away With the Bride.

In many of the border counties of England the quaint old bridal customs of hundreds of years ago are still in vogue. The parents carefully abstain from appearing at the marriage ceremony, clinging to the idea that the bridegroom still rides away on a foaming steed with his bride behind him as in the good old days. The brides prefer the custom to the modern method of being given away at the altar in the orthodox fashion.

Salt is obtained in the United States in several different forms and ways. From the mines it comes in blocks, and from strong brines it is obtained by evaporation or boiling by solar or artificial heat. Indianapolis correspondence:

The Republican State convention was opened with a speech by Senator Beveridge in which he defended his fight in Congress for downward revision of the tariff and his vote against the Aldrich-Payne bill. "I couldn't stand for it then and I cannot stand for it now," said the Senator time and again, each repetition being greeted with applause. Mr. Beveridge declared the battle would be kept up until the aims of the progressives—a substantial reduction of duties and a tariff commission—are accomplished.

The resolutions committee of the convention decided unanimously on a platform making no reference to the new tariff law, although indorsing the principle of protection, and heartily commending the course of Mr. Beveridge in the Senate.

Speech of Senator Beveridge.

Senator Beveridge served as temporary chairman of the gathering, which was held in Tomlinson Hall. In taking the chair he said:

"The Republicans of Indiana are for a protective tariff which covers the difference in the cost of production here and abroad. Less than that is unjust to American laborers; more than that is unjust to American consumers. It was to reduce the Dingley tariff to meet changed conditions and obtain justice that we undertook its revision.

"The masses of Republican voters to-day refuse to permit the great doctrine of protection to be used to excuse and cloak tariff excess. Like President Taft, I wanted free iron ore, of which we have the greatest deposits on earth and which the steel trust chiefly controls. I would not stand for the duty that was passed and I cannot stand for it now. But a majority of Democratic Senators did stand and fight for it, and stand for it now.

"Like President Taft I wanted free lumber, out of which the homes of the people are built. Like President Taft I wanted the ancient woolen schedule reduced—a schedule forty-two years old, which raises the price and reduces the weight of the people's clothing. I stood against that schedule and am against it now.

"I could not stand for an increase of duties on cotton cloth, the higher grades of which are used as clothing by every man, woman and child throughout the republic. The manufacturers declare before the House committee that their business was thriving, their labor employed and that all they asked was that the tariff on cotton should not be decreased. I stand against those increases now. I could not stand for an increase on structural steel, punched and ready for use, out of which all modern buildings are constructed. I could not stand for an increase of duties on those linoleums which are the poor man's carpet; or on zinc, which is a universal necessity; or on silk, which is a part of the clothing or adornment of every American woman, rich or poor; and I cannot stand for them now.

Cites His Own Record.

"I could not stand for the obsolete and infamous sugar schedule, which no man in Indiana can read and understand, but which the sugar trust can read and understand; yet efforts to change that schedule were opposed by Democratic votes. We reduced the tariff on refined sugar 5 cents per 100 pounds—one-twentieth of one cent, a half of one mill, a pound—which was worse than no reduction because it cannot affect the price and therefore is a deception. Yet that is one of the boasted reductions we hear of.

"It is said that the law has made reductions on articles entering into the consumption of the people to the value of $5,000,000,000; yet those articles are lumber, agricultural implements, meat and food products, petroleum and its products of all of which we are the greatest exporters in the world; steel rails and coal, which we export; barbed wire, monopolized by the steel trust; nails, manufactured and sold by an international trust as complete as the international tobacco monopoly; yarns and threads; the raw materials for textiles, on which when finished for the people's use the tariff was increased; sugar, which was reduced not in fact, but only in pretense.

"Above all, I could not stand for the slaughter by the conference committee of the moderate beginning of a tariff commission which I wrote into the bill that passed the Senate; but all except one of the Democratic Senators were and are the enemies of any tariff commission.

"I voted against the bill and for plighted honor. I voted against excess and for protection. I voted against the interests and for the people.

"Where lies the plain remedy? In a tariff commission. When I introduced the tariff-commission bill three years ago I said it had no friends in Congress. To-day a large majority of Republicans are for it and one Democrat has seen the light.

"But the conference committee struck out every word giving these persons any powers to investigate and collect the facts, leaving to the President nothing but the authority to employ persons to assist him in the administration of the maximum and minimum section of the law. Senator Hale, senior member of the conference committee, declared on the floor of the Senate that the committee had done this for the purpose of depriving these persons of any power whatever to gather facts or to do any work which a tariff commission could do.

"President Taft, by executive construction, has attempted to restore to these persons he is authorized to employ some of the powers that the conference committee destroyed. But executive construction cannot restore powers that Congress deliberately refused to give, and any President at any time can discharge the so-called tariff board. For the members of this tariff board are not officers of the government; they are mere employes of the President. Any trust in America can refuse to give them information. We asked for a reality; they gave us a mockery. We asked for power; they gave us palsy. We asked for bread; they gave us a stone. Such a makeshift will not answer the needs of American business men, producers and consumers."

All of the candidates for places on the ticket were chosen by acclamation except Monyhan, who received 911 votes to Job Freeman's 854. Ferrell, who was chosen from a field of three, and Finley P. Mount, whose opponent, William Bossom, withdrew before the balloting was completed.

REPORT OF THE RESOLUTIONS COMMITTEE.

The platform of the Indiana Republicans, in convention at Indianapolis, as prepared by the resolutions committee, makes the following declarations on national issues:

We, the Republicans of Indiana, declare our determined support of those great policies for the common good developed under Theodore Roosevelt and bearing his name, and we demand that they be given effect in legislation and administration.

We believe in a protective tariff, measured by the difference between the cost of production here and abroad. Less than this is unjust to American laborers; more is unjust to American consumers. That difference should be ascertained with the utmost speed, and the present law modified accordingly.

We demand the immediate creation of a genuine, permanent, nonpartisan tariff commission, with ample powers and definite duties fixed in the law itself.

We believe with President McKinley, in his last tariff utterances, that "The period of exclusiveness is past," and we heartily favor the Republican policy of reciprocity first announced by Blaine and later advocated by McKinley.

We demand comprehensive laws for the conservation of our natural resources, and especially that the coal deposits of Alaska shall be kept the property of the nation, to be developed only under lease and payment of just royalties to the government.

In time of war, or any other emergency, when ordinary forms of taxation are not enough for the needs of the government, the nation should have the constitutional power to tax incomes. We heartily favor an amendment to the Constitution, giving Congress this power.

We favor such limitation of the powers of injunction as will not imperil the liberty of any man without notice and hearing.

We favor national legislation which will end child slavery in the factories, mines and sweatships throughout the land.

We favor just and liberal pensions to all deserving soldiers and to the widows and orphans of those who are dead.

We demand the enactment of laws providing for publicity as to campaign contributions, in both State and nation.

We demand that United States Senators shall be elected by the direct vote of the people.

Other planks declare for good roads, State code revision and child-labor reform.

We recognize that no President in our history ever began his administration with such universal favor and good will as did William Howard Taft; few men have entered the presidency with such extraordinary training.

As collector of internal revenue, prosecuting attorney, judge of a State court, solicitor general, federal judge, Governor of the Philippines, Secretary of War, builder of the Panama Canal, regenerator of Cuba—each period of official activity immediately following another for his entire adult life—he brought to the discharge of the great duties of the presidency broad executive experience and grasp of governmental affairs.

We indorse his administration and pledge to him our support in any efforts to secure the enactment of genuine progressive legislation.

The spirit of the times demands not only wise policies and sound principles, but clean, vigilant, brave and sincere men in public office. We indorse and applaud the splendid record of our senior Senator, and especially his record in the last session of Congress, which deserves the unqualified approval of all the people of the State. With pride and confidence we make a solemn pledge to the people that a Republican Legislature will return to the Senate of the United States this man, whose name is synonymous with victory—Albert J. Beveridge.

The Difference.

My neighbor eateth lobster;
He eateth rarebit, too;
He loveth brie and edam
And hideth them from view.
My neighbor wakes at midnight
And shrieks with sudden pain.
Quick comes the costly medic
And treats him for ptomaine.

I eat my humble dinner,
My chops and beans and pie.
Perhaps with indigestion
I suffer by and by.
The good old family doctor
My case in hand doth take,
And as he spreads a plaster
He calls it stomach-ache.

Nature of Life.

The question of life is as great a mystery as ever. Herbert Spencer's definition that life is "the continuous adjustment of internal relations with external relations" and the other theory that life is a form of electrical action as well as all the other theories combined quite fail to show how nonliving matter becomes living matter or what it really means to be alive. We know no more on the subject than they did five minutes after men began to think upon it thousands of years ago.—New York American.

Big Game in East Africa.

The increase of big game shooting in East Africa threatens to bring about the complete extermination of the larger mammals within about half a century, despite the restrictions applied to this form of sport by the authorities, according to the London Globe. The most appalling destruction is that of the elephants; the number of tusks annually imported into Antwerp alone represents the slaughter of no fewer than 20,000 elephants.

EXCELLENT TRADE IN WESTERN CANADA.

Throughout all of Canada, and especially in the western provinces of Canada, there is a buoyancy in every line of business that is fully warranted by every condition. The crops of the past year were what was expected, and the prices for grain of all kinds put the farmers in a class by themselves. Many of them are independent, and many others have got well started on the road. The latest reports are that seeding is well under way in almost every district, and the prospects are that a vastly larger area than that under crop last year will be seeded early this spring. In the Lethbridge district, in Southern Alberta, steam and gasoline outfits, hundreds of them, are breaking up the prairie at a tremendous pace, but they work night and day. As soon as it becomes dark gangs are changed, a head light attached, and on, on through the night until the first streak of dawn, these giant monsters with their seven or eight gangs of breaking plows, keep up the work. Then the more modest farmer is putting in the longest hours possible with his teams of horses or oxen. And what will the country be like in August, when these fields have become yellowed with the literally golden grain. There will be one vast expanse of wheat field. And there will be a market for it, because it is the best grain grown, and the demand will be everywhere. As previously intimated, business throughout Western Canada is sound and good. The grain production of 1909 has been the great factor in establishing the reputation of Western Canada, and it is worth talking about. It surpassed all previous records, both in regard to quality and quantity, and such an achievement was by no means easy. The limit has not been reached, and a large average increase may be expected during the next ten years. There will be odd seasons when a failing off will occur, and it is the failing off that causes alarms and panics in the commercial world. The plains have done their duty so far in the output of grain and it would be reasonable to make occasional allowances for slowing up. The faster the rate of increase is now, the sharper will be the check when the production diminishes. But there are some unreasonable people who wonder why the growth of one year is not continued during the next, and at an even faster rate. These same unreasonable people are the ones who see flaws in the situation as soon as an indication is given that the startling advances have not been maintained.

The Wag and the Wagger.

"Fountain pens," snapped the wife whose tongue had found out the secret of perpetual motion, "remind me, Horace, of some husbands!"

"Why?" responded the meek little man.

"Expensive, can't be depended on, won't work, and half the time they're broken!" she snorted.

"That's pretty rough, Maria!" bleated Horace. "I call it most unkind, in fact. Really! But you couldn't compare a fountain pen with some women."

"Of course not!"

"No, Maria. You see, a fountain pen will dry up, and some wives won't."

And then he made a bee line for the Underground.—Life.

PRACTICALLY HELPLESS.

All Broken Down with Backache and Kidney Troubles.

Mrs. Matilda Lindemann, 4423 Wentworth Ave., Chicago, Ill., says: "Twelve years kidney disorders distressed me. My back ached, my appetite was poor, my eyesight failed me and nervousness and dizzy spells afflicted me. Finally my hands and arms got practically paralysed, and I was so weak I could hardly drag myself across the floor. Doan's Kidney Pills have done wonders for me. I feel strong and sound since using them, my back hardly ever hurts and the other troubles are gone."

Lesson from the Past.

Nimrod had killed so much big game that the people had begun to complain.

"We'll have no wild meat at all if he doesn't let up," they said, "and the cost of living is already too high!"

"I'm not killing for the mere pleasure of it," he retorted; "I'm a faunal naturalist, and I am making a collection."

And he kept on hunting.—Chicago Tribune.

Stops Lameness

Much of the chronic lameness in horses is due to neglect.

See that your horse is not allowed to go lame. Keep Sloan's Liniment on hand and apply at the first sign of stiffness. It's wonderfully penetrating — goes right to the spot — relieves the soreness — limbers up the joints and makes the muscles elastic and pliant.

Here's the Proof.

Mr. G. T. Roberts of Resaca, Ga., R.F.D. No. 1, Box 43, writes: — "I have used your Liniment on a horse for sweeney and effected a thorough cure. I also removed a spavin on a mule. This spavin was as large as a guinea egg. In my estimation the best remedy for lameness and soreness is

Sloan's Liniment

Mr. H. M. Gibbs, of Lawrence, Kans., R.F.D. No. 3, writes: — "Your Liniment is the best that I have ever used. I had a mare with an abscess on her neck and one 50c. bottle of Sloan's Liniment entirely cured her. I keep it around all the time for galls and small swellings and for everything about the stock."

Sloan's Liniment will kill a spavin, curb or splint, reduce wind puffs and swollen joints, and is a sure and speedy remedy for fistula, sweeney, founder and thrush.

WESTERN CANADA

What Governor Deneen, of Illinois, Says About It:

Governor Deneen, of Illinois, owns a section of land in Saskatchewan, Canada. He has said in an interview:

"As an American I am delighted to see the remarkable progress of Western Canada. Our people are flocking across the boundary in thousands, and I have not yet met one who admitted he had made a mistake. They are all doing well. There is scarcely a community in the Middle or Western States that has not a representative in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta."

125 Million Bushels of Wheat in 1909

Western Canada field crops for 1909 will easily yield to the farmer $170,000,000.00 in cash.

Free Homesteads of 160 acres, and pre-emptions of 160 acres at $3.00 an acre. Railway and Land Companies have land for sale at reasonable prices. Many farmers have paid for their land out of the proceeds of one crop. Splendid climate, good schools, excellent railway facilities, low freight rates, wood, water and lumber easily obtained.

Layman Finds Stomach Cure

Good Christian and Family Man, but Had Poor Digestive Organs—What Cured Him You Can Get Free.

It is a generally admitted fact that among ministers and their families Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the favorite laxative. It is not often that the layman has a chance to "speak up in meeting," and hence these words from Mr. Joseph Murphy, of Indianapolis, Ind., whose picture we present herewith:

Mr. Joseph Murphy

"All my life I had needed a laxative to cure my constipation and stomach trouble. I couldn't eat anything; I couldn't get what I did eat out of my system. I tried everything, because my work, engineer on a railroad train, makes it necessary that I feel strong and well. Finally it was my good fortune to meet up with Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, through the recommendation of a friend. I took it and was cured. That is some time ago, but I am still cured."

It can be bought of any druggist for 50 cents or $1 a bottle. Send your address and a free test bottle will be sent to your home. If there is some mystery about your case that you want explained write the doctor. For the advice or free sample address Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 102 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill.

Beautiful Wall Coatings for Homes.

In line with the progress of all other things in these modern days is the beautiful, perfect and sanitary wall coatings for our homes. Alabastine is the name of a rich, soft and velvety preparation for the decoration of walls and ceilings. It adheres to the walls of its own adhesive qualities. It is inexpensive, clean, artistic and so easily put on that any one can follow the printed directions on every package. Any shade or tint is easily produced. Alabastine is proof against insects or disease germs so prevalent in wall paper. It does not rub off and flake like kalsomine. A complete color plan for the walls of the home and stencils to help make the home beautiful, together with a book about home decorations and samples of color effects will all be sent free by the Alabastine Company, 482 Grandville avenue, Grand Rapids, Mich. This liberal offer to home decorators deserves careful perusal.

Our agents in Kansas have ordered for this season 1,000 Overland automobiles.

Nebraska takes 750—Iowa 1,000—Texas 1,500. Thus has the Overland—after one year's experience—captured the farming states.

It has captured the cities, too. New York City takes 1,000 Overlands this year. Boston takes 500—San Francisco 500—Washington 500—Philadelphia 450.

Our agents have contracted for 20,000 Overlands—for $24,000,000 worth of Overlands—to supply the demand for this year. That's a larger sale than any other car commands.

Yet, two years ago few had ever heard of an Overland. This sensational success is due to the creation of a remarkable car.

The Simple Car

The success of the Overland is mainly due to its amazing simplicity. A 10-year-old child can master the car in five minutes. Push a pedal forward to go ahead, and backward to reverse. Push another pedal for high speed. There is nothing else to do but steer.

Any man with the simplest instructions, can run an Overland a thousand miles and back.

There was never a car so easy to care for—so easy to keep in order.

20 Per Cent Reduction

The Overland's success is also due to its price. No other maker ever gave nearly so much for the money.

Yet we have cut our costs this year about 20 per cent through enormous increase in production.

The Overland we sell for $1,000 this year is better than the $1,250 Overland last year. It is a 25 H. P. car with a speed of 50 miles an hour.

So with the $1,250, $1,400 and $1,500 Overlands. Each offers a fifth more than ever before for the money.

All prices include Magneto and full lamp equipment.

Ask for the Story

The Overland story is one of the greatest business stories ever told. It tells how this car—the creation of a mechanical genius—has in two years reached the topmost place in this field. And it tells all about the car. Send us this coupon today for this book.

The Week in Congress

Senator Root continued, but did not conclude his speech on the administration railroad bill in the Senate Thursday. He defended the merger and traffic agreements provisions of the measure. There was further discussion of the proposed amendment of the Cummins employers' liability law, but the Senate took no action upon it. The naval appropriation bill pending in the House, offered an opportunity to members to discuss various subjects. Mr. Sherley of Kentucky explained at considerable length his resolution to permit a majority of the House to bring before it at any time a bill which might be pending in a committee. Mr. Padgett of Tennessee and Mr. Gregg of Texas, minority members of the house naval committee, each delivered a speech in favor of a one battle ship a year policy. Objection being made to an increase by the Senate to the extent of $25,000 of the appropriation under which the State Department may encourage trade relations, the diplomatic bill was sent back to conference by the House after all amendments except that one had been agreed to.

Senator Root Friday concluded his speech in the Senate in support of the administration railroad bill and the further consideration of that measure was postponed until Monday. The Senate passed the bill amending the employers' liability law in respect to the jurisdiction of State courts in railroad damage suits. The liability bill now will go to conference. The publicity feature of the corporation tax law was under discussion during the entire session of the House to-day. The Senate had provided, in an amendment to the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, for publicity of corporation reports upon approval of the President alone under regulations to be formulated by the Secretary of the Treasury. After the bill had been completed Representative Fitzgerald of New York attempted to recommit it with instructions for a report forthwith with an amendment repealing the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. By a strict party vote, 150 to 116, Speaker Cannon's ruling that this motion was out of order was sustained.

Eulogies formed the chief feature of the proceedings of the Senate and House, Saturday. In the Senate the life and character of Senator McLaurin of Mississippi and of Senator Johnson of North Dakota were subjects of numerous remarks. In the House the session was largely devoted to paying tributes of respect to the memory of the late Representative Cushman of Washington. The naval appropriation bill was under consideration during the first two hours of the session, and the reading of the measure for amendments was begun.

In honor of the late Representative James B. Perkins of New York, who died in this city recently, eulogies were delivered in the House Sunday.

In the Senate Monday Senator Elkins attempted, but without success, to get unanimous consent for a vote on the administration railroad bill the next Saturday. This effort came at the close of a speech by Senator Crawford, who advocated amendments to the court of commerce provision. A bill was passed permitting the Philippine government to increase its indebtedness to a limit of $10,000,000 for the promotion of public improvements. The railroad bill was made a privileged measure whenever it comes up for consideration in the House by the terms of a resolution offered by Mr. Mann, chairman of the committee on interstate and foreign commerce, and adopted by a two-thirds vote. Mr. Mann announced that he would endeavor to place the railroad bill before the House as soon as the pending naval bill has been disposed of. The House passed a bill that increased from $2,000 to $5,000 the amount of money that must be involved in a suit to entitle its removal from a State to a federal court. The naval bill again was before the House for consideration.

Senator Heyburn of Idaho consumed most of the session of the Senate, Tuesday, discussing the provisions of the railroad bill. The naval appropriation bill was under consideration all day in the House, but few changes being made in the measure. As the House, could not agree upon recommendations of the committee on naval affairs to increase the length of the proposed dry docks at New York, Puget Sound, Wash., and at Pearl Harbor, approximately to 700 feet, an increase of about 100 feet, the entire appropriations for those projects were stricken from the bill, leaving their determination to a later day.

"When our baby was seven weeks old he broke out with what we thought was heat, but which gradually grew worse. We called in a doctor. He said it was eczema and from that time we doctored six months with three of the best doctors in Atchison but he only got worse. His face, head and hands were a solid sore. There was no end to the suffering for him. We had to tie his little hands to keep him from scratching. He never knew what it was to sleep well from the time he took the disease until he was cured. He kept us awake all hours of the night and his health wasn't what you would call good. We tried everything but the right thing.

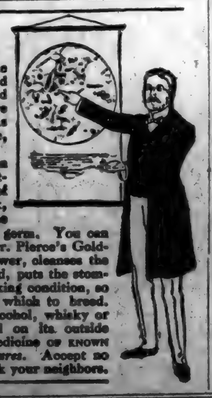
Afraid of Ghosts



Many people are afraid of ghosts. Few people are afraid of germs. Yet the ghost is a fancy and the germ is a fact. If the germ could be magnified to a size equal to its terrors it would appear more terrible than any fire-breathing dragon. Germs can't be avoided. They are in the air we breathe, the water we drink.

The germ can only prosper when the condition of the system gives it free scope to establish itself and develop. When there is a deficiency of vital force, languor, restlessness, a sallow cheek, a hollow eye, when the appetite is poor and the sleep is broken, it is time to guard against the germ. You can fortify the body against all germs by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It increases the vital power, cleanses the system of clogging impurities, enriches the blood, puts the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition in working condition, so that the germ finds no weak or tainted spot in which to breed. "Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol, whisky or habit-forming drugs. All its ingredients printed on its outside wrapper. It is not a secret nostrum but a medicine of KNOWN COMPOSITION and with a record of 40 years of cures. Accept no substitute—there is nothing "just as good." Ask your neighbors.

Hindman-Kosht.

Wednesday evening, April 6th., at the beautiful country residence of Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Kosht of Butler, occurred the wedding of their only daughter, Anna Mae to Don P. Hindman of St. Joe. At 8 P. M. the contracting parties took their places preceded by an appropriate wedding march rendered by Mrs. Fred Thomas The ceremony was solemnized by Rev. Fred Thomas, pastor of the Christian church at Newville.

The bride was gowned in blue silk. The groom wore the conventional black. The bride was attended by Miss Mabel Beerbower and Mr. Grawville Oberlin attended the groom. The bride is a winsome and cultured young lady admired by a host of friends for her many noble and amiable traits of character. The groom is a manly young man respected for his integrity and worth. Mr. and Mrs. Hindman, begin married life under favorable auspices.

A splendid supper was served in four courses. The tables being tastefully decorated with carnations, sweet peas and smilax and nothing was left undone to make the arrangement of the rooms a model of art and beauty.

Thirty guests were present among whom were: Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Saylor and son, Fred; Mr. and Mrs. D. R. Kosht and little daughters, Marguerite and Phyllis; Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Krahill and daughter, Garcia; Mrs. Joe Kosht, of Nova, O.; Mr. and Mrs Wm. Kosht and daughter, Dessie of Auburn; Mrs Sam Hindman, mother of the groom; Mrs. Hazel Wyatt; Mr. and Mrs. Holl Jackson; Mr. and Mrs. Joe Hull and son Harvey; Grawville Oberlin and Mable Beerbower of Edgerton, O.; Marie Jennings and Mary Oberlin.

Mr. and Mrs. Hindman were the recipients of many beautiful and useful presents including Silver and China, also an elegant, fine sideboard, the gift of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Saylor. Immediately after the ceremony the bride and groom boarded the B. & O. train for North Baltimore, Kenten, O and other points in the east. On the return they will be at home to their friends 2 miles north of St Joe.

Schools Closed.

Last Friday, April 8th., was a day long to be remembered by patrons, pupils and teacher of district 5, Stafford township, the occasion being the last day. The forenoon was spent in the usual studies, making promotions and arranging work for next year. Just before noon a host of ladies from the district, gathered with baskets filled with wholesome dainties. Two large tables were spread and a feast that would put to shame any family reunion dinner was devoured by hungry boys and girls. Later a third table was spread for the patrons, who enjoyed the festivities as much as the young people. After dinner a short program was given, concluded by a few words of farewell from the teacher, Robert Uim. At this point, Mrs. Henry Webster surprised Mr. Uim by presenting an elegant gold watch-fob, a token of appreciation from the pupils. The school is an unusually large and enthusiastic one, and all went home feeling that this term had been very successful. Besides the patrons, pupils, teacher and young people, Mrs. Uim and baby Floy were present.

Last Saturday as the day grew near the noon hour, the patrons of the Saylor school together with their families and others, gathered at the school house, coming from all directions with heaped up baskets filled with all the good things that go to cheer the inner man. As quickly as possible the work of the year was finished up, the tokens of appreciation and love exchanged between teacher and pupils. The tables brought in and bounteously spread with not only the substantial things to eat but with all the dainties and delicacies known to the culinary art. After a brief but earnest word of prayer, each enjoyed a feast of which has never been the pleasure of the writer to see. Following an hour spent around the table in pleasant and enjoyable association, the men and boys engaged in an exciting ball game, while the ladies and girls cleared the tables and enjoyed a delightful visit. As the day drew near the close all came together in the school room and were pleasantly entertained by the graphaphone, furnished by the Brunson brothers. Talks by Prof. Arthur Haley, of Butler, Rev. Collins, of Saylors Corners and Evangelist Hamilton, of St. Joe. After the teacher made a short farewell address the company departed to their homes feeling it a day well spent.

Bad Accident.

Last Saturday night while Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Hart were going home from St. Joe, where they had been to church, they met with quite an accident on the road opposite the Nelson Scholes house. As it were, Alva Reasoner was coming from the east, and as they were both driving at a good rate of speed, they failed to have time to get out of the road. Consequently they came together, the Reasoner rig striking the other with a chug. Mr. Reasoner stopped and as he did not hear anything he drove on. In a short time someone else came along and found the wreckage. Upon investigation it was found that Mrs. Hart was unconscious, Mr. Hart jammed up considerable and the buggy a wreck. The horse made his escape but was found by morning. Mrs. Hart lay until morning in that condition before she rallied but was able to be about on Sunday. The accident might have proved a fatal one.

Barney--Copp

Mr. Roscoe Barney of St. Joe, Ind., and Miss Vera Copp, of Garrett, Ind., were united in marriage at the M. E. parsonage Monday evening, April 4, Rev. C. H. Armstrong officiating.

The young couple had intended to be married in Indiana, but as Mr. Barney's parents were moving to Mt. View, they came on with the old folks and were married here. They will make their home at this place.

The bridegroom is well known here, having played ball for Mt. View all last summer. He is a good player and a good fellow and has a host of friends here. His bride is a handsome and capable young woman and Roscoe may well be proud of having won her The Tribune Progress joins in wishing them all the best things of life.—Mt. View Tribune Progress.

A person wouldn't hardly think there were enough hens in the vicinity to lay 22,680 eggs a week, but they are doing the business. The large number used by farmers and sold to hucksters are not counted in the 1890 dozen.

Ross H. Abel has commenced an action in the court of Squire Green, in which he demands possession of a two-acre tract of land which he claims is unlawfully held by John Milliman. He also asks for judgment in the amount of thirty dollars from the defendant. The land in controversy is situated in Newville township. Mr. Abel leased the tract to the defendant in July, 1909, with the understanding that he was to compensate the owner for its use by performing labor for him at any and all times he was called upon to do so. The plaintiff charges that he has absolutely refused and failed to perform such labor. Mr. Green set the case for trial today. —Courier.

Last Day Exercises.

Friday is the last day of our school. The teachers and pupils are drawing their year's work to a close. The former are busy with examinations and reports, the latter with the finishing touches on their respective subjects studied throughout the year. All are looking forward to a happy and successful ending of the year's work.

The patrons of the school and especially the parents are cordially invited by teachers and pupils to visit the school Friday. Come, bring your dinner, and stay all day. Visit the rooms get acquainted with the teachers and with the work that is being done. The work of the past year as well as the building will be open for your inspection. Find out what your boy or girl has been doing in school and find out what the school has for him in the future. If the school year has brought you any question or has called for any complaint come and clear it up with us. If it has merited your appreciation, come and express it, that it may help your future school.

In order to bring the parents into closer touch with each other, with the teachers and with the school and in order to render the days visit to the school as informal as possible, one of the rooms will be arranged for serving dinner. The parents will cooperate with the pupils in this and thus render the day a happy event to be greatly enjoyed and long remembered by all.

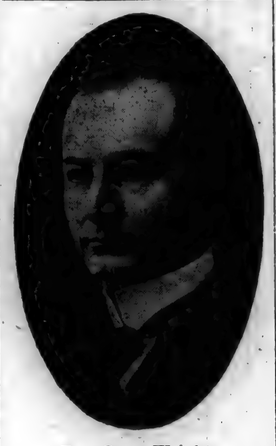
An excellent program has been arranged for the afternoon. The greater part of this program will be made up of the orations of the high school graduates. These orations are original productions, written on practical and educational subjects. They are typical of the work that has been done throughout the past year in the high school, and are well worth your time and attention. If the day is warm and the weather suitable, this program will be held in the open air in front of the building, if the day is otherwise, one of the rooms will be fitted for it.

Baccalaureate Exercises

Rev. Hitchner will deliver the class sermon on Sunday evening, April 24, in the Lutheran Church. The high school will be represented, and appropriate services carried out.

Commencement Exercises

The first Annual Commencement of the Concord Township High School, will be held Tuesday evening, April 26, 1910, at 8 o'clock, Widney's Opera House. An excellent program has also been arranged for this occasion. Music will be furnished by the Wilcox Orchestra from Auburn, and the class address by Rev. Owen Wright.



Rev. Owen Wright

Rev. Wright is pastor of the M. E. church at Culver, Ind., and is one of the strongest men and ablest speakers in the Northwestern Indiana divisions of that church. His thoughts are practical, clear and illustrated to the point, and when he is through, he will have left something which you will never forget. His subject is "Dreams."

Rev. Wright comes at my own request and being acquainted with his former work and excellent success as a minister and speaker, I feel perfectly safe in presenting him to the people of St. Joe and vicinity.

Gospel Campaign Closed

The great meetings by Hamilton and Haley at the Church of Christ, were brought to a close Saturday evening. A vote was taken asking them to remain longer but this was impossible, as they were engaged for a meeting beginning Sunday morning at Butler. This was a most remarkable meeting, in that many saw the clear and beautiful truths of the Bible so plainly taught by Bro. Hamilton and were led to understand the way of the Lord more perfectly.

The immediate results of the meetings were forty-eight added to the church, while seed sown in good and honest hearts will grow and bear fruit in future time. The church has been strengthened and all people have been benefited by having had such a meeting in our midst and such earnest workers in the Master's vineyard. The song services were ably conducted by Prof. Haley, of Butler, who often favored the audiences with songs of his own composition and who certainly sang with the spirit and with the understanding also. We all know of Bro. Hamilton's untiring personal work in the town and surrounding country, and many hearts were touched with the gospel message so earnestly taught and preached. Mrs. Hamilton was also a worthy helper and fine personal worker in this gospel campaign. The church and community would be glad to have Brothers Hamilton and Haley to meet with us again in a furure meeting and a hearty welcome would be accorded them. A reception was tendered the new members by the church and all had an enjoyable time.

The real reception occured on Tuesday evening when a large crowd assembled at the church and the purpose of which was to welcome to new converts into church fellowship. All plans were carried out to the letter, and at about 8:00 o'clock Bro. Frank Scholes conducted the song service.

John A. May gave the welcome address followed by Robert Ulm and Mrs. Eva Sheffer. Mrs. Lora Leighty rendered a piano Solo. Elder Brown made a few remarks to the church as a whole as to future plans of the church. The ladies were then given the right-of-way and coffee and cake was served. The social hour was a also a pleasant feature.

Mob Reaps Vengeance on Dying Negro

Tom O'Neil, negro, who shot and killed Jailer Temple at Meridian, Miss., was shot and killed by the officers in a fight in the basement of the jail. A crowd of nearly 2,000 people took the body of O'Neil, who was expiring, from the officers, carried it to a telephone pole and hanged it. After the body was lowered, the throat was cut and the clothing saturated with kerosene and set on fire. The body was recovered from the mob after the clothing had been burned. Temple was killed by O'Neil when he went to the assistance of a deputy whose revolver the negro seized. George Williams, another negro, is charged with assisting O'Neil and the mob threatens to lynch him also.

Wooster College Rejects Carnegie Gift.

A dispatch from Toledo, Ohio, states the University of Wooster will not be made a beneficiary of the Carnegie pension fund for superannuated professors. This has been decided by the Presbyterian Synod of Dayton representing all Presbyterian churches in five counties of Southwestern Ohio. A determined stand against accepting any of the laired of Skibo's money because Carnegie had a string to the gift. He stipulated that in order to obtain the money the university would have to be released from all denominational control.

Chicago Lends Grewsome Relic.

Chicago broke a precedent recently, loaning a scaffold to Rockford, Ill. This scaffold was built just a quarter of a century ago for the purpose of executing three Italians who murdered a man in a barber chair. All told forty-one persons have expiated their crimes on the grim old relic, including the elder Mayor Harrison's assassin, the Haymarket anarchists and the car barn bandits. The scaffold will be used at Rockford for the execution of Clinton St. Clair, convicted of murdering a woman recluse.

Oldfield Makes New World's Record.

Five new American speedway records were established on the motordome at Playa Del Rey, Cal., the most noteworthy being that of the half-mile made by Barney Oldfield in his Benz car, during which this machine reached a speed greater than 100 miles an hour. The time was 17.91 seconds. Oldfield also drove the Benz a kilometer in 22.88 seconds, lowering his former mark made at Indianapolis, Ind., by 1.4 seconds.

Slayer of Carmack is Pardoned.

Governor Patterson, of Tennessee, has pardoned Col. Duncan Cooper, whose sentence of twenty years in the penitentiary for the murder of United States Senator W. E. Carmack was confirmed by the State Supreme Court. Although it was believed by many that the chief executive would take this action, the pardon coming so soon after the action of the court created a sensation.

Editor Kills Mayor of Missouri Town.

A political feud of three years' standing terminated in the killing of Dr. L. W. Hart, mayor of Morehouse, Mo., by Claud B. Hay, editor of the Morehouse Hustler. Hay met Hart as the latter emerged from a grocery and opened fire. Three of his four shots took effect. Hart walked into a store next door and fell dead. Hay surrendered to the town marshal.

Gets $40,000 for Broken Heart.

Miss Alma Broderick was awarded $40,000 damages by a jury in an undefended breach-of-promise suit for $50,000 brought by her against Jerome Probst, a lawyer of New York City. Miss Broderick alleged that when she met Probst in Chicago in 1905 he called himself James Banning and said he lived at the Chicago Athletic Club.

Six Firemen Burned to Death.

Trapped by metal doors and barred windows, six firemen were caught by a back draft and burned to death during the partial destruction of the New Haven (Conn.) county jail. Three of their comrades were saved through the heroism of other firemen. The bodies of the six men were found later after the debris cooled.

TWO FOUND GUILTY OF SAYLER MURDER

Jury Gives Woman Three Years and Dr. W. R. Miller Twelve in Prison.

WOMAN'S FATHER IS SET FREE

Banker's Wife Collapses as Verdict Is Read—New Trial Asked.

In Watseka, Ill., Dr. William R. Miller and Mrs. Lucy R. Sayler both were found guilty of manslaughter the other day. Dr. Miller was sentenced to twelve years and Mrs. Sayler to three years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. John Grunden, father of Mrs. Sayler, tried with the other two for the murder of Banker John Byron Sayler, was found not guilty. Twelve ballots in all were cast to reach the verdict. Two members of the jury demurred, holding out for an acquittal for Mrs. Sayler for many hours.

As the prisoners entered the courtroom Mrs. Sayler and Dr. Miller looked expectant and confident. So sure of acquittal were they that earlier in the day both had packed their trunks preparatory to leaving the jail. In strange contrast to her mother's self-confidence, Golda Sayler, the young daughter of the convicted woman, entered the courtroom at the same moment weeping bitterly. As the judge uttered the verdict against Dr. Miller Mrs. Sayler paled noticeably, and when her own sentence was read fell over upon her daughter's shoulder and wept. Dr. Miller showed no sign of emotion save for a slight twitching of the muscles of his mouth. Mrs. Miller uttered no sound, but was plainly overcome.

Grunden took his acquittal as phlegmatically as he ignored the trial proceedings. "I never knew Dr. Miller until I came to Crescent City three days before the tragedy," said Grunden. "I simply came up to visit my children. I expect never to see my daughter again, for I won't live much longer."

Dr. Miller refused to make any statement. The verdict is universally received in Watseka as satisfactory. Counsel Free P. Morris for the defense said that an appeal would be made and he expected it to be granted.

ORDERS CUT IN PULLMAN RATES

Interstate Board's Washington Rule Affects Trips West from Chicago.

Reductions in Pullman car rates, especially in the Northwest from Chicago to the Pacific, are ordered in a decision of the interstate commerce commission, given out the other day. Rates are reduced in every case where specific complaints were made. The commission establishes the principle that the upper berths are not worth so much to the public as lower berths. In the cases decided upper berth rates are placed at three-fourths of the lower berth rates, in some cases slightly less. By way of St. Paul the present rate of $14 for either berth from Chicago to Seattle will be reduced to $12 for a lower berth and $10 for an upper berth. Officials of the commission expect this rate to be adopted by roads running from Chicago to Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland and other Western points. The commission decided upon four rates, those from St. Paul to Chicago, Superior, Fargo and Seattle. The run from Chicago to St. Paul is 400 miles, and for this distance the commission recognizes a $2 rate for a lower berth. For upper berths, however, the price is reduced to $1.50. For short runs, such as that from St. Paul to Fargo, N. D., the $2 rate for a lower berth is reduced to $1.50, and the $2 rate for an upper berth is reduced to $1.10. The through rate from St. Paul to Seattle, now $12, is reduced to $10 for a lower berth and $8.50 for an upper berth.

DISASTER ON BRITISH STEAMER.

Child Is Killed, 50 Hurt, When Explosions Rock Ship.

A child was killed and fifty persons, mostly women and children, were injured by an explosion on the British steamer Cairnrona off Dungeness, England. The steamer caught fire and men battled for the lifeboats, thrusting women and children aside. The captain and the crew acted with creditable bravery. They forced the men back and insisted on taking the women and children off the burning vessel first. The steamers Upland and Kanawha were close by. They steamed near the Cairnrona and the passengers were transferred.

WILL EMPLOY NO MORE WOMEN

Baltimore and Ohio Road Finds Men Are More Satisfactory.

No more women will be engaged as stenographers, clerks or telegraph operators by the Baltimore & Ohio railroad. The road's auditors and statisticians estimate that on the average a young woman stenographer does 30 per cent less work than a young man in the same position, who also does the work more carefully and accurately. The same statement applies to other branches of work. The women, young and less young, now in the Baltimore & Ohio's employ, will not be dismissed, but each, as she leaves, will be succeeded by a man.

ICE!

REHEARING IN TRUST CASES.

New Arguments Ordered in Standard Oil and Tobacco Suits.

The Supreme Court of the United States has reassigned for argument the cases of the United States against the American Tobacco Company and the Standard Oil Company. The reargument of these cases comes as the direct result of the death of Justice Brewer. This noted jurist died just a few days after the Standard Oil case had been argued. As Justice Moody, owing to the fact that as Attorney General he had directed the suits, was unable to participate in the consideration of these cases, only seven justices were left to give a decision.

How the court was divided in regard to the decision in these cases is still as much a mystery as before the assignment of the cases for reargument. It is believed, however, that the court was evenly divided or almost so, and that it probably was loath to give to the country a decision which was not supported by a majority of a full court. Such a majority would be five members.

The fact that the corporation tax cases were not set for reargument is taken to mean that a decision will be announced in regard to the constitutionality of the law authorizing it within a short time.

THOMAS F. WALSH'S LIFE ENDS.

Multimillionaire Mining Man Dies at Washington.

Thomas F. Walsh, the Colorado multi-millionaire mine owner, died at his home in Washington the other night. He had been ill more than six months, heart disease following an attack of pneumonia. Mrs. Walsh, her daughter, Mrs. Edward McLean, and Edward McLean were at his bedside when the end came.

Mr. Walsh in February was taken to San Antonio, Tex. When he showed no improvement there he was brought to Washington on a fast special train. He declared he wished to see his infant grandchild, known as the "million dollar baby," before he died. Before he arived there, however, he had a large sun room built on the roof of his house similar to the "Solarium" which Edward H. Harriman had erected on his New York residence shortly before he died. Since his return to Washington Mr. Walsh had lived most of the time in this room. His wealth has been variously estimated at from $10,000,000 to $40,000,000.

It was in 1907 that the great tragedy of his life befell Mr. Walsh. His only son, Vincent Walsh, was killed in an automobile accident at Newport, and his only daughter, Evelyn Walsh, was so terribly injured that it was feared she was crippled permanently.

SWITCHMEN ACCUSED OF THEFT

Car Load of Potatoes Among Loot Alleged to Have Been Stolen.

The Kansas City police have arrested ten switchmen in the employ of the Kansas City Southern Railroad on a charge that they have been operating a syndicate for the wholesale stealing of goods in transit over the company's lines. Between $60,000 and $100,000 worth of merchandise has been stolen from cars by the syndicate in the last two years, officials of the road say. Last month $3,000 shortage was recorded. The men under arrest are Joseph Fitzgerald, Frank Jones, C. E. Culver, S. R. Stafford, H. A. Bagwell, M. Allen, J. P. Murphy, C. C. Hiatt, G. C. Brewer and L. E. Parlin. In one instance, the police say, a car load of potatoes was sidetracked at Sheffield, near Kansas City, and after ten bushels of tubers had been removed the remainder was abandoned

SAFE BLOWERS DEFY A CITY.

Four desperadoes armed with rifles held off a crowd of thirty aroused guests of a neighboring hotel in Lane, S. D., at 2:30 o'clock while they applied the match to the fuse of their final two powerful blasts against the obstinate vault door of the Citizens' State bank. The first explosion had brought out several persons, in night attire, but when they faced the dark muzzles of the rifles in the dim dawn they scurried back into the Mitchell Hotel and alarmed the rest of the sleepers and most of the town by phone. The robbers continued grimly at their work, with leveled rifles, for about an hour, but the proprietor of the hardware store could not be aroused to provide arms and ammunition for the people. Having fired two more blasts in vain, the desperadoes vanished back through the alley into another part of the town, where they stole the rig of a Methodist preacher and drove southward toward Virgil, eight miles away, where all trace of them has been lost.

BURGLAR CONFESSES MURDER.

Girl's Slayer Says Stealing Was So Fascinating He Couldn't Resist.

Unable further to withstand the examination to which the police were subjecting him, Bertram Gage Spencer confessed the murder of Miss Martha B. Blackstone at the home of Mrs. Sarah J. Dow on Round Hill, Springfield, Mass. Spencer also confessed the commission of a long series of burglaries.

Captain Boyle said Spencer in his confession declared he did not intend to kill Miss Blackstone or wound Miss Dow. He said that when he saw the women in the house he was more frightened than they were and that he fired his revolver on impulse. When asked why it was that he entered upon such a career of crime, Spencer said after his first burglary he was fascinated by the notoriety attached to the crime.

WOMAN KILLS BABIES.

20-Year-Old Mother Slays Her Two Children in Ohio.

"The spirits kept bothering me," is the only explanation offered by Mrs. Rosa Marquardt, 20 years old, of Akron, Ohio, who killed her 2-year-old daughter with a club and so seriously injured her 1-year-old baby that the child's death is expected. The woman was committed to the Massillon State Hospital.

VOTES TWO BATTLE SHIPS.

House, by 162 to 110, Orders War Craft to Cost $6,000,000 Each.

The naval appropriation bill carrying $128,037,602 and providing for two battleships was passed by the National House of Representatives the other day by the decisive vote of 162 to 110. The ships are to cost $6,000,000 each. Thirty-three Democrats voted for the two battleships and twenty-four Republicans against the proposition. In addition to the battleships the bill also provides for the construction of two fleet colliers and four submarine boats. As amended on motion of Mr. Fitzgerald of New York, the two battleships and two fleet colliers must be constructed by firms operating under the eight-hour law.

The committee on naval affairs had reported in favor of authorizing two battleships. Mr. Tawney of Minnesota, chairman of the appropriations committee, offered an amendment providing for only one battleship, while Mr. Hobson proposed an amendment providing for three. Mr. Hobson contended that three battleships would give no increase, but would provide only for the ordinary deprecation in the naval force. By an almost unanimous vote the House rejected this proposition.

HUGHES ASKS AN INQUIRY.

Wants Legislative Practices and Procedure Investigated.

With the ringing declaration that the recent disclosures of legislative dishonor and graft have caused "every honest citizen to tingle with shame," Governor Hughes of New York, in a special message to the Legislature of that State, called upon that body to make "immediate, impartial, thorough and unsparing investigation of legislative practices and procedure."

Accompanying the message was a preliminary report of Superintendent Hotchkiss outlining the facts developed at the fire insurance investigation in New York and setting forth the difficulties encountered in following up the various leads which have been uncovered. The superintendent says that obstacles apparently insuperable have developed in the course of the inquiry. These in his judgment warrant further investigation, but he has no power to pursue them and therefore has laid the facts thus far developed before the Governor for action.

Fairbanks Expedition Gains Summit of Tallest Peak in North America.

The Fairbanks expedition to Mount McKinley, the tallest peak in North America, reached the summit April 3, after a climb of one month from the base, it is announced. No traces of Dr. Frederick A. Cook's alleged ascent were found. The expedition, which left Fairbanks, Alaska, Dec. 15, while the controversy over Dr. Cook's disputed ascent was still raging, was financed by August Peterson and William McPhee.

ILLINOIS MAN HAS BOGUS MONEY

Police arrested in Winona, Minn., a man giving his name as Charles Dukes of Champaign, Ill., having on his person $800 in bogus paper currency. His valise contained counterfeit bills, printed only on one side, mostly of the $10 denomination, and also a box of paste with which the halves were pasted together. He received the money at Chippewa Falls, Wis., in a letter from Chicago, according to information obtained by the police.

BLOW UP BANK; ROB; BANDITS IN HOT FIGHT

ESCAPE WITH $2,000 BOOTY.

Later Three Men Are Captured, All Wounded, After Exciting Chase and Battle in Brush.

Five daring bandits, a sheriff and a large posse and a town marshal figured in a spectacular chase which resulted in the capture of three men following an explosion of nitroglycerin which destroyed the bank at Coal City, Ill., aroused the entire town and netted the burglars almost $2,000 in money and stamps. The bandits entered the town on a passing freight train and began operations by tying Barney Ghetto, the night watchman, and Washington Frie, the night engineer of the electrical plant.

They then blew up the bank building with a terrific charge of nitroglycerin and leaped on a west-bound Santa Fe freight train with their plunder. Three hours later three men, believed to be of their number, had been captured by Sheriff Thomas Steele of Morrison, Ill., who had been notified by the night watchman after the latter had broken loose the ropes which held him and made possible the organization of the posse.

Just as the train carrying the five bandits pulled out of the town Ghetto succeeded in cutting his bonds and rushed to a telephone. The sheriff at Morris was notified and the posse was organized. Several automobiles were pressed into service and the pursuit began. There is a road following the right of way of the Santa Fe tracks between Morris and Verona and along this the chase took place. For a time the members of the posse in their machines sped directly alongside the speeding freight train and shots were fired at dark objects which were thought to resemble the bandits. When at last the train came to a stop at Verona the cars were searched by the sheriff and his men. In an empty baggage car of the train were found three of the bandits. All three were wounded and their comrades had fled.

The other two were captured later at Joliet.

TORNADO CARRIES OFF HOUSES.

Woman, Blown Into Air, Saved by Telephone Wires.

A tornado carrying with it many cottages, trees and timber caused great damage southeast of Pine Bluff, Ark. Homes, stores, outhouses and other buildings were demolished, trees uprooted, fences blown away and much damage done to property of telephone and telegraph companies. A woman was blown from her home and carried into the air. She became caught in telephone wires and her screams attracted several men who let her down with a rope. She was uninjured.

No lives are reported lost, although it is said the tornado did great damage east of Pine Bluff. The storm was preceded by a rainfall and hail. The clouds formed into a funnel. People living in the path of the storm say it was over in a few seconds. Fifty small cottages occupied by negroes were unroofed and otherwise damaged. One house was completely overturned, but none of the occupants seriously injured. The storm appeared to take turns in skipping over one block and wrecking homes in every other one. The tornado was followed by terrific rainfall, which flooded the streets.

TRY TO ROB LIMITED.

Cut Air Hose on Fast Train, Fight Conductor and Flee.

Two masked bandits made an unsuccessful attempt to hold up and rob the Pioneer limited train from Chicago on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad, shortly after midnight the other morning as it sped through the picturesque dells region of southwestern Wisconsin. Conductor A. P. Shumway of Milwaukee, in charge of the train, was confronted on the platform of the sleeping car Ontonagon by the two robbers, who demanded that he signal the train to stop, then throw up his hands. He struck one of the men down with his lantern and retreated into the sleeping car. The bandits had cut the air hose of the train, stopping it, and they escaped. A few hours later two colored men were taken into custody in LaCrosse on suspicion of being the bandits.

Vast Timber Steals Charged.

The legislative investigation committee's report made to Governor Hay of Washington declares that for years purchasers of State timber lands have systematically plundered the State through the laxity, incompetency or dishonesty of employes of the State land department. Nearly 200 cases, the report says, have been found thus far in which the State inspector made erroneous reports.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Whilst we were about this last, Ephraim Yeates came loping down the avenue and through the gate to vault into the saddle of the first horse he could lay hands on; and so it was that we three took the northward road in the silver starlight, with the pursuit now in order again and in full cry behind us.

'Twas not until we had safely run the gauntlet of the vedette lines by a by-path known to the old hunter, and had shaken off the troopers that were following, that I found time to ask what had become of the men who had formed the ambush in the shrubbery.

The old man gave me his dry chuckle of a laugh.

"'Twas the same old roose de geer, as the down-country Frenchers 'u'd say. I stole the drunken sergeant's gun and two others, and let 'em off one to a time. As for the screechin', one bazoo's as good as a dozen, if so be ye blow it fierce enough."

"'Twas cut and dried beforehand," Dick explained. "I had an inkling of what was afoot from Ephraim, here, whom I stumbled on when I dropped from the stair window that Madge opened for me. He went to set his one-man ambush whilst I was trying to warn you."

"So," said I. "Our skins are whole, but after all we have come off with never a word to take back to Dan Morgan—unless you have the word."

"Not I," Dick said, ruefully.

The old man chuckled again.

"Ye ain't old enough, neither one o' ye, ez I allow. It takes a right old person to fish out the innards of an inimy's secrets. Colonel Tarleton, hoss, foot and dragoons, with the seventh rigiment and a part o' the seventy-first, will take the big road for Dan Morgan's camp to-morrow at sun-up. And right soon afterwards, Gin'ral Cornwallis 'll foller on.

'Twas late in the afternoon of the last day of January when we set out together, Jennifer and I, from a camp of conference at Sherrard's Ford. The military situation, lately so critical for us, had reached and passed one of its many subclimaxes. Morgan's little army, with its prisoners still safe in hand, was on its way northward to Charlottesville in Virginia, and only the officers remained behind to confer with General Greene.

As for the British commander's intendings, we had conflicting reports. Two days earlier, Lord Cornwallis had burned his heavy baggage at Ramsour's Mill, and so we had assurance that the pursuit was only delayed. But whether, when he should break his camp at Forney's plantation, he would go northward after Morgan and the prisoners, or cross the river at some nearhand ford to chase our main, none of our scouts could tell us.

At times we were close upon the British sentries, with every nerve strained tense for fight or flight; anon we would be making wide detours through bog and fen, or beneath the black network of wet branches with the rain-soaked leaf beds under foot to make the horses' treadings as noiseless as a cat's.

None the less, in the fullness of time—'twas near about midnight as we guessed it—we had our patience well rewarded. Hovering on the confines of the camp we heard the muffled drum-tap of the reveille, and soon there was the stir of an army making ready for the march.

"Which way will it be, north or south?" whispered Dick, when we had dismounted to cloak the heads of the horses.

"We shall know shortly," said I; and truly, we did, being well-nigh enveloped and ridden down by the fringe of light-horse deploying to pioneer the way. When we had sheered off to let this skirmish cloud blow by, Dick struck a spark into his tinderbox to have a sight of his compass needle.

"South and by east," he announced; "that will mean Beattie's Ford, I take it."

"Not unless they swim, horse and foot," I objected. "'Twill be Macgowan's, more likely."

Having this uncertainty to resolve, we must hang upon the skirts of the British advance till we could make sure, and this proved to be a most perilous business. Yet by riding abreast of the moving main we did resolve the uncertainty; heard the orders passed from man to man, and later saw a small feinting detachment split off to take the road for Beattie's, whilst the main body held on for Macgowan's; all this before we were discovered in the gloaming of the dawn by some of Tarleton's men.

Then, I promise you, my dears, it was neck or nothing. Anyway, we sped toward the near-by river, spurring our wearied beasts as men who ride for life, with a dozen troopers so close upon us that when I glanced over my shoulder the foremost of the redcoat riders was having his face well bespattered with the mud from my horse's heels.

'Twas touch and go, but happily, as I have said, the river was at hand. We came to the high bank some hundred yards above the fording place, and lacking Dick's example to shame me to the braver course, I fear I should have recoiled at the brink. But when the lad sent his horse without the missing of a bound far out over the eddying flood, I shook the reins on the sorrel's neck, gave him the word and shut my eyes.

After all, it was nothing worse than a cold plunge, with a few pistol shots to spatter harmlessly around us when we came up for air. Moreover, there were the camp-fires of Davidson's men on the farther bank to encourage us; and so swimming and wading by turns we got across in time to give the alarm.

As you would guess, there was a mighty stir on our side of the river when we had splashed ashore and got our news well born. As it turned out, General Davidson's main camp was a good half-mile back from the river in one of the outfields of Appleby Hundred. So it chanced there were upon the spot only brave Joe Graham and his fifty riflemen to dispute the passage of an army.

What was done at Macgowan's Ford in the gray of the morning of February 1st, 1781, has become a page in our history. But I protest that not any of the chroniclers do even-handed justice to the little band of patriot riflemen doing their utmost to hold a hundred-to-one outnumbering host in check.

'Twas a fine sight, be the onlooker Whig or Tory. The Guards, led by the fiery Irishman, O'Hara, took the water first, the men crowding shoulder to shoulder to brace against the sweep of the current which, on the western side of the stream, was little less than a mill-tail for swiftness. After them came the foot and horse in solid squares, and always with more to follow. None the less, our little handful did not blanch; and when the Guards in midstream held straight across instead of bearing to the right as the ford ran, a shout went up on our side and the fifty hastened up from the ford-head as one man to face the enemy squarely.

Now it was that the brown-barreled rifles began to crack and spit fire; and I do think if we had had our other two hundred and fifty out of that back field on the manor lands, we might at least have made the wading redcoats hurry a little. Indeed, as it was, the van of the Guards broke here and there, and we could hear O'Hara berating his men as only a battle-mad Irishman can.

Having no firearms save our wetted pistols, Jennifer and I crouched in cover, waiting to do what two swordsmen might when the blade's length should bridge the fast-narrowing distance between us and the advancing host.

We had tethered our horses in a thicket of scrub oak where they would be out of bullet-reach until the enemy gained the bank. As I looked to make sure of them, the sorrel gave a shrill neigh to welcome the pounding of hoofs on the Appleby road. I made sure this would be General Davidson bringing in the reserves; and so, indeed, it was; but he came too late. O'Hara's men were climbing the bank; and Joe Graham was rallying his little company for flight in the face of an onset that made the tree fringe sing with musket balls.

"'Tis our cue to run away!" Dick shouted, dragging me to my feet. "To the horses!"

But now we were too late. Davidson's men were between us and the scrub oak thicket, and we must wait till the column swept by. Dick put his face to the foe and his back to a tree. Whereupon I dragged him down promptly, telling him his broadsword would make but a poor shift parrying musket-balls.

What followed after was over and done within a dozen fluttering heart-beats. Seeing the case was desperate, General Davidson gathered Graham's fifty in his flying column, flogged his rear into the retreat, and was pitched out of his saddle by a Tory rifle-ball whilst he was doing it. And when the way to our horses was clear of the galloping Carolinians, and we would have run to mount and ride after them, the swarming redcoat van was upon us.

"Up with you and out of this!" cried Jennifer, setting me the example. "We must e'en gallop as we can. Quick, man!"

How we rode free out of that hurly-burly at the ford-head you must figure for yourselves, if you can. The men of the British vanguard were all about us when we got to the scrub oak thicket and mounted, but no one of them raised a hand to stay us. I have thought since that mayhap they took us for a pair of their own Tory allies who were not above wearing the stolen uniforms of the dead. Be that as it may, we rode away unhindered, Dick in all the bravery of his captain's slashings, and I in light-horse buff and blue, taking the road toward the manor house because that was the only one open to us, and ambling leisurely till we were beyond the sight and sound of the victors at the ford. But once at large, we put spurs to our horses in true ritter fashion; and we had galloped half way to Appleby house before Dick said:

"Now we are well out of that, what next? We can not go to Margery with the whole British army at our heels."

"Nay, but we shall, if only for a short half-hour," I asserted. Then, as once before, I gave him my best bow.

"For the last time, it may be, let me play the lord of the manor. You are very welcome to my father's demesne, Richard, and to all of its holdings."

"All?" said he, giving me a quick-shot as we pressed on side by side.

"Yes, all," said I; and I meant it in good faith. He should have the lady, too; that precious holding of the old manse without whom my father's acres would be but a bauble to be lost or won indifferently.

"Then you do not love Madge more?" he queried, his eye kindling.

"Nay, I did not say that. But I did say the other; that you should have the house and all its holdings."

We were cantering up the oak-sentried avenue to that door which Gilbert Stair had once sought to keep against us with his bell-mouthed blunderbuss. There was no sign of any living thing about the place; and when we had no answer to our sword-hilt knockings on the door, the lad turned upon me with a flash of anger in his eyes and his lip a-curl.

"You knew full well what you were promising, John Ireton!" he said. "She is not here."

EARNING A BIG SALARY.

Story About General Manager of the New York Interborough.

"How does a high-salaried man earn his pay?" asks a writer in System, and proceeds to answer his own question with the following incident:

"Some time ago Frank Hedley, the general manager of the Interborough, was waiting on a subway station platform. A train drew in with the power on, reached the stop signal and came to a sudden halt, jolting the passengers and straining the machinery. The incident gave him an idea.

"He went to a manufacturer of time clocks and gave an order for an experimental timepiece that would record elapsed time during which electric power was being used by the Interborough trains. The manufacturer in due time produced a small device that could be attached to the mechanism in the motorman's box in such a way that the power could be turned on only after the time clock had been unlocked by the motorman's special key and the clock set in operation.

"When the power was shut off the clock would record the exact moment. By this means the exact number of hours, minutes and seconds during which that motorman consumed electric current was automatically recorded and a special device printed the total elapsed time during the day's run.

The device was attached to the motormen's control boxes in all the trains on one line and experimented with for a month. Instructions were issued to the motormen to coast into the stations by turning off the power as far distant from the stopping place as possible and come to a gradual halt after running some rods by the force of momentum. Rewards were offered to the men whose records showed the most economical use of electric power.

"At the end of the month the engineer of the line reported a reduction of over 15 per cent in the power consumed. The individual records of the men showed a reduction ranging from 10 per cent to 40 per cent over the amount of power used previously. Time clocks have been ordered for the other Interborough lines.

"It may be assumed that the same saving in power will be effected. The Interborough's annual coal bill for producing electric current is $2,800,000. A saving of 15 per cent means a saving of $294,000 a year on this item alone, to say nothing of the saving on wear and tear of machinery. The sum is considerably larger than Frank Hedley's salary."

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Nearly thirty-five wagons containing over one hundred gypsies were driven from South Bend by the police.

When Pleasant N. Koons, a justice of the peace of Newcastle, accepted a cash fine from a prisoner before him, who was charged with intoxication he did not notice that one of the dollars was counterfeit. He is now wondering who paid it to him. The dollar is a rough imitation of a silver dollar of the 1889 coinage of the New Orleans mint.

The Board of Trustees of the Indiana Village for Epileptics, in session at the village north of Newcastle, reorganized for the coming year with the following officers: President, Enoch G. Holgate, of Bloomington; secretary, Dr. Wilmer Christian, of Indianapolis, and treasurer, George Nichol, of Anderson.

J. F. Van Zandt, who for twenty-eight years was connected with the railway mail service on the Southern railroad, has resigned his position and will engage in business at New Albany. During the time he served the government he traveled over one million, five hundred thousand miles and in all the time he served he never lost a registered mail package.

Mr. and Mrs. John Heavner, of Seymour, launched their gasoline boat in White river, near that city, a few days ago, and started on a journey to Minneapolis, Minn. They have planned to go down White river to the Wabash, thence into the Ohio and up the Mississippi. After a short stop at St. Louis they will proceed to their destination. They expect to spend several weeks on the water. Heavner is an electrician of Seymour.

The business men of Lynville have organized for the purpose of getting a traction line for the town. Lynville is an inland town ten miles from Boonville, which is on the Southern railroad and the terminus of the Evansville and Boonville traction line, and seven miles from Lynn station on the Evansville & Indianapolis railroad. The Lynville merchants hope to induce the Evansville & Boonville company to extend the traction line on to Lynnville.

Mrs. Hartman Nolte, aged 40, died at her home in Clinton from the effects of a dose of morphine which a physician said was enough to kill a rhinoceros. It is thought the woman committed suicide, although the drug may have been taken through ignorance. The woman had been an invalid many months and had been denied morphine by her husband. She obtained it by sending her son to a drug store and had swallowed over half the contents of a bottle before her husband found what she had done. She lived several hours.

Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Robinson, of Lowell, were victims of a runaway horse and automobile accident at Lowell. They were driving home from church when the horse became frightened at a scorching automobile. The animal ran away, crashed into the Lowell opera house after leaping on to the sidewalk in Commercial avenue, and piled the buggy, occupants and the glass of the window into an indiscriminate heap. The maddened animal kicked itself loose. Robinson was bruised about the head and body and Mrs. Robinson was hurt internally.

Although he was a good swimmer and made a hard fight for life, the handicap of his clothing and shoes proved too much for J. R. Egloff, who fell from a gasoline launch into the Wabash river, near Emison, and was drowned. The man had been walking on the roof of the boat when he lost footing and fell, dragging his companion, William Woodrum, with him. The latter swam to the Illinois shore in safety. After falling in the water Egloff swam after the boat, but could not reach it. The gasoline on the vessel ran out and the men on the boat were unable to aid him and Egloff sank. Later his body was found near the mouth of a sewer at Wolfe Hill, about one hundred yards from the place of drowning.

Attorney Charles E. Averill acted as judge in the Indianapolis Police Court when a controversy arose as to whether or not a rooster was an animal. He was "from Missouri," to use a slang expression, and he insisted on looking at the section of the law that put the rooster in the class with animals. The prosecutor said he did not think a rooster was an animal until he had seen it in the law books, and he got out a book and marked a section for the court's edification. There it was in print—that domestic fowls, doves and birds shall be considered as animals in cases of cruelty to animals. The court then proceeded to hear evidence against George Taylor, 217 South Oakland avenue, who was charged with cruelty to animals by beating a rooster with a spade. He killed the rooster because it persisted in coming into his yard.

Mrs. Ott Crownover, living near Milton, marketed 65¼ dozen eggs at Cambridge City. A merchant said this is the largest number of eggs of one week's gathering ever marketed in the city.

Announcement has been made of the marriage of Robert T. Grimes, aged 54, formerly postmaster of Anderson, and Miss Frone Smith, aged 51, who has been a clerk in the postoffice there for the last eight years. The bride is a sister of Mr. Grimes' first wife.

M. A. Abbott & Sons, at Chrisney, bought a wagonload of eggs from Frank Hurst, at Newtonville, for which they paid over $300.

Nellie Bradley, operator in a telephone exchange at Terre Haute, heard a hurry call for a surgeon and learned that her father, Thomas Bradley, had been run over by a Vandalia train at a crossing. He died twenty minutes later. He was a Vandalia employe for forty years.

John B. Ryan, a detective well known in Northern Indiana, has opened an agency and information bureau in the People's Trust building in Fort Wayne. Mr. Ryan is a Spanish-American war veteran and was a deputy sheriff of Allen County under several administrations.

The residence of James Gibson, of Evansville, was badly damaged by fire at 1 o'clock in the morning. Mrs. Gibson and her five children were sleeping in the home and were rescued by neighbors rushing in and rolling them down a plank from the second story. All escaped alive.

For a seven-mile drain through farms north of Anderson the drainage commissioners have recommended that cement tile be used. It is said that clay tile for the proposed ditch would cost $25,000, while cement tile can be had for $18,000. It has not been definitely determined as to which shall be adopted.

Fire caused by a defective flue destroyed four dwellings in Blankenburg, a suburb of Evansville. The loss is $8,000. A fire starting in dry grass destroyed the fence around the Tri-State Fair Grounds, where a circus is wintering. The fire caused a stampede among the animals and they were hard to control.

Two bronze cannon, obtained through the efforts of Congressman Halliday, were placed in front of the city building in Brazil recently, with exercises conducted by the few remaining members of General Canby Post No. 2, G. A. R. The cannon were hitched to a carriage containing Mr. Halliday and members of the post who were too feeble to walk, and, escorted by thirty other members, marched to the city hall.

Melvin Anderson, of Hartsville, Bartholomew County, owns a horse that eats rope. The horse was hitched by a rope halter and the halter disappeared. Other rope about the barn went the same way, and finally the animal was watched. It passed up corn and oats to eat rope. Even twine strings were eagerly devoured by the animal. A veterinary surgeon was called to examine the horse, but he gave the case up as one that baffled his skill.

High speed by traction cars passing through Columbus is soon to be a thing of the past as the City Council has instructed City Attorney C. B. Cooper to prepare an ordinance making it unlawful for interurban cars to run at a greater speed than eight miles an hour. The Indianapolis, Columbus & Southern Traction Company has about one and one-half miles of track in the city and except in the business section of the city the cars run at a high rate of speed. The Council intends to reduce this speed from the time the city is entered until the car leaves.

Miss Laura Smith, a young stenographer, saved Lewis Dawson, a printer from being run down by a cut of freight cars at the Fourth street crossing in Connersville. Dawson, whose hearing is defective, was about to go on the crossing, and did not see or hear the cut of cars approaching. Miss Smith was several yards behind Dawson and she ran, seized him and pulled him back out of danger a moment before the cars went by. The girl collapsed and almost fainted afterward, but Dawson declared the pull she gave him, which was his first intimation of danger, would have moved a giant.

A box of gold, the value of which the finder refuses to make known, was uncovered at Oakland City by Colonel W. M. Cockrum in an old house which he was having moved recently. Colonel Cockrum indorsed a note for an old man last winter and the house was bought with money secured by the note. Colonel Cockrum was forced to pay the note and the house fell into his possession. He tried to get the owner of the land, where the old house stood, to take it and assume the note, but the land owner refused. Workmen were engaged in tearing down the house when a circle of nail heads was discovered in a plank. This caused Colonel Cockrum to investigate and when the plank was removed the tin box of gold fell out. No one knows who placed the money there, the amount of which is admitted to be large. Colonel Cockrum, who is the author of Cockrum's "Pioneer History of Indiana," regards his indorsing that note a profitable transaction.

S. D. Morrison sold three hogs at North Vernon for $148.47. The hogs weighed 1,470 pounds, and the price paid was $10.10 a hundred pounds.

The Rev. Milton Mahin, a veteran superannuated minister of the Methodist church of Newcastle, went to Bluffton to attend the annual Methodist Conference, the sixty-ninth conference he has attended. Despite his age, he preaches whenever called upon and often holds two services in one day. He is 87 years old.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of Chicago trade says:

"The basic conditions influencing current operations gather strength as the season advances. The volume of payments through the banks sustains a high level, trading defaults are not disturbing to credits and the government report of winter wheat furnishes a favorable development. Some sections suffered from the broken weather and heavy construction was hindered temporarily, but new demands continued satisfactory in iron, steel, brass and woodworking.

"No conspicuously large individual contracts were negotiated for equipment, although there is notable extension of activity in outdoor branches, and farm work is now well advanced and favored by good soil conditions. Production and distribution in the leading industries offer ample testimony to sustained improvement.

"Retail trade held up fairly well, although the buying of seasonable wares did not equal expectations. Earnings of the Chicago steam roads show substantial gains in gross. The demand for money is steady, with rates for choice commercial paper 4½ to 5 per cent.

"Bank clearings, $289,250,651, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1909 by 13.7 per cent, and compare with $215,502,848 in 1908. Failures reported in the Chicago district numbered twenty-four, as against twenty-seven last week, twenty-one in 1909 and twenty-nine in 1908. Those with liabilities over $5,000 numbered seven, as against eight last week, four in 1909 and ten in 1908."

NEW YORK.

Trade and crop reports still betray irregularity. In the northwest, on the Pacific coast and in Texas, where needed rains have fallen, trade and crop reports are alike good. In the southwest, the central west, parts of the south and on the upper Atlantic coast there is conservatism in buying verging upon caution, and there is more evidence of the repression exercised upon trade movements by crop uncertainty or because of the high level of prices discouraging buying except for absolute current needs. Jobbing and wholesale trade, except in the sections favorably situated mentioned above, has been rather quiet. Reports as to collections show that payments are nowhere better than fair and are slow at many centers.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with April 7 were 240, as against 229 last week, 227 in the like week of 1909, 258 in 1908, 194 in 1907 and 161 in 1906.—Bradstreet's.

Tonic or Stimulant?

There is an immense difference between a tonic and a stimulant. Up one day, way back the next; that's a stimulant. Steady progress day by day toward perfect health; that's a tonic. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is a tonic, a strong tonic. The only Sarsaparilla entirely free from alcohol. Do not stimulate unless your doctor says so. He knows. Ask him. Do as he says. *J.C. MYSTERY OF THE JUNGLE.

The Elephant Is a Survivor of Days in Which There Were Giants.

In Oriental legend the elephant is always the symbol of power and prowess in battle, says an English writer, and of all the elephant stories with which India teems, without doubt the best is that which relates how the mighty standard bearing elephant of the Perishwa won a great victory for its Mahratta lord. At the moment when the elephant had been told to halt its mahout was killed. The shock of battle closed around it, and the Mahratta forces were borne back; but still the elephant stood and the standard which it carried still flew, so that the Peishwa soldiers could not believe that they were indeed overcome, and rallying in their turn drove the enemy backward till the tide swept past the rooted elephant and left it towering colossal among the slain.

The fight was over and won, and then they would have had the elephant move from the battlefield; but it waited for the dead man's voice.

For three days and nights it remained where it had been told to remain, and neither bribe nor threat would move it till they sent to the village on the Nebudda, a hundred miles away, and fetched the mahout's little son, a round eyed lisping child—and then at last the hero of that victorious day, remembering how its master had often in brief absence delegated authority to the child, confessed its allegiance and with the shattered battle harness clanging at each stately stride swung slowly along the road behind the boy.

So, salaam, Bahadur! No mere human being will ever quite understand the workings of your mind or the contradictions of that character which is compact of paradoxes, even as you yourself are an anachronism, a survivor from an earlier age in the earth's history, of the days in which there were giants. With all your strength and bulk you are gentle and love to busy yourself with trifles; greatly simple-minded and with a fine amenability to discipline, you are subject to unreasoning petulances and panics, and when the evil fit is on you you have the bad cunning of a fiend; fronting the shock of battle unterrified, you are obedient to children and sadly afraid of little dogs; earth-shaking, you can move so noiselessly that no cat goes with softer footfalls.

No man can measure all your ways any more, seemingly, than man can tell what happens to dead wild elephants, which, making all allowance for their longevity, are not found nearly as often as they ought to be. Natives of India explain it by saying that the wild elephant never dies. So, salaam again, Noble One, Lord of Unnumbered Days!

VALUE OF COTTONSEED OIL.

It Is Fast Coming Forward as a Food for Man and Beast.

Up to 50 years ago cottonseed had little or no commercial value, its possibilities not having been fully realized; even 30 years ago there were only 40 cottonseed oil mills in the United States. It is only in the last 20 years, indeed, that the cottonseed oil industry has become a vitally important factor in the economical development of the south. There are at the present time over 800 cottonseed oil mills and refineries in the southern states, representing an investment of over $100,000,000. These mills have an annual output of $90,000,000, over $30,000,000 of which is shipped to foreign lands.

Cottonseed oil is fast coming to the front as a food for man and beast. In Georgia alone the number of oil mills increased from 58 in 1901 to 130 in 1908, with a comparative value of $5,000,000 and $17,000,000. To-day the seed in a cotton bale is almost as valuable to the farmer as the cotton itself. What it will be to-morrow no one can foresay. Each day sees a larger field for its oil and a more extended use of its meal. For general cooking purposes cottonseed oil has no superior. A purely vegetable fat, it possesses peculiar dietetic and hygienic properties. It is the only substitute for the olive oil of Italy. As a general food for cattle, horses, sheep and hogs the meal of the cotton seed is unequaled. It is both a builder and a fattener, and cattle fed upon it are invariably healthy.

Acquainted With the Method.

He was a bright young lawyer, but very bashful in the affairs of love, though he was deeply in love with a young woman who was celebrated among her friends for her repartee. The only obstacle in the way of the young man was his exceeding shyness; for, while always in perfect command of himself in the court room, he became almost speechless in the presence of his adored one. As one method of showing his affection, it was his custom to shower her with presents.

The mother of the young woman was not at all satisfied with the status of the case, and spoke to her daughter about the matter.

"My dear," she said, "you have let Mr. Burnlight practically monopolize your society for a year, and now you have scarcely any other callers. Has he ever given you to understand that his intentions are serious?"

"No, he has not said anything, mamma, but I know they are."

"How can you know it, child, when he has said nothing?"

The girl smiled, self-satisfied, "Well, mamma," she replied, "you know he is a lawyer, and lawyers always begin a contract with 'Know all men by these presents.'"

WOVEN WIRE FENCE.

There is so many makes of fence on the market, some good, some very poor. I have handled a number of different makes and am convinced that the AMERICAN FENCE is the best value for the money of any fence on the market. The strength of fence depends on the weight of the wire in the fence. Now compare the weight of a ROD of AMERICAN FENCE with the weight of a rod of any other fence then compare the price. Do not take the dealers word as to how much it weighs but put it on the scales and weigh it. I can sell you

Can you buy any other fence so cheap?

I have eight different styles on hand now. The American Steel and Wire Company make nearly all the wire that is woven in the different makes of fence and it is folly for an agent of any other make of fence to claim a superior quality of wire or of galvanizing. Every manufacturer of fence has an idea as to what temper the wire should be for a fence and orders his wire tempered accordingly, in other words he experimenting at the Farmers expense. The American Steel and Wire Company have passed the experimental stage and are producing a composition of Steel for Fence that is perfectly adapted for it. Every farmer that has had any experience with wire knows that wire exposed to the weather becomes hard and brittle, this feature has been largely eliminated in the special wire used in AMERICAN FENCE. While the wire is stiff and springy it is flexible enough to be easily spliced and will remain so. We will explain other good features if you will call and see us.

B. & O. Shops.

From present indications the output of the Mount Clare shops of the B. & O. railroad for the month of April will be the largest in their history even exceeding the record for March when 45 locomotives underwent heavy repairs and were rebuilt. About 2,000 men are employed by the B. & O. at Mt. Clare, 1,600 being in the locomotive shops, and the steady increase of traffic on the system has necessitated overtime work by many of them in order to keep the equipment in condition to handle the business. Mount Clare is the principal shop on the B. & O., and most of the heavy repair work and rebuilding of equipment is done there.

In order that the shops might be run to their full capacity the B. & O. recently placed a large order for new machinery, and much of this has been put in place during the past month. A large machine for planing locomotive frames from the raw casting, termed a double-head frame slaughter machine, has replaced a smaller machine formerly used for this purpose. Electrically driven and of the most modern design, the new machine, according to Master Mechanic A. P. Prendergast, will be able to turn out about five times the amount of work done by the one it replaced. Eight modern engine lathes, a quadruple multitude drilling machine, a steam hammer for the blacksmith shop, numerous wood-working machines for the cabinet shop, an automatic turret lathe and various special machines have been installed. The lathes and drilling machines are driven by electricity.

The new equipment orders are being filled as rapidly as possible and placed in immediate service. Up to the present time 100 consolidation freight engines and 20 Atlantic type Express engines have been received. The entire order was for 230 freight and 26 passenger engines. Of the order for 10,000 freight cars, about 3,000 have been delivered and put in use. Between 100 and 125 freight cars are being delivered daily, and next week delivery of the 70 passenger coaches will be commenced.

Is Taken In

The culmination of a series of unnatural acts in a young man's life came Saturday when Judge Bratton gave Ralph Kressly a lecture and, incidently, a sentence of one to eight years in the Indiana Reformatory at Jeffersonville. Young Kressley was picked up a few days ago for stealing a number of photographs from the Smith gallery and distributing them promiscously about the city to which he pleaded guilty when arraigned before the court. His case was taken under advisement and Judge Bratton made an exhaustive investigation of the young man's past only to learn that he had already been in the Boy's School at Plainfield, had been incorrigible, given his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Kressley, much trouble, and had been an annoyance to the public in general. The lad is 18 years of age.—Monday's Dispatch.

To Kill Flies

The London "Lancet," the leading medical journal of the world, says that the best and simplest fly-killer is a weak solution of formaldehyde in water (two teaspoonsful to the pint.) Place in plates or saucers throughout the house. Ten cents worth of formaldehyde will last an ordinary family all summer. It has no offensive smell, is fatal to disease organisms, and is practically non-poisonous except to insects. Pyrethrum powder, which may be bought at any drug store, burned in the house will also kill flies.

Epilepsy, Fits

"My son was cured of a very bad case of epilepsy with Dr. Miles' Nervine."
MRS. D. BAKER, Cleveland, O.

"My little daughter who was afflicted with St. Vitus' Dance is now entirely well after taking Dr. Miles' Nervine only four months."
MRS. C. G. BENNETT, Alma, Mich.

Epilepsy, Fits, St. Vitus' Dance and Spasms, are all nervous diseases. They have been cured in so many instances with Dr. Miles' Nervine that it is reasonable to conclude that it is almost sure to cure you. With nervous diseases of a severe type, persistent use has almost invariably resulted in a complete cure or lasting benefits, worth many times the cost of the remedy. The best evidence you can get of its merits is to write to those who have used it. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

The M. E. church here was surprised when they learned that upon the return of Rev. D. A. J. Brown from the Conference, that he had been sent to the Bobo, Ind., charge. The three charges had expressed themselves, that they wanted Brown back and he also wanted to return but the conference saw fit to make the change. Mr. Brown had been here but one year and his work has been a grand success. While the people are sorry to see them leave, the good wishes of the entire people go with them. Rev. Burt will fill the charge and his family and goods will be here this week.

The Demon of the Air

is the germ of Lagrippe, that, breathed in, brings suffering to thousands Its after effects are weakness, nervousness, loss of appetite, energy and ambition, with disordered liver and kidneys. The greatest need then is Electric Bitters, the splendid tonic, blood purifier and regulator of stomach, liver and kidneys. Thousands have proved that they wonderfully strengthen the nerves, build up the system and restore health and good spirits after an attack of Grip. If suffering, try them. Only 50c. Perfect satisfaction guaranteed by H. L. Dunkle.

False Economy.

John D. Rockefeller, ere he adopted the policy of silence, said one day to a reporter:

"Young men must not think that I advocate miserly habits. Economy I advocate, of course, but wise spending I advocate, too. The miser, laying nothing out, can never advance. In fact, the miser has no better understanding of economy than little Tommy Witherill of Cleveland has. Tommy listened to a lesson on economy from his father one day. He learned that nothing good or whole was ever to be thrown away and so forth, and that evening he came in to supper swinging by the tail a fragrant dead cat.

"'Look, father,' he said. 'Look what I found on the dump—a perfectly good cat that somebody throwed away.'"

Saved From the Grave

"I had about given up hope after nearly four years of suffering from a severe lung trouble," writes Mrs. M. L. Dix, of Clarksville, Tenn. "Often the pain in my chest would be almost unbearable and I could not do any work, but Dr. King's New Discovery has made me feel like a new person. Its the best medicine made for the throat and lungs." Obstinate coughs, stubborn colds, hay fever, lagrippe, asthma, croup, bronchitis and hemorrhages, hoarseness and whooping cough yield quickly to this wonderful medicine. Try it, 50c and $1. Trial bottles free. Guaranteed by H. L. Dunkle.

What Ailed It.

"I wish you would tell me what the trouble is with this watch," said the customer, handing it to the jeweler.

"The trouble," said the jeweler, looking at the number of the timepiece and referring to his ledger, "is that I haven't been paid yet for the cleaning I gave it two years ago."

When Company Comes.

If there's one thing above all others that makes a woman feel desperate it is to have company drop in unexpectedly to spend the day, and to know that her table cloth is yellow from the last washing, and the napkins worn in holes and dingy looking. If she had used Easy Task laundry soap her table linen would have been spotlessly white and she would be proud to it. Easy Task soap is the enemy of dirt and the friend of fabrics of all kinds. Try it next Monday and you'll rename washday to Easy Task day.

Soap Grows on Trees.

Side by side grow the soap tree and the tallow tree. The soap tree yields a product from which is manufactured the purest article of soap that is possible to be made. Indeed, the pulp of the berry is a natural soap, and will make a lather almost like the manufactured article. The soap berry tree is now creating widespread interest and the berries are being imported from Algiers and China.

It will pay to plant the trees and look after their cultivation. The product of the tallow tree also enters into the making of soap, and the two together make a nice combination, and their cultivation should be looked after by those interested in new industries. Besides soap, the soap berries make a very fine oil, and when the virtues of the tallow tree are fully known, it may also yield a fine and profitable oil. The young man who naw plants out a ten or twenty-acre orchard of these two trees may drop into an easy fortune.—Ocala (Fla.) Banner.

Thief Proof.

Some years ago a well known London solicitor, recently deceased, successfully defended a man charged with burglary, and a few days later there came by post a valuable gold hunter watch, with an inscription to the effect that it was a gift from a certain London society, presumably of doubtful practices. Years afterward the solicitor had the watch stolen from his waistcoat pocket, but it came back to him by post with a letter of apology, stating that "we never rob one of our pals."—London Answers.

ABANDONED IT

For the Old Fashioned Coffee Was Killing.

"I always drank coffee with the rest of the family, for it seemed as if there was nothing for breakfast if we did not have it on the table.

"I had been troubled some time with my heart, which did not feel right. This trouble grew worse steadily.

"Sometimes it would beat fast and at other times very slowly, so that I would hardly be able to do work for an hour or two after breakfast, and if I walked up a hill, it gave me a severe pain.

"I had no idea of what the trouble was until a friend suggested that perhaps it might be caused by coffee drinking. I tried leaving off the coffee and began drinking Postum. The change came quickly. I am now glad to say that I am entirely well of the heart trouble and attribute the relief to leaving off coffee and the use of Postum.

"A number of my friends have abandoned the old fashioned coffee and have taken up with Postum, which they are using steadily. There are some people that make Postum very weak and tasteless, but if it is boiled long enough, according to directions, it is a very delicious beverage. We have never used any of the old fashioned coffee since Postum was first started in our house."

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

GOING FORWARD.

By Rev. M. D. Clubb.

Text—"And the Lord said unto Moses, wherefore criest thou unto me? Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward."—Exodus 14:17.

These words bring to our minds the history of Israel's wonderful deliverance from Egyptian bondage. For a long time they had been subjected to the most inhuman treatment. Their sufferings made them think of their God, whose service they had neglected. They cried to Him for deliverance, and He heard their cry. After a series of the most astounding miracles, the proud and wicked Pharaoh had given them permission to depart out of the land. But hardly were they started on their way before his cruel heart became hardened, and he determined to pursue and either destroy them or bring them again under his reign of terror and despotism. He gathered his army and started in hot pursuit, overtaking them at the Red Sea. The Israelites were terror-stricken. Before them was a watery grave; behind them a mighty army. Rugged cliffs were on either side. Escape seemed impossible. In their extremity God speaks. He said to Moses: "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." They obeyed the command, and God prepared a way through the rolling billows by which they marched to safety and to freedom.

God says to you and to me: "Go forward," not backward, not to the right nor to the left, but forward. There is danger in standing still. Really, there is no such thing as a congregation or a Christian standing still. The very moment we try to stand still we begin to go back. To go forward means life, enlargement, success. It means that whatever of failure or achievement has been ours in the past, shall be but stepping-stones to higher, grander and nobler attainments in the days to come.

In going forward we show our faith in God. God honors faith wherever He finds it. Once while the Savior was teaching in Capernaum, the people were intensely stirred because of the wonderful things which He did. And the scribes and Pharisees and wise men from Jerusalem came up to this northern town to see what it all meant. They didn't come to get a blessing; they came through curiosity. The multitudes thronged the great Teacher as He taught in the house. But let us go out and see what is being done on the outside. Yonder are four men bearing a burden. What is it? It is a man with the palsy. They say: "If we can only get to Jesus, He will heal him." They brought him to the door, but could not get in for the crowd. They were not disheartened. They had faith; and faith look over obstacles. Faith will not surrender. So they carried him to the top of the house and broke a hole in the roof and let him down at the feet of Jesus.

STANDARD OF CHRISTIAN FAITH.

By Bishop G. M. Matthews, D. D.

Text—"It cannot be gotten for gold, neither shall silver be weighed for the price thereof."—Job xxviii:15.

The one great truth to which Job would draw our attention is their contrasted value of true wisdom, or the redemption system of God in Jesus Christ. Precious metals and costly ores, though hidden, may be found by means of human ingenuity and diligence. But where can true wisdom and true riches be found? Nowhere except in the living God. Go to the miner and learn a lesson. Study his ways and be wise. Seek not only for the wealth that perisheth, but labor for the true riches and wisdom. I accept the statement of an editorial, that no church or minister can draw 2,500 people to the fair ground on a rainy day. But is not that sufficient reason why we should give ourselves more and more to the consideration of spiritual values and to those higher interests which pertain to God's moral king? Now, in speaking of the spiritual values of God's government, I remark that it has a currency which stands at par the world over. The truth of God as revealed in Christ and recorded in the Scriptures is current coin in all the nations and communities of this earth. The Bible as a great system of truth is the one Book for the nations.

These are unusual times—times when clean, steady, heroic Christianity is put to the test. The great vital question is, shall we do righteously according to the teachings of God's word and the behests of our king? Shall we as individuals and communities and nations be controlled by the divine law which demands personal righteousness, public honesty and national integrity? Shall we not hold up a Christianity that insists upon the redemption of its pledges and the discharge of every moral obligation on the earth? Shall this not only be a campaign of contention for the supremacy of gold and silver and the wealth that perisheth, but also a campaign for the supremacy of the truth and for the education of the public conscience in the beginning of a revival of religion that shall be the strength of manhood, the glory of womanhood, in the inspiration of the masses and the true prosperity of the nation? For true wisdom is the fear of God and doing righteousness. It is that "godliness which is great, having the promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come."

MAN WHO WALKED WITH GOD.

By Rev. C. A. S. Dwight, D. D.

"And Enoch walked with God: and he was not; for God took him."—Gen. 5:24.

Enoch walked with God, it appears, as a prophet. God may have revealed to him in quiet, tender converse many wonderful secrets of His plans. What did Enoch see in prophecy? Who knows but that in those ecstatic three hundred years there may have passed before his vision, revealed by the direct will and wish of Jehovah, the outlines of redemption—the coming history of the ages, exhibited, as it were, in an elongated panorama, all illustrating the wonders of grace and centering about the Cross, whose distant gleam Enoch's quickened eyes may have clearly seen? Paul, in a later age, was taken up into the third Heaven—why may Enoch not have been granted the vision of a redeemed earth? We cannot say that it was so—but we may wonder whether such dreams and visions did not come to that holy and unique man.

There is need to-day for the transparent, guileless, reverent, meditative Enoch-like type of character—a frame or fashion of moral being which may seem, indeed, quite foreign to the "zeitgeist" or prevailing spirit of the times. Yet in a rushing age, more, if anything, than in any other, do men need the close converse with their Maker to keep them poised amid social agitations, steadied against the assaults of temptation, and clear-eyed amid the whirl and swirl of numberless worldly distractions. It should not be thought, because Enoch lived in a simple age, that, therefore, he enjoyed exceptional opportunities for being religious, while in this characteristically worldly day it is quite out of the question to maintain a spiritual frame. The fact is that Enoch lived in an age that was rude, riotous and coarse, when vice was rampant, when the sanctions of society itself were largely lacking, when there were no Bibles, churches, Endeavor Societies, religious clubs or religious books or weeklies, and, therefore, it was all the more to his praise that, under conditions even more unfriendly, perhaps, to righteousness than those that obtain to-day, he walked with God and comported himself as befitted a saint of the Most High.

HYMNS AND THEIR AUTHORS

BREAST THE WAVE.

By Joseph Stammers.

[Joseph Stammers (Bury St. Edmunds, England, 1801—London, 1885) was a lawyer who practiced in London, and who, like many another English barrister, spent much of his time in literary pursuits. This hymn alone, however, now remains of all his work. It already belongs, though written in 1830, to the standard hymns of the church, being a favorite in meetings where the active and militant spirit prevails.]

Breast the wave, Christian, when it is strongest;
Watch for day, Christian, when night is longest;
Onward and onward still be thine endeavor;
The rest that remaineth endureth forever.

Fight the fight, Christian, Jesus is o'er thee;
Run the race, Christian, heaven is before thee;
He who hath promised all faltereth never;
O, trust in the love that endureth forever.

Lift the eye, Christian, just as it closeth;
Raise the heart, Christian, ere it reposeth;
Nothing thy soul from the Savior shall sever;
Soon shalt thou mount upward to praise him forever.

SHORT METER SERMONS.

Ignorance gives birth to a lot of eloquence.

He who shakes at public opinion never makes it.

It is easy to bury aspirations under ambition.

A man begins to die as soon as he lowers his ideas.

The religion that cost you nothing costs too much.

He can worship nowhere who cannot worship anywhere.

The larger the heart the easier it travels the narrow way.

You will always find the cowards busy persuading others to fight.

The church that knows nothing of the alley knows nothing of the man who went about doing good.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't forget that rustling is the poorest way of resting.

Don't be overkeen to believe in scandal lest you indorse its purveyors.

Don't forget the stomachs of the poor while fighting over their souls.

Don't be disappointed if heaven sends you opportunity when you pay for promotion.

Don't forget that overanxiety for greased palms makes the feet mighty slippery.

Don't forget that no opinion can help you to heaven if it makes you hate your brother man.

GREATEST WOMAN SCIENTIST.

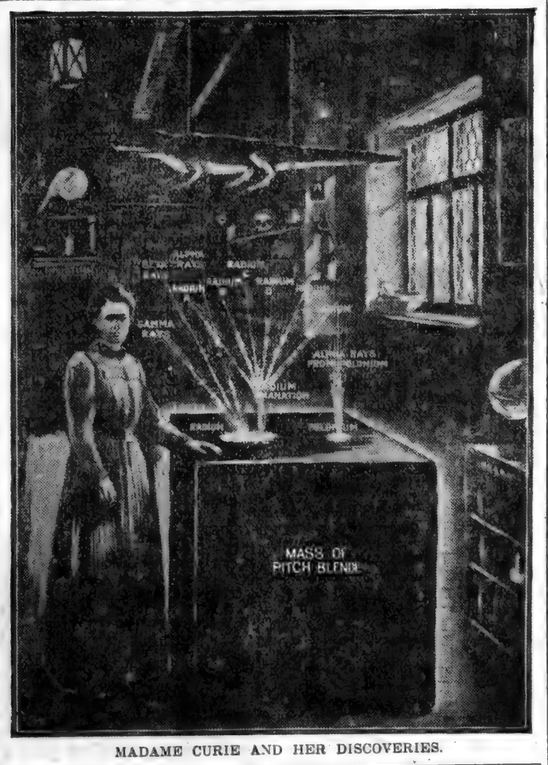
Mme. Curie Shares with Most Savants Faculty of Abstraction.

In a quiet little house in Paris, screened from the outer world by a high wall, lives Mme. Curie, co-discoverer with her late husband of radium. Other women who might be inclined to envy this most wonderful of feminine scientists are disarmed by her extreme modesty. When an admirer belabors her with compliments upon her achievements she smiles almost in astonishment and shrugs her shoulders as if she had done little to make a fuss about.

When, upon the death of her husband, she was appointed to a chair at the Sorbonne, the great seat of learning in Paris, it was decided by several women to present her with a testimonial. The occasion demanded it (so it was thought), for was not Mme. Curie the first woman who had ever achieved such an honor?

The scientist's reply, however, spoiled everything. She said quietly: "It would be contrary to my husband's ideas and certainly to my own." So her feminine admirers departed without leaving their testimonial behind them.

Yet, despite her modesty, it is known that she was more than a mere assistant to her husband. It is, indeed, claimed that she herself was the originator of the radium discoveries. The best testimonial to her abilities came from Prof. Curie himself when he was offered the decoration of the Cross of the Legion of Honor and refused it because the same decoration was not offered to his wife.



MADAME CURIE AND HER DISCOVERIES.

She shares with most savants that faculty of abstraction that is so valuable to those engaged in scientific work. When she is employed upon a difficult piece of research she hears nothing, sees nothing and is unmoved by anything that is not directly concerned with her investigations. It is said that once when in the middle of an absorbing experiment a servant ran into the laboratory, screaming loudly: "Madame, madame, I have swallowed a pin!" "There, there, don't cry," said Mme. Curie, soothingly, "there is another that you may have."

Mme. Curie has a sister who is a notable doctor of medicine in Austria, and as an instance of heredity it may be said that the famous scientist believes that her little daughter shows promise of even more brilliant scientific powers than herself. She is training the child with the intention of developing these talents to the utmost.

FRANCE'S OLD-AGE PENSIONS.

Act Which Propably Will Pass Follows German Lines.

The French old-age pensions scheme, the bill for which has just passed its first reading in the Senate, follows the Prussian rather than the English measure. As in Prussia, it is contributory and compulsory, workmen and employers contributing an equal amount annually.

Men are to pay $1.80, women $1.20 and persons under 18 90 cents yearly until their 65th year, when they will become entitled to a pension, which will be paid from the total contributions plus the employers' quota and a sum of $12 paid by the State. The conditions for receiving the full pension are that the worker shall have contributed to the fund for thirty years, including in the case of man the two years of military service. Those who have contributed for more than ten years and less than thirty will be entitled to a reduced pension.

Existing friendly societies which may be taken into the scheme will be authorized to collect old-age contributions from their members. They will receive from the State a contribution of 20 cents a head for sickness and insurance, plus an additional sum to cover expenses.

The working classes in France are estimated to number 11,000,000. The government has agreed with the opposition so far as to restrict the principle of compulsory contribution to town and rural wage earners, otherwise workmen in the ordinary sense of this term, and to make contribution optional to the large class of small farmers, petty land owners and part-profit cultivators (metayers), all of whom are laborers in reality. If they do not contribute they cannot benefit by the pensions scheme. These rural classes are computed at 6,000,000 in number.

Forty years hence, when the scheme is in full operation, the pensioners will have $83 a year. They will start the year after the bill is passed with $20.40 a year, the pension to rise gradually during the interval, a correspondent of the New York Sun says.

The chief newspapers on the government side predict that early in April the bill will become law, and will be regarded as the greatest achievement of the third republic, but a great many prominent politicians are not so optimistic. Many Senators have voted for the second reading of the bill for no other reason than getting a better opportunity of making a more systematic and concentrated attack on the compulsory clauses.

Has Pins Worth $25,000.

Led on by a love for rare and unique scarf pins, A. M. Brinckle, known throughout the country as the "scarf-pin man," arrived in Des Moines to continue his search for new designs to add to his collection, the Evening Tribune of that city says.

During the years of travel in his capacity as salesman for a Connecticut cut-glass concern Mr. Brinckle has gathered together the largest assortment of rare and beautiful scarf pins in the world. The collection contains 1,016 pins and is valued at $25,000.

Jewelers in all large cities know of Mr. Brinckle because of his fad. He is referred to in most localities as the "scarf-pin man" because of the fact that he wears so many unique pins. He declares that only once during the last fifteen years have any of his customers seen him wearing the same scarf pin. He also has a collection of 300 scarfs.

Gathering scarf pins is a hobby with Mr. Brinckle. Although unusual and costly, it has proved to be intensely interesting. A large number of the settings have a history, which the owner, with enthusiastic pride, loves to relate. The collection was recently placed on exhibition at Tiffany's in New York, where many admiring collectors offered immense sums for the rarest specimens.

Kipling in the Herring Line.

Senator Beveridge, apropos of fame, said at a Washington luncheon:

"What is fame, after all? Kipling, when he lived in Brattleboro, Vt., took a trip to Montpelier. The first evening he came down to the hotel dining room he overheard this dialogue between two waiters:

"First Waiter—Do you know who that is, George?

"Second Waiter—No. Who is it?

"First Waiter—That is the celebrated Kipperin.

"Second Waiter—What's he done?

"First Waiter—Hanged if I know. Fish line, ain't it?"

A Relief.

"Johnny," said the boy's mother, "I hope you have been a nice, quiet boy at school this afternoon."

"That's what I was," answered Johnny. "I went to sleep right after dinner, and the teacher said she'd whip any boy in the room who waked me up."—Boston Post.

The Important Problem

confronting anyone in need of a laxative is not a question of a single action only, but of permanently beneficial effects, which will follow proper efforts to live in a healthful way, with the assistance of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, whenever it is required, as it cleanses the system gently yet promptly, without irritation and will therefore always have the preference of all who wish the best of family laxatives.

The combination has the approval of physicians because it is known to be truly beneficial, and because it has given satisfaction to the millions of well-informed families who have used it for many years past.

To get its beneficial effects, always buy the genuine manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

PARIS PLAGUE OF RATS.

Return of Rodents Finds Rat Catchers' Guild Out of Business.

In the days when Eugene Sue wrote his novels of the underworld of Paris the Rat Catchers' Guild formed a highly remunerative and active profession—so active, in fact, that the rodents gradually disappeared except along the river front and were rarely found in cellars as high as those on the Montmartre when the new system of drains were instituted.

With the rising of the Seine, however, and the "backing up" of the sewers, says a Paris letter, the animals came back to their old haunts and again took up their lairs in cellars and basements of houses, and at night could be seen scampering about the streets. Unfortunately Paris was quite unprepared for the invasion. The Rat Catchers' Guild, whose members used to receive a handsome price for ridding a house of the pests and then sold their skins to furriers, was no more.

Only one rat catcher is left, an old man named Henri Dayve, who is the municipal rat catcher of the city of Paris. He alone is left, and he has no apprentices, for the calling is no longer lucrative, and so he finds himself suddenly lifted into notoriety by the new plague of rats as being the only rat catcher left in Paris. However, it seems that he is setting to work bravely, but it is something awful for a great city to be attacked by a plague of rats and to possess only one rat catcher, and he not a Pied Piper of Hamelin.

WORTH MOUNTAINS OF GOLD

During Change of Life, says Mrs. Chas. Barclay

Graniteville, Vt. — "I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from nervousness and other annoying symptoms, and I can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has proved worth mountains of gold to me, as it restored my health and strength. I never forget to tell my friends what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me during this trying period. Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my trouble public so you may publish this letter." — MRS. CHAS. BARCLAY, R.F.D., Graniteville, Vt.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine we know of has such a record of cures of female ills as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For more than 30 years it has been curing female complaints such as inflammation, ulceration, local weaknesses, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration, and it is unequalled for carrying women safely through the period of change of life. It costs but little to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and, as Mrs. Barclay says, it is "worth mountains of gold" to suffering women.

WESTERN CANADA

What Prof. Shaw, the Well-Known Agriculturist, Says About It:

"I would sooner raise cattle in Western Canada than in the corn belt of the United States. Feed is cheaper and climate better for the purpose. Your market will improve faster than your farmers will produce the supplies. Wheat can be grown up to the 60th parallel [800 miles north of the International boundary]. Your vacant land will be taken at a rate beyond present conception. We have enough people in the United States alone who want homes to take up this land." Nearly will enter and make their homes in Western Canada this year. 1909 produced another large crop of wheat, oats and barley, in addition to which the cattle exports was an immense item. Cattle raising, dairying, mixed farming and grain growing in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

70,000 Americans

Free homestead and pre-emption areas, as well as lands held by railway and land companies, will provide homes for millions.

Wasted a Fortune on Skin Trouble.

"I began to have an itching over my whole body about seven years ago and this settled in my limb, from the knee to the toes. I went to see a great many physicians, a matter which cost me a fortune, and after I noticed that I did not get any relief that way, I went for three years to the hospital. But they were unable to help me there. I used all the medicines that I could see but became worse and worse. I had an inflammation which made me almost crazy with pain. When I showed my foot to my friends they would get really frightened. I did not know what to do. I was so sick and had become so nervous that I positively lost all hope.

"I had seen the advertisement of the Cuticura Remedies a great many times, but could not make up my mind to buy them, for I had already used so many medicines. Finally I did decide to use the Cuticura Remedies and I tell you that I was never so pleased as when I noticed that, after having used two sets of Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Pills, the entire inflammation had gone. I was completely cured. I should be only too glad if people with similar disease would come to me and find out the truth. I would only recommend them to use Cuticura. Mrs. Bertha Sachs, 1621 Second Ave., New York, N. Y., Aug. 20, 1909."

"Mrs. Bertha Sachs is my sister-in-law and I know well how she suffered and was cured by the Cuticura Remedies after many other treatments failed. Morris Sachs, 321 E. 89th St., New York, N. Y., Secretary of Deutsch-Ostrowoer Unt.-Verein, Kempner Hebrew Benevolent Society, etc."

UNCLE JOE CANNON.

He Also Speaks Well of Canada.

No matter what may be the opinion of Mr. Joseph Cannon, no matter if he may be looked upon by some as a czar, and by others as a big, warm-hearted man, with many of the instincts that make humanity very bearable, all will admit that he is a man who has been advertised more than any other man in the United States. What he may have to say therefore on any subject, will have weight. Observant, he speaks his mind freely. He was interviewed the other day by the correspondent of a Canadian newspaper, he spoke of his admiration for Canada, and he is quoted in a way that pictures fairly well the personnel of the man. The correspondent says he launched out into personal biography, proverbial philosophy, political comment, cynical scorn, broad profanity and sentimental poetry such as one rarely hears in the space of an hour. He discussed the Canadian tariff, and then said: "People say I break the Ten Commandments, all of them. But I don't, at least not often. I did break one of them up in Canada two or three years ago. As I rode from Winnipeg to the Rockies over your great West and saw the finest wheatfields in the world, I thought of Virginia and a lot of our States, and I smashed the Tenth Commandment every hour of the journey. Yes, sir, I coveted my neighbor's land."

Coming from a man of the fame of Mr. Cannon, these were words that should have some weight with the Americans who may still have doubts of the advantages that are offered to them in Western Canada. A home amongst the wheat fields. Hundreds of thousands of Americans are adopting it. They go to Central Canada, to any one of the three Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, or to the coast Province of British Columbia, take up their homestead of 160 acres, and probably pre-empt another 160 acres, or it may be they do not care for pioneering twenty or thirty miles from an existing railway, and purchase a farm. Then they settle upon it and, having no clearing away of timber they begin at once to cultivate it, and make money. That they make money and much more than they could possible make on the high-priced farms they have left, is the evidence of hundreds of thousands. They do not leave civilized life, they but remove from one sphere to another. They have splendid social conditions, churches, schools, rural telephones, splendid roads, railways, convenient just the same as what they left, and what is more, they get much greater returns from their crops, which give abundant yield. The climate is perfect, and it is no wonder that most flattering reports are sent back to their friends in the States, and it is no wonder that Joe Cannon was tempted to speak as he did. He "coveted" his neighbor's land.

Beautiful Wall Coatings for Homes.

In line with the progress of all other things in these modern days is the beautiful, perfect and sanitary wall coatings for our homes. The Week in Congress

In the Senate Wednesday Senator Elkins gave notice that on the next Monday he would ask the Senate to make an order that the administration railroad bill should be kept under consideration continuously until disposed of. Most of the session of the Senate was taken up by discussion of the Warren bill for the disposal of the surplus waters of government irrigation projects. The franking privilege was extended to former President Roosevelt by the terms of a bill passed by the House. The measure was general in terms and extended the franking privileges to all ex-Presidents or their widows during their lives. The day, being "calendar Wednesday," was devoted to the consideration of many bills of local interest to various sections of the country.

An animated debate occurred in the Senate Thursday on a suggestion by the special committee on the cost of living, looking to the expenditure of $65,000 for the extension of the work of the committee in gathering information regarding wages. Senator Hale suggested that these facts should be supplied as speedily as possible and be used in answering questions in the coming campaign. Senator Bacon deprecated the use of such information. The House bill requiring railroad companies to make reports of accidents to the Interstate Commerce Commission was passed by the Senate. Adjourned until Monday. In the House the session was devoted chiefly to a consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The Senate was not in session Friday. Two battleships were authorized by the naval bill passed by the House. This action was taken by the decisive vote of 162 to 110, thirty-three Democrats voting with the Republicans for two battleships, while twenty-four Republicans voted with the Democrats for one battleship. The House adopted an amendment by which the two battleships and two fleet colliers authorized by the bill must be built by firms operating under the eight-hour law. As passed the naval bill appropriates about $138,000,000.

The Senate was not in session Saturday. Eulogies in honor of the late Representative De Armond of Missouri were the chief features in the House.

In the Senate Monday consideration was begun of the administration railroad bill, section by section. Several amendments offered by Mr. Elkins for the administration Republicans were adopted. Senator Nelson made a speech in which he declared that the purpose of the bill was to destroy the Sherman anti-trust law, and that he could not vote for it. Senate adjourned until 1 o'clock Tuesday on account of the marriage of the daughter of Senator Clark of Wyoming. Speaker Cannon's suggestion that the "insurgents" of the House did not have sufficient courage to join with the solid minority in the election of his successor and his prediction that the "Republicans would carry the next congressional elections" were the striking features of a somewhat sensational day in the proceedings of Congress. These statements by the speaker were called forth in connection with his comment on the floor over the action of the Democrats and "insurgents" in sending back to conference a report which allowed $2,500 for the expenses of the speaker's automobile, together with an allowance for the Vice President's automobile. The speaker declared that he had never suggested nor approved the allowance of automobiles for the Vice President and for himself, the legislation having been initiated in the Senate.

In the Senate Tuesday, Mr. La Follette spoke in opposition to the railroad bill. His remarks consisted chiefly of an arraignment of Attorney General Wickersham for ordering a dismissal of the government's merger suit against the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad for absorbing Boston and Maine line, because the Massachusetts legislature had passed a law legalizing the holding company. Senator Lodge in a heated speech came to the defense of the action of his state legislative officers, declaring the two roads were not competing lines, as charged by Mr. La Follette, and that the law was wise legislation. The House listened attentively to a very full explanation of the provisions of the railroad bill reported from its committee on interstate and foreign commerce. This explanation was made by Mr. Mann, of Illinois, chairman of the committee reporting the measure. As it was reviewed section by section Republicans and Democrats alike entered into a discussion of its provisions. Three and one-half hours were occupied in this manner.

Ants and Colors.

It was proved long ago that ants have the power of seeing the—to us—invisible rays of the ultra violet portion of the spectrum. They fear the light for their larvae and when allowed choice between different degrees of light always carry them to the darkest place accessible. When given the choice between a compartment lighted with yellow light and one dark to our eyes, but under the actinic ray, the ants unhesitatingly chose the yellow light, showing that to their eyes it was darker than the other, to man invisible.—Argonaut.

Woman Caught Red Handed.

A woman was caught red handed last Tuesday. There was nothing sensational about it. All she had done was to do her washing with cheap, common yellow laundry soap, and the result was, as it always is, that her hands were cracked and chapped and chafed until they were sights. Easy Task soap relieves a woman of so much rubbing and dipping the hands in the water that no harm results. As a matter of fact, Easy Task soap is good to wash the hands with. It won't hurt the most delicate skin any more than the finest lace.

The Overland The Simplest Car

The Overland outsells all other cars, largely because of its matchless simplicity.

The Overland—hardly more than two years old—has become the sensation of motordom.

Four factories, employing 4,000 men, turn out 140 Overlands daily to meet the overwhelming demand.

Texas takes 1,500, Kansas 1,000, Iowa 1,000, Nebraska 750—all for this season's delivery. So it is in every section where this remarkable car has been known for a year.

One reason is that the Overland is almost trouble-proof. The usual complex features have all been eliminated.

A child can master the car in ten minutes. A novice can run it and care for it.

One simply pushes pedals forward or backward to get on low speed, high speed or reverse. It is as simple as walking.

The car almost cares for itself. Many an owner has run from 7,000 to 10,000 miles without even cleaning a spark plug.

No expert is needed. And the cost of upkeep is the smallest of any capable car.

Then the Overland gives more for the money than any other car in existence. This is due to our enormous production and our automatic machinery.

For $1,000 you can get a 25-horse power Overland with a 102-inch wheel base. No other car of such size and power sells nearly so low.

Know the Facts

More people are buying Overlands than any other car. There must be some very strong reasons, and those reasons will appeal to you.

We have two free books which will tell you the facts. Every motor car lover should read them. Cut out this coupon as a reminder to write for these books to-day.

His Name Fitted Him.

Not very long ago a wealthy Washington gentleman had a new valet whose name was somewhat of a puzzle to him. The initials were V. D. C. Cheney, and his employer wondered at times what Cheney's name could be. One morning he inquired.

"It's like this, sir," replied the valet, who happened to be an Englishman. "My mother dearly loved to read novels when she was young, and some of the names stuck in her memory. One was valet de chambre. She never knew just exactly what it meant, but the French sounded well, and she had me christened that. It fits me, don't you thing so, sir?"—National Magazine.

Stolen Joke.

The shade of the ice baron had introduced himself to Charon on the river trip.

"Quite a roomy bit of water, this Styx," he commented. "Never freezes over, does it?"

"Not so's to interfere with navigation," said Charon smilingly, "and, by the way, that very fact gave Mephisto the idea for his favorite joke."

"You don't say! What's the gag?"

"Why, when a guest in hades complains of the scarcity of ice the old boy explains that it's due to the unprecedented perversity of the past winter."—Buffalo Times.

When You Think

Of the pain which many women experience with every month it makes the gentleness and kindness always associated with womanhood seem to be almost a miracle. While in general no woman rebels against what she regards as a natural necessity there is no woman who would not gladly be free from this recurring period of pain.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong and sick women well, and gives them freedom from pain. It establishes regularity, subdues inflammation, heals ulceration and cures female weakness.

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free. All correspondence strictly private and sacredly confidential. Write without fear and without fee to World's Dispensary Medical Association, R. V. Pierce, M. D., President, Buffalo, N. Y.

If you want a book that tells all about women's diseases, and how to cure them at home, send 21 one-cent stamps to Dr. Pierce to pay cost of mailing only, and he will send you a free copy of his great thousand-page illustrated Common Sense Medical Adviser—revised, up-to-date edition, in paper covers. In handsome cloth-binding, 31 stamps.

Obituary

of Mrs. Mary E. Wyatt, whose maiden name was Vanaile. The deceased was born in Ashland County Ohio, August 12 1856 and died April 13 1910. At the time of her death she was 54 years 8 months and 1 day old. Her parents moved to Allen county, Ind., in the year of 1861. The deceased joined the E Lutheran church under the care of Rev. E. W. Erick, forty-one years ago. She was united in marriage to Isaac N. Wyatt, December 27 1886. To this union was born three children, two sons and one daughter. The deceased leaves a husband and two sons, one daughter, one son-in-law, two sisters, four brothers and many other relatives and friends to mourn her departure.

The funeral services were held from the Fairview M. P. Church on Friday forenoon at 10:00 o'clock. Rev. E. W. Erick of Spencerville officiating. Eliza Kinsey funeral director. Burial in the Riverside cemetery at St. Joe.

Dearest Mother, thou hast left us,
Gone to join the angel band;
God knew best when he bereft us,
Of this loving, guiding hand.

When thou left us in thy keeping,
And departed from this shore;
Well thou knew that God's best blessings,
Were above for us in store.

Oft we'll think of thee, dear Mother
For there's none can fill thy place;
But if Jesus thought 'twas better,
We will bear it through God's grace.

Whilst thou lived thou were like others,
Trials, crosses, cares to bear;
But the Savior sent the message,
Thou hast gone a crown to wear.

Then dear husband, weep no more.
But lift your heart in prayer,
To God, who'll softly lead you
On to meet your loved one there.

CARD OF THANKS

Owners of World's Gold.

It is a somewhat curious fact that the English-speaking nations own nearly all the world's productive gold mines.

Thus England, with its Canadian, Australian and South African mines, is credited with 61 per cent and the United States with 22, making an aggregate of 83 per cent, while all the rest of the world gets the remaining 17 per cent.

According to the statistics for 1907, the amount of gold mined in the whole world was 19,764,078 ounces, valued at nearly $420,000,000, of which $348,000,000 worth was produced on the soil held by two English-speaking nations. This is an enormous source of power.

Mrs. Humphry Ward's Unfairness.

Mrs. Humphry Ward, whose new novel based on American divorce is being read with interest by all divorced Americans, worked hard in the collection of facts during her visit last year.

"She worked hard," said a New York lawyer, "but she didn't work fairly. She didn't come here to look for truth, you know, but to look for sensational things that would make interesting reading in a novel. Mrs. Humphry Ward came to America prejudiced. I know she was prejudiced. A remark of hers proved it. At a dinner before her researches began I had the honor to sit beside her, and to make conversation I said:

"'Don't you think our American women are beautifully dressed?'

"'Yes,' she admitted, 'in her high English drawl, 'I wish, though, they'd stop thinking that no wardrobe is complete without a divorce suit.'"

The Kaiser at the Dining Table.

The German Emperor is neither a gourmet nor a gourmand. He enjoys merely a robust appetite, but eats with a rapidity that is the despair of the imperial waiters. His tastes lie in the direction of such homely dishes as hot roast in Vienna style, chicken with red paprika, Wiener schnitzel, beer soup, and sauerkraut and frankfurters. He has an odd habit of eating at the same meal several different kinds of bread.

1910 Commencement

LAST DAY OF SCHOOL.

The 1909-1910 school year closed on Friday, April 22. The custom was somewhat changed from that of previous years by the parents and friends assembling with the school and enjoying a basket dinner together. The word was sent out on Wednesday and all began to make preparations and such a dinner was never served before. The children as well as the older ones did ample justice to the meal. The dinner was served in the primary room and at the hour of taking up school, they were all invited to the High Room where an excellent program was rendered. The graduates read their productions which were interesting and showed considerable thought. The primary, intermediate and grammer room teachers gave their scholars an appropriate school card, containing the enrollment of each room.

THE BACCALAUREATE

sermon was preached in the Lutheran church by the pastor, Rev. Hitchner, on Sunday evening, April 24. The attendance was large and the music furnished by the choir was especially good. Rev. Hitchner is a forceful speaker and held the attention of his entire audience until the last, giving advice to the young graduates that if followed out will result in success to that person.

THE COMMENCEMENT

exercises were held in the Widney Opera House on Tuesday evening, April 26. The stormy weather kept the attendance down although quite a number of country people were present. To this class belongs the credit of having the hall decorated the most beautiful of any class thus far. Flowers were in abundance which sent their fragrance over the entire room.

GRADUATES

Gladys Kain
Elta Brock
Glenwood Freeburn
Fred Crall
Edna Walter
Franc Rhodenbaugh
Merritt Maxwell
Adrian Washler

Eight graduates with Prin. Leland and Rev. Owen Wright, of Culver, Ind., who delivered the address were on the stage. The Wilcox Orchestra of Auburn furnished the music for the occasion. The address by Rev. Wright was on the subject "Dreams", and its application to the young graduates was made in a simple way and yet impressive. While it may seem a queer subject, yet it was very appropriate for the occasion. The man who is not a dreamer in this life never makes much of a mark. He must be constantly looking ahead, planning thinking and working to do some thing just a little better than the other fellow. The man who is indifferent, don't care, is not ambitious, can never expect to do very much for himself or others. Many good points were brought forth that deserved your presence. Rev. Brock of New ville gave the invocation and Rev. Brown pronounced the benediction followed on Wednesday evening in the I. O. O. F. Hall, to which about 75 members and invited guests attended. The president, Ray D Herrick, gave the welcome address to the new members and the response was made by Glenwood Freeburn. Miss Esther Hallabaugh rendered a fine piano solo followed with a vocal solo by Miss Mary Scholes which was highly appreciated by all. Vocal duet by Mrs. Lora Leighty and Merritt Sechler, with Miss Flossie Copp at the piano.

THE ALUMNI BANQUET

The luncheon was served by the young men of the society who were present, of which the first course consisted of veal loaf sandwich, pickles, stuffed celery and fruit. Second course, ice cream, cake, coffee and bon bons. Between the courses a fine piano duet was rendered by Mrs. Hazel Herrick and Miss Lela Shilling, after which contests were entered which caused much merriment. The society did the work themselves this year, thus saving considerable by so doing. A most delightful time was had and now the society has about 65 members. As there are only a few at home any more the work falls on a few and they are to be congratulated on their efforts, the president especially deserves praise for doing his work so nobly

RAY D. HERRICK, PRES. ALUMNI.

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Thrifty Jewelry Swindle Is Unearthed.

A conspiracy has been exposed by which manufacturing jewelers in Rhode Island and other states have been robbed of goods valued at half a million dollars. Ten arrests have already been made in Alabama and Texas. The scheme was to buy jewelry throughout the country and ship it to Montgomery, Ala., after that the report says, dummy packages were sent from a Montgomery firm to other stores controlled by it. These were then credited as real shipments of valuable goods and so listed. The stores were then set on fire it is alleged and the dummy packages were listed as lost assets by the firm in bankruptcy proceedings.

Suicides with Ink Eraser.

Down in the vault of the Jefferson bank at Forsyth and Canal streets, New York, George W. Rose, assistant receiving teller of the bank, took his own life by cutting his throat and hands with an ink eraser. The suicide left no indication of the reason for his act and his friends are at a loss to account for it unless it were induced by the fact that his salary had recently been reduced. He had been with the Jefferson bank about nine months.

Found Engineer Dying at Throttle.

When a freight train on the Bessemer & Lake Erie road ran past a stop signal near Butler, Pa., Fireman John Sommers, who was on the tender, rushed into the cab and found Engineer W. W. Woodworth unconscious at the throttle. The engineer was sitting upright with a fractured skull. He had been struck by a water tank. Sommers brought the train into Butler. The engineer was taken to a hospital.

General Miles Thrown from Horse.

General Nelson A. Miles, United States army, retired, was thrown from a horse he was riding in Potomac Park, Washington, D. C. One rib was broken; he received a slight scalp wound and was bruised somewhat on the shoulder and side. It is not thought he suffered any internal injuries or that the scalp wound will prove serious.

Killed by Folding Bed.

Wellington Smith, of Lee, Mass., formerly president of the American Paper Makers' Association, was killed in New York by the closing of a folding bed. Smith was a prominent man and was formerly a member of the executive council when General Benjamin F. Butler was Governor of Massachusetts.

Steamer with Eighteen Men Lost.

The sealing steamer Boothic, which arrived at St. John's, N. F., has brought from the fishing banks a report that the steamer Farora has been sunk. It is feared, according to the report current at the fishing banks, that her entire crew of eighteen men lost their lives.

One Dead; Three Injured.

Frank Green was burned to death and three persons badly injured when the American House in San Diego, Cal., was destroyed by fire believed to have been of incendiary origin. Fifteen persons who were sleeping in the frame building narrowly escaped.

Big Meteor Falls.

News comes from the mountains in the vicinity of the Mormon colonies south of El Paso, Texas, in Mexico, of the falling of a gigantic meteor. It burst and spread out in four directions and some of the fragments started a considerable forest fire.

Ruth Bryan-Leavitt to Wed.

Ruth Bryan-Leavitt will be married at Fairview, Neb., in the near future, to Reginald Owen, of the British royal engineers. It is said Mrs. Leavitt met her fiancee in Colorado late last summer. He is 26 years old.

Big Brewery Blaze.

Fire caused a loss estimated at $580,000 in the mammoth plant of the Annheuser Busch Brewing Association in St. Louis, Mo. Five hundred thousand bottles of beer were destroyed.

South Dakota's Champion Hog.

To James Houska, farmer, belongs the credit of having raised the largest hog in South Dakota. He has just disposed of it at Pukwana, S. D. The animal was not quite 3 years old and weighed 810 pounds. It sold for $75.

Stork at Beveridge Home.

Senator Beveridge, of Indiana, is receiving congratulations on the arrival of an infant daughter at his home in Washington, D. C.

LOSS IS $50,000,000 FROM WINTRY BLAST

Snow and Cold Affect Wide Section, with Truck Gardens, Orchards and Farms Devastated.

CROPS RUINED IN MIDDLE WEST

Sudden Blizzard with Below Freezing Temperatures Leaves Destruction in Its Wake.

BOTH GRAIN AND FRUITS SUFFER

Continuance of Rain and Cold, with Gradual Change, Regarded as Only Salvation.

Prematurely budding crops of the middle West have been swept away in the most disastrous and far-reaching storm experienced in a generation. The disturbance has wrought more than $50,000,000 damage to fruits and vegetables and has started an upward shoot in the price of fresh foodstuffs that probably will be felt during the entire season. The Michigan fruit belt—the backbone of the fruit district—is described as almost wholly wiped out for the season, while the freezing temperature in Illinois and Iowa not only has killed buds, flowers and fruits, but threatens to ruin oats.

In and about Chicago truck gardeners have seen all hopes of early vegetables blasted in a single night. Vegetables and flowers that had promised huge profits and low prices because of the early spring have been damaged beyond hope. All that can be done is to replant, where this is possible, making the season several weeks behind rather than early. But in the end it will be the housekeeper who will feel the effect of the storm. The expected early vegetables and low prices, promised because of the lamb-like March, have given place to promises of such high prices for green foodstuffs as have not obtained in years.

The story of the storm is told best in the weather bureau reports that showed freezing temperature in practically all of the points that have been touched by the storm. Here are some of the temperatures reported.

Chicago	26 above zero
Kansas City	30 above zero
Keokuk	28 above zero
Indianapolis	30 above zero
Des Moines	30 above zero
Davenport	26 above zero
Galesburg, Ill.	18 above zero
Dubuque, Iowa	25 above zero
St. Louis	28 above zero
Unionville, Mo.	26 above zero
Milwaukee	22 above zero

In the central and southern districts of Illinois the temperature fell to a fraction below 25 degrees, with the result that fruit growers announced that they had little hope of any crop at all this season.

Paradoxically enough, the only mitigation in the bad news was in the fact that rain and low temperature—although not freezing temperatures—prevailed throughout the whole Middle Western section. Had the snowstorm been followed by a bright, warm sun, nothing could have saved fruits and berries now in blossom from complete ruin. As matters stand, while many of the buds will be killed, the cool weather and rain of the next few days may save the others.

What effect the damage will have on prices this summer is problematical. The indications up to the day before the storm fell were that the fruit crop would break all records. Fruits, grains and garden truck were from two weeks to a month ahead of their usual time. The question now is whether enough of the crop will be saved to make the harvest next fall something like normal.

Even if the fruit crop of the Middle West were half destroyed, prices might not be seriously affected, for reports from other fruit sections indicate bumper crops. It seems certain, however, that the loss on apple, plum, cherry and peach orchards will be so serious as to make prices for those fruits higher this summer.

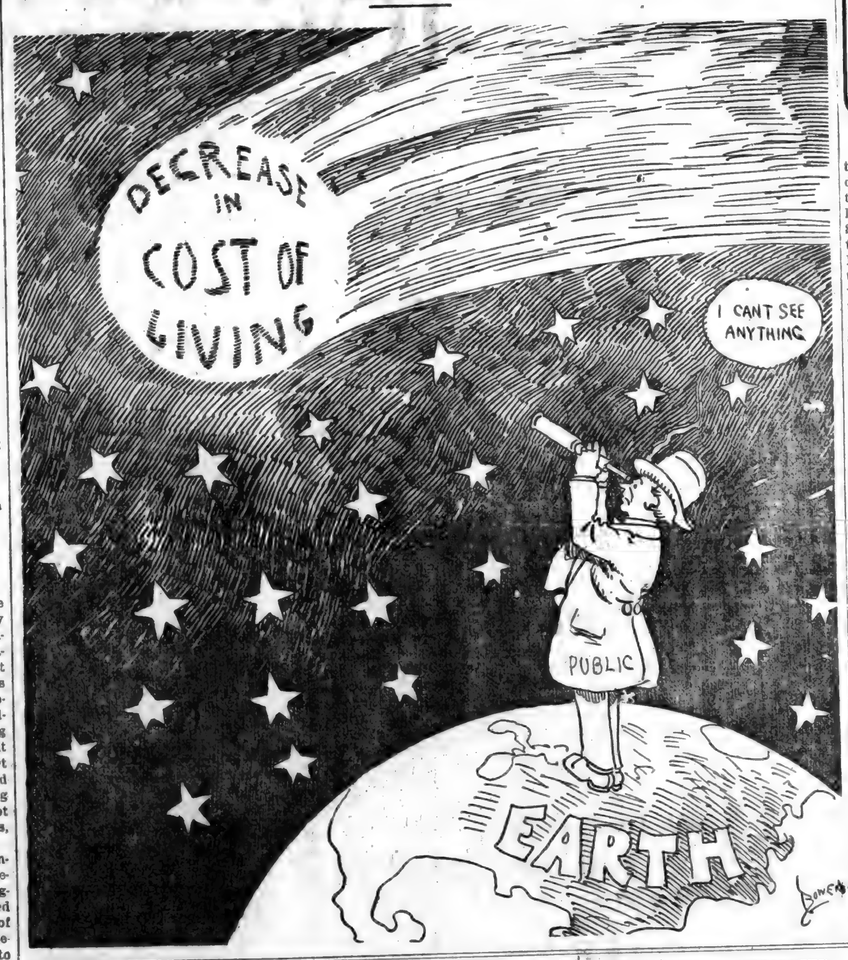
Grains are reported to have suffered severely everywhere, the loss on oats being particularly heavy. In some sections the entire oats crop will have to be resowed. Wherever the first joint was out of the ground the frost killed the growing grain.

3 DIE IN BIG FOUR ACCIDENT.

Wreck Near Sanford, Ind., Costs Lives of Engineer and Others.

Three men were killed and eight probably fatally injured when a train of empty express cars on the way from St. Louis to Indianapolis, on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad, struck a defective switch and smashed the car of an interlocking switch construction crew on a siding at Sandford, Ind. Engineer R. H. Elly, of Mattoon, Ill., H. Driscoll and L. B. Donnelly were killed. Conductor H. L. Shipman, Indianapolis; Samuel Moffett, Dallas Sprigs; Charles E. Jones, Harry Clark, Fred Riley, Harry Gullett and T. D. Griffith were probably fatally hurt. The men were asleep in their car when it was crushed by the impact of the locomotive of the express train.

STILL INVISIBLE!



WOLTER FOUND GUILTY.

Youth Who Killed Fourteen-Year-Old Stenographer Must Die.

Albert Wolter, a 19-year-old youth, was found guilty of murder in the first degree by a jury in the Court of Special Sessions in New York, and by the verdict the contention of the State that Wolter on March 24 last strangled and burned to death 14-year-old Ruth Wheeler was substantiated. The boy's counsel said with eloquence that Wolter was too tender-hearted to harm a cat, but twelve men decided that he had strangled Ruth Wheeler, whom he had enticed to his room by a promise of work, and thrust her while yet alive in his fireplace, where, soaked with oil, her crumpled body writhed and burned. With the same waxen-faced indifference that he had shown throughout the trial, Wolter evinced no emotion when the verdict was announced. His fate will be the electric chair.

2,000 HOMELESS IN FIRE.

Fanned by a high wind, a fire in Lake Charles swept over more than twenty blocks of the city, destroying several hundred buildings and resulting in a property loss estimated at more than $1,000,000. More than 2,000 persons were made homeless. The mayor called out the local militia company to preserve order. Many offers of financial aid have been received. Within a shore time the wind had driven the fire over a space two miles in length, leaving a mass of ruins in its wake. While many of the buildings destroyed were merely frame cottages, scores of handsome structures also fell prey to the flames. The city hall, the handsome Calcasieu parish courthouse, the Clair hotel, churches, stores, and warehouses were reduced to bare black walls and heaps of ashes within two hours after the fire started. The Catholic convent was destroyed. All the sisters escaped.

ENORMOUS STORM LOSSES IN STATES OF THE MIDDLE WEST

Illinois—Greatest damage was caused by the blizzard that covered the entire State. Early vegetables on the truck gardens in the northern districts and berry patches, where buds had reached an advanced stage, are reported as total losses. Damage, $6,000,000.

Iowa—Storms in Iowa have continued with greater or less vigor for nearly a week, but the frigid atmosphere and snows of the last two days have done the greatest damage. Not only fruits and vegetables, but even the oats crop is threatened. Entire damage, $10,000,000.

Indiana—Apple orchards and truck gardens that supply Chicago were the greatest sufferers. The damage, which was confined to the northern and central districts, amounts to $2,000,000.

Michigan—Fruit belt almost entirely gone for the season. All that remains, according to expert growers, is the grape crop, which has been damaged to a great extent. Damage, $4,000,000.

Wisconsin—It is estimated that 50 per cent of the fruit crop and all of the early vegetable and green stuffs intended for the Chicago market have been killed. Damage, $2,000,000.

Kansas—Snow and low temperatures have killed the buds and, in many instances, even the leaves on the trees. The corn crop, however, is safe. Damage, $1,000,000.

Kentucky—All the fruits and vegetables, as well as budding plants and flowers, have been damaged by the cold weather and flurries of snow, largely because of the fact that they had reached an abnormally early development. Loss, $1,500,000.

Missouri Clouds and favorable conditions saved much of the fruit Friday night, but the clear weather and continued cold of last night completed the damage. Estimated losses, $2,000,000.

Ohio—Early fruit, particularly watermelon and other vines, have been killed by the snows and freezing weather. Grain has not been hurt. Loss, $500,000.

Nebraska — Small gardeners and truck farmers were the heaviest losers in the storm that, it is believed now, has not damaged the early wheat. Loss, $1,500,000.

PEACE TEMPLE DEDICATED.

President Taft and Cabinet Attend Ceremonies in Washington.

The beautiful new home of the International Bureau of the American Republics in Washington, called by Mr. Carnegie a temple of peace, was the other day formally dedicated in the presence of a distinguished company. The international character of the dedication was proved by the presence of President Taft, the Secretary of State, the Mexican Ambassador, Cardinal Gibbons, Senator Elihu Root, Andrew Carnegie, Bishop Harding, Director John Barrett of the bureau of American republics, members of the diplomatic corps, of the Supreme Court and the cabinet, as well as Senators and Representatives and high army and naval officers.

The ceremonies were initiated by an invocation by Cardinal Gibbons, who was followed by Secretary Knox, who delivered the formal opening address. Senator Root delivered an address, which was responded to by Senor Don Francisco Leon de la Barra, the Mexican ambassador. Mr. Carnegie delivered a characteristic address. There were readings of cable messages from the presidents of the Latin American republics, congratulating Mr. Carnegie and the bureau of American republics upon the completion of the great work and then President Taft spoke at length.

Just preceding the benediction by Bishop Harding, which concluded the afternoon exercises, occurred a unique feature of the program when President Taft and Mr. Carnegie jointly planted a "peace tree" in the patio, or court yard. The new home of the bureau cost $1,000,000, of which Mr. Carnegie contributed $750,000 and the twenty-one American republics the remainder.

MOUNTED MEN ROB STORES.

Robbers Raid Three Places in Sparta, Wis., and Get Much Booty.

Mounted bandits raided Sparta, Wis., early the other day, blew open two safes and robbed a third store. They escaped with a large amount of booty before the townsmen could organize for an attack. A heavily armed posse was soon formed, however, and started in pursuit. Hoof prints show that there were three riders in the rear of one of the stores they looted.

The victims: J. D. Lumber Company, safe blown and money and papers taken; Davis Bros., grocery store, safe blown; small amount of money and groceries taken; Morse & Danman, hardware store; attempt to blow safe with nitroglycerin failed.

The Week in Congress

The administration railroad bill and the resolution authorizing the expenditure of $65,000 for an extension of the Senate's inquiry into the cost of living occupied the attention of the Senate Wednesday, but no action was taken on either measure. Senator Purcell spoke at length in opposition to the railroad bill, declaring that it was the purpose of the administration to so change the personnel of the Supreme Court of the United States so as to reverse former decisions on the rights of States to control questions involving railroad legislation. A bill authorizing the President to make withdrawals of public lands for purposes of conservation was passed by the House. The entire session was devoted to the consideration of this measure, which, it was stated, met the aproval of the President.

The Lodge resolution to appropriate $65,000 for the expenses of the cost of living inquiry was under consideration in the Senate, Thursday, but no action was taken. The traffic agreement of the railroad bill was under consideration nearly all day. Representative Fowler, of New Jersey, introduced a resolution in the House designed to take away from the speaker the power to name all committees. For a time everybody thought the recent insurrection against Cannonism was to be renewed and the excitement continued until Mr. Fowler announced that he did not intend to press the resolution until May 2. It was sent to the new committee on rules. A resolution was passed which calls on the Attorney General for information regarding the trial of Antonio I. Villareal, R. Flores Magon and Liberado Rivera, now in prison at Florence, Ariz., having been convicted of violating the neutrality laws between the United States and Mexico. Mr. Russell of Texas made a speech in favor of the railroad bill. The House held a night session on the railroad bill.

The traffic agreement provision of the railroad bill was under consideration in the Senate Friday. Senator Crawford took occasion to eulogize former President Roosevelt as the foremost figure in the United States. In the House the railroad bill was under consideration. Upon the conclusion of the general debate upon the measure Mr. Mann of Illinois announced that next Tuesday the reading of the bill for amendments under the five-minute rules would begin.

In the Senate Saturday Mr. Borah spoke in opposition to the Elkins-Crawford traffic agreement provision of the railroad bill. Senators Hughes and Newlands opposed the Lodge resolution for an increased appropriation to continue the work of inquiring into the high prices of living. A large number of bills carrying pensions and private claims were passed by the House.

In the Senate Monday Mr. Lodge withdrew his resolution asking Senate sanction for the expenditure of $65,000 to continue the cost of living inquiry. This action was taken on the ground that members of the minority were conducting such an extended debate upon the resolution as to interfere seriously with the passage of the railroad bill. The committee will continue the inquiry, however, under authority of the original resolution. The Crawford-Elkins traffic agreement provision of the railroad bill was under discussion in the Senate during most of the day. Senator Root spoke in favor of the provision, while Senators Dolliver and Clapp opposed it. In the House the session was devoted to consideration of bills relating to the District of Columbia.

In considering the railroad bill in the Senate, Tuesday, Mr. Clapp denounced the "regular" leaders of the Republicans and the administration for efforts to read "insurgents" out of the party. Mr. Hughes attacked the bill as a whole and Mr. Heyburn defended the Crawford-Elkins provision. The "insurgents," with the aid of the Democrats, forced the adoption in the House of an amendment to the railroad bill which takes from the President the right to organize the commerce courts.

TOLD IN A FEW LINES.

The hardware store of Evans Brothers in Newton, Kan., was burned. Loss $50,000.

Mrs. Isabel Hampton Robb, wife of Dr. Hunter Robb, a noted gynecologist, was crushed to death between two street cars at Cleveland.

By a majority of 830 the voters of Lincoln, Neb., voted at a referendum election to continue the dry policy. Last year the majority was 263.

In three minutes' time a cyclonic wind came and went, leaving in its wake to the southwest of Youngstown, Ohio, a score of injured people, ten demolished houses and a hundred partially wrecked. The loss is upwards of $100,000.

After hearing 5,000,000 words of testimony in perhaps the longest trial ever held in the country, Probate Judge Lawton, at Cambridge, Mass., closed the hearing of "Fresno Dan," who says he is the long lost son of Daniel Russell, and who claims half of the $750,000 estate.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of Chicago trade says:

"While an excellent exhibit appears in both aggregate payments through the banks and trading defaults, the business situation presents some irregularity, mainly due to weather uncertainties and labor disputes. The matter of costs also suggests more serious thought as to future undertakings. Further weakening in prices of raw supplies affects some interests and large consumers apparently await more favorable buying terms. Continued low temperatures have adversely affected leading retail lines and outdoor activity, but transportation has suffered little hindrance and freight movements have remained exceptionally heavy in factory outputs, general merchandise, farm needs, lumber, hides and grain.

"Interior advices indicate that merchants have done well thus far in seasonable goods. Reduction of light weight apparel and fashionable wear is in part delayed by the cold and wet conditions, but local sales have been of fair volume. The attendance of buyers has been equal to expectations in the wholesale district and reordering for broken lines and fall needs have been the features. Forwardings remain fairly large in textiles, millinery, footwear, clothing, suits and house needs. Dealings have been seasonably active in food products and sporting goods.

"Bank clearings, $292,649,084, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1909 by 11.1 per cent, and compare with $222,684,009 in 1908. Failures reported in the Chicago district number only 15, as against 27 last week, 32 in 1909 and 34 in 1908. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 4, as against 10 last week, 8 in 1909 and 10 in 1908."

NEW YORK.

Weather conditions and the unsettled outlook for prices of many commodities are the causes assigned for the quieter tone of trade in many lines. Retail business and, to a certain extent, reorder demand from jobbers, was affected by the return early in the week of wintry weather. These influences were, however, largely temporary, and they were largely offset by the decided benefit to the crop outlook generally by the breaking of the drought. Collections are about fair.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with April 21 were 193, as against 207 last week, 247 in the like week of 1909, 254 in 1908, 157 in 1907 and 177 in 1906. Business failures in Canada for the week number 15, which compares with 27 last week and 36 in the corresponding week of 1909.—Bradstreet's.

The season's crop of small fruits around Boise, Idaho, and in Fayette Valley is reported to have been heavily damaged by frost.

MARK TWAIN IS DEAD OF A BROKEN HEART

America's Famous Humorist, Saddened by Loss of Daughter and Friends, Gives Up Fight.

HIS ENDING IS WITHOUT PAIN

Sad Event Occurs at His Home Near Redding, Conn.—Angina Pectoris the Cause.

Mark Twain, beloved the world over because he made it laugh, is dead. He passed away without pain at 6:22 o'clock Thursday evening in his country home, "Stormfield," back in the wild Camarack Hills, from Redding, Conn. For five hours he had been unconscious and the end was almost unnoticeable.

Angina pectoric, the doctors have it, ended the life which every one who had ever known Samual Langhorne Clemens hoped might be spared longer. That malady was coupled to some extent with asthma of the heart, brought about by excessive smoking. But what laymen call a broken heart was more responsible than the world in general knew.

Samuel Langhorne Clemens, America's foremost humorist and known the world over as Mark Twain, was born in the little town of Hannibal, Mo., on November 30, 1835. Early in life he worked in the printing office of his older brother and learned the trade as a compositor. For a time he was a pilot upon Mississippi River steamboats. But he drifted back into newspaper work and made a modest success as correspondent for various papers in Nevada and California. He published his first book, "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County," in March, 1867. Two years later a series of letters he had written as a correspondent were collected and published under the title, "The Innocents Abroad." The book had a record sale and his fame as a humorous writer was secure. Other books appearing later were "Roughing It," "The Gilded Age," "Tom Sawyer," "Huckleberry Finn," "The Prince and the Pauper," and "Pudd'nhead Wilson."

His financial ability, however, was none of the best and in 1894 his entire fortune was swept away by the failure of the publishing house. Mr. Clemens was abroad at the time, and although sixty years of age he started out on a tour of the globe, delivering lectures and writing articles in order to pay the debts of the defunct firm, which he was successful in doing.

BJORNSON IS DEAD.

Famous Novelist Dies in Paris from Paralytic Stroke.

Bjornstjerne Bjornson, the famous Norwegian novelist, playwright, poet and publicist, died at the Hotel Wagram in Paris in Paris the other night in the 78th year of his age. His wife, whom he married fifty-two years ago, was with him at the end. Bjornson suffered a stroke of paralysis last June, and was brought to Paris in November for electro-therapeutic treatment. It was reported lately that he was growing better. The change came unexpectedly.

Bjornstjerne Bjornson was born near the town of Moldo, Norway, December 8, 1832. Poet, novelist, dramatist, reformer and apostle of peace, two hereditary traits dominated in his character—the placid nature, which he drew from his father, a country parson, and the fighting spirit, which came to him from his more remote ancestors, the old Norse sea-rovers. He was known as the Prophet-Poet of Norway. Toward him the people looked for guidance, and with his cudgels he fought in the cause of truth and justice.

At the age of 20 he entered the University of Christiania, and while there began writing in a serious vein. After two years as writer and editor he became the director of the Bergen Theater. This was in 1857. The next few years were devoted to travel and residence in Denmark, Germany and Italy, and then Bjornson went back to Norway for ten years. He began the series of plays which conquered the Norwegian stage and also invaded the Danish, Swedish and German theaters. As Bjornson grew older he went into politics as a reformer. In later years he became almost as well known an apostle of universal peace as is Tolstoi himself.

We were scarce in hiding, with the door well drawn back to screen us, when the cautious footsteps came slowly into the out-cellar. Peeping through the crack behind the door we saw Pengarvin—alone.

What brought him there without his tale of armed men at his back no man will ever know; but since his ways were always crooked and devious, I guessed he would not wish to appear in the matter in his own proper person, and yet could not deny himself a forehand peep to see if the trap were still safe shut and ecure.

'Twas evident he was much disconcerted at finding the door open and the wine vault apparently empty. At first he would start and dodge as if to run away; then his rage got the better of his caution and he had one of his senseless fits of raving and promising all manner of fiendish recompense to Mistress Margery when he should have her in his power.

A little longer dwelling upon this variation of the theme—ravings in which Dick learned for the first time of the factor's design to marry my widow and the estate—and I do think the lad would have gone out to make him sing another tune. But now the factor left off suddenly to cock his ear and listen, and afterward to come tiptoeing into the cellar, all eyes to spy and legs to run if a mouse should but squeak at him.

He was muttering to himself as he passed our hiding place.

The candle was burning brightly now, and he crept catlike around the cask to peer into the bin beyond it. Just then the shutter to the little window of espial fell open with a shrill creaking or its rusty hinges, and a blue glare of lightning came to prick out every nook and corner of the cellar. Being almost within a blade's length of the factor, I saw him plainly; saw him start back and put his hands to his face and drop down all of a tremble on the bin's edge, where I had been sitting when he discovered me.

To second the flash a prolonged drum-roll of thunder dinned upon the still air of the vault, and mingled with the thunder came other flashes, searing the eye and making the candle flame appear as a sickly orange halo in the blue-white glare. What with the play of the storm artillery we could neither see nor hear for the moment; but when the candle-light came to its own again the scene had changed as if by magic. Under cover of the thunder din a squad of dragoons had come to ring the factor in where he sat upon the edge of the wine bin.

"So-ho!" said my good friend Tybee, with a little strident laugh, "'tis you I am to take out and hang, is it, Master Lawyer? I thought hayhap you'd double on your track once too often, and so it seems you have. Up with you and come along."

All in a flash Pengarvin was up and bursting out in a trembling frenzy-fit of protestation.

"Oh, 'tis all a mistake, my good sir—a trap! I—I am not the man; I pledge you my sacred word! I—hands off, you cursed villains, or I'll have the law on you!" this last when one of the men cast the noose of a rope over his head whilst a second drew his arms to his sides in the looping of another cord. You shall all smart for this; all, I say! Take me to Colonel Tarleton. The king has no stancher friend in all the province than I. Why, 'twas I who——"

A trooper came behind and gagged him with the loose end of the rope; and Tybee held the candle to light the knotting of it. And so they marched him out, with Tybee muttering between his teeth that it was rat-catcher's work, and no soldier's, this killing of vermin, and bidding his men make haste.

CHAPTER XX.

For some breathless moments after we three were left alone in Stygian darkness of the wine cellar, no word was spoken. The rolling of the thunder was muffled now, as it were booming out the dirge of the man who had digged a pit and had himself fallen therein; and the lightning flashes coming at longer intervals served but to intensify the gloom they lit up for the instant.

"'Twas too much for Madge," said Richard, "she has fainted. Swing the door, and light another candle."

I did both as quickly as might be, and we bedded her on the floor, stripping out coats to soften the stone flagging for her and trying by all the means known to two unskilled soldier leeches to bring her to.

"Water!" said Dick; but when we had laved her face with that, without effect, we were well dismayed, I do assure you. For all our efforts she lay as one dead.

"We must get her out of this and up to her chamber," I said.

Richard started to his feet and stooped to gather the dear body of her in his arms. But in the act he paused and straightened himself to look fixedly at me.

"Do you take her, Jack; she is—she is—your wife."

"Nay," said I, drawing back. "You are her own true lover; and could she choose her bearer——"

"A murrain on your finickings!" he burst out. "She may die whilst we are haggling over the right to help her. Take her up, quick, man, and begone!"

"But bethink you, Dick," I urged; "if you are taken, you have one-chance in ten of faring as an officer and a prisoner of war. For me 'tis a spy's death as swift as they can drag me to it."

Now you will know, my dears, how much I loved these two when I could twist a cord of such mean fiber to bind them closer together. Richard's eyes flashed and his lip curled.

"Overlook it in me, if you can," he said, with fine scorn. "I had not thought upon the peril of it." And with that he took her in his arms as she had been a child to be carried, and I swung the door for him. But on the threshold he gave me back my sorry little subterfuge. "Once more, your forgiveness, Jack. I knew well you were but lying to give me precedence. Can you trust me with her?"

"Aye, dear lad; now and ever," said I; and so I pushed him out.

After he was gone I made shift to lead the horses through the narrow passage and out by a rear door, giving them a friendly slap to point them toward the stables.

This done I went back to my immurement, and I know not how long it was that I paced a weary sentry beat up and down the narrow limits of the wine cellar, alone with such thoughts as go to make the sum of that despair which follows hard upon the heels of some climaxing catastrophe. But I do know that as the hours dragged on leaden-shod, a slow fever of impatience came to dry the blood in my veins; to make me hunger and thirst for leave to say the final word to Father Matthieu, and so to be set at liberty to find the bottom of the pit into which a mocking fate had plunged me.

'Twas all over now. My dear lad was told, and he had forgiven me; the persecuting, plotting factor was effaced, and he could never trouble my sweet lady more. Between the two I loved there stood only the shadow of the marriage, and this the good priest would presently help me to dispel.

And after that * * * I dared not look beyond. There is a way beset with lions, and any man who bears the name of man in honor may draw his sword and fix his eye upon the goal and hew his path to it, joying in the conflict. But there is also another way, a desert trail owning no peril more affrighting than its own dread waste and limitless monotony; and when his eyes behold the dismal prospect, and his feet have pressed the hitherward sands of this desert of despair, a man may well pause to gird his loins, to cross himself and utter such a prayer for strength and fortitude as his creed hath taught him.

The sound of footsteps in the out cellar, warning me that more company was coming, sent a wave of sullen anger to submerge me, and I do think 'twas in me to turn my back upon a friend who should come to tell me I was free to go at large.

Since I had led forth the good horses the great oaken door had stood ajar. So I wondered why my visitor made so much ado rattling the key in the lock. Then it came to me suddenly that the noise and delay were meant to give me timely warning; and at the scent of threatening peril—a peril I might cope with and grapple soldierwise—I became a man again. A sweep of my hat sent the sputtering candle flying from its barrel head to the farther corner of the vault, and I dropped quickly behind a row of empty wine-butts to await what should befall.

CHAPTER XXI.

Had she been a ghost, Mistress Margery would scarce have startled me more when she swung the door to let me see her. She was gowned in her best; there was a heightened color in her cheek; her eyes were like stars. Truly I do think I never saw her so beautiful as she appeared at that moment, standing under the massive arch of the doorway with her candle held high to light the inner gloom.

"This way, Scipio," she said, tripping ahead of the mulatto to point out the madeira bin. "We shall give my Lord and his gentlemen the best the Appleby cellar holds to speed their parting." Wherewith she stood aside to wait whilst he filled his basket with the straw-cased bottles.

At this I saw why she had come. Lord Cornwallis and his gentlemen were about to take the road, and the wine was wanted for the stirrup-cup. Trusting my fate to no hand less loyal than her own, she had come herself with Scipio to stand betwixt me and possible discovery. And her word to the serving man was also a word to me to let me know my imprisonment was near an end.

I thought it a most generous thing in her; the last of all her many wifely loyalties; and I would have given much for leave to stand forth and tell her so. Indeed, when the mulatto had poised his basket upon his head and vanished, and she was lingering to take a last look around before she followed him, I was upon the point of speaking.

But whilst I hesitated I saw her start back with a little cry of terror. Standing in the archer doorway through which the mulatto had but now passed was a man cloaked, hatted, booted and spurred as for the road. At her cry he doffed his hat and * * *

My dears, I shall never be able to draw for you the hideous death-mask this man was wearing for a face. Seamed and scarred, shriveled and livid in purple and crimson welts, you would think a nine-thonged whip of fire had scourged out every semblance of comeliness, leaving only the skeleton frame on which to hang this ghastly caricature of a human face. Fearing him not at all, I could scarce forbear a shudder at the sight of this walking death-mask of the libertine, Sir Francis Faiconnet. And if his face were terrying in repose, 'twas fair demoniac when he laughed.

"Ha!" he said, bowing again in a mockery of politeness. "You are surprised, Mistress Margery; you heard my Lord's order and thought I would be by now some miles on the road to Salisbury?"

"If you were the loyal soldier you should be, sir," she said, drawing herself up proudly, "you would be at the head of your troop, as his Lordship directed." And then, with a gesture that was most queenly: "Stand aside, sir, and let me pass."

His answer was another mocking laugh, and he stepped within to close the door and lock it. When he turned to front her again his face was the face of a tormented demon.

He fell face downward at her feet as I suddenly struck him, and I set my heel in the small of his back to hold him whilst I could drive the point of the Ferara between his ribs. But my dear lady would not have it so.

"No, no! not that, Monsieur John!" she cried; and for the moment her fine courage was all swallowed up of pity and she became a compassionate woman pleading for a life.

But now my blood was up. "You are my wife," I said, coldly. "If he had a dozen lives I should take them."

"But not that way—oh, not that way, I do beseech you!" she begged. "Think of what it will mean to you—and—and to me. For your own sake, Monsieur John."

"Your wish is law to me, dear lady. But your way is clear now; you may go."

"You will not kill him when I am gone, Monsieur John?"

"By the name he bears he was doubtless born a gentleman; since you wish it, he shall die like one."

I saw she did not take my meaning; that when she was gone I should let him have his chance to die sword in hand.

"Remember, I have your promise," she said, turning to do. "The army is on the march for Salisbury, and in a little while your friends will be here to——"

The sentence ended in a very womanly shriek of terror. Watching his chance, my dastard enemy had bounded to his feet to make a quick lunge, not at me, but at her.

Of course I came between to parry the murderous thrust, and after that it was life for one of us and death for the other. I looked to see my lady run, shrieking; indeed, I called to her to go; but she stood fast as if her terror had frozen her; and so it was her candle that lighted the grim vault for the duel.

As you will know full well, I was not minded to give this fiend more than the gentleman's chance I had promised to give him. But now, as twice before, he fought most desperately, trying by every trick of fence to come between me and the silent little figure holding the candle aloft. As I have often said, he was a pretty swordsman, and at this crisis, with life at stake, and all the fury of the seven devils of disappointed vengeance to nerve his arm, his sword play was most masterly.

Yet twice in his stamping rushes I found my opening; once the Ferara's point passed his plade, and but for the ringed guard of the German longsword that stopped it when his parry failed, the steel would have passed through him. After this he grew warier, having in mind, as I supposed, that other time when I had shown him that my wrist and arm could outweary his. Yet his savage onset never flagged for an instant; and when the light fell upon his hideous face, I could see the fierce eyes glinting like a basilisk's, with no sign in them that my time was come to press him home.

"Apaches" of Paris.

The re-establishment of the death penalty has produced no sensible diminution in the total of crimes of murder, and the "Apaches" of Paris and their fellows and imitators in the provinces are growing in numbers and audacity, an exchange says. At the present time one of the effects of the floods has been to bring the "Apaches" like rats on the boulevards from their usual haunts in the suburbs. They assemble on the principal boulevards in front of the great restaurants and theaters, and, often in connivance with the chauffeurs and the drivers, force the public to submit to paying, first, a tip to two or three of themselves, with the alternative of vile abuse or blows, and, second, of a double fee to the drivers. As it has invariably rained heavily at midnight for the last three weeks, the scenes at night on the exit from the theaters have been a disgrace to any civilized city. The newspapers are filled with complaints, but up to the present no remedy has been attempted, and it would require treble the available force of police to put down this nuisance—which is not altogether unknown in London.

Between Two Fires.

"Lincoln stories" are common, and the tellers of them are not as accurate in ascertaining their genuineness as they are prolific in producing them. The following tale comes from a writer in the Chicago Journal, and may or may not be a "real Lincoln." It is, in any event, a good story:

Two farm-hands, Lincoln used to say, were set upon by a huge bull while crossing a rocky field. One managed to gain a tree. The other took refuge in a hole in the tree that proved to have an exit in the rear.

The man who had chosen the hole was no sooner in at one end than he was out at the other. With a bellow, the bull made for him. He turned and again shot like lightning through the hole. The bull once more bore down upon him, and once more he was in and out of his hole.

This strange pursuit kept up for some minutes. At first it mystified the farm-hand up in the tree. Then it angered him.

"Hey," he shouted, "you idiot! Why don't you stay in the hole?"

The bull was dashing from one end of the hole to the other at great speed, and the man was bobbing in and out desperately. He heard, however, his comrade's shout, and found time before his next brief disappearance to shout back:

"Idiot yourself! There's a bear in the hole!"

POSTUM FOR MOTHERS.

The Drink That Nourishes and Supplies Food for Mother and Child.

"My husband has been unable to drink coffee for several years, so we were very glad to give Postum a trial and when we understood that long boiling would bring out the delicious flavor, we have been highly pleased with it.

"It is one of the finest things for nursing mothers that I have ever seen. It keeps up the mother's strength and increases the supply of nourishment for the child if partaken of freely. I drank it between meals instead of water and found it most beneficial.

"Our five-year-old boy has been very delicate since birth and has developed slowly. He was white and bloodless. I began to give him Postum freely and you would be surprised at the change. When any person remarks about the great improvement, we never fail to tell them that we attribute his gain in strength and general health, to the free use of Postum and this has led many friends to use it for themselves and children.

"I have always cautioned friends to whom I have spoken about Postum, to follow directions in making it, for unless it is boiled fifteen or twenty minutes, it is quite tasteless. On the other hand, when properly made, it is very delicious. I want to thank you for the benefits we have derived from the use of your Postum."

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES

But few of our citizens realize that St. Joe had a commencement last week. A time when eight young folks had completed the course of study perscribed for them and they are just starting out to meet the real battles for themselves that confronts each person. The attendance was exceedingly small and the citizens are to blame for it. We were not asked to make this complaint but do it with our own will. The people of a community should have the interests of their school at heart and when such a time as this comes to them they should give the young folks a little encouragement at least, even if your boy or girl was not among the members of the class. They perhaps will be in the near future and if the rest of the people would stay away, what would you think? Just take the question to your own self. The class had worked hard with the teachers assistance to complete the course and did so with honors. Extensive preparations had been made for this day when they were to commence and work for themselves, and then to have such little encouragement, no doubt made the class blue. Considerable expense was made and their friends could not see fit to help them in the least. Its not right, good people Had some fake show come to town the room would have been packed to overflowing. Here a most worthy cause could have been supported and all felt well over it and the little twenty-five cent piece would never have been missed. Should such encouragement be given our young folks they would start out with zeal and a full determination to win. Did you do right by staying away? No. Rev. Owen Wright did not only talk to the graduates but to his audience also and some excellent principles were laid down whereby each one of us would be better citizens. This is our idea of the matter and we hope that you will think and decide who is right.

In the Thursday, April 21, edition of PATRIOT PHALANX there were a few extracts of a sermon by Rev I. N. Grisso of the Central Christian Church of Fairmount, W. Va. The Rev. Grisso was called to conduct the funeral of Ed. Anderson, a suicide. A suicide made so by drink. The sermon was remarkable. Remarkable in that an unusual course was pursued by the minister, who instead of either eulogizing or speaking in denunciatory terms of the personal habits of the deceased, showed the people where the blame lay, and thereby exibited more grit and common sense than is usually displayed in sermons of this kind. It is not our intention, in this article to enter into a tirade of invectives against the liquor traffic, but point out clearly, if we can, one grevious error on the part of the ministry of this country to preach from a mistaken sense of duty, a form of sermon that should be relegated to the attic among the dust and cobwebs. People who have dwelt among us all their lives and passed to the great Beyond, do not need to hear either words of praise or censure, from the lips of clergymen, who, perhaps and indeed often is, a perfect stranger to the deceased. We all have our ideas on the subject, and they vary according to our conceptions of what is just between man and man. What our personal opinions are does not alter one iota, the true status of the man whose spirit is in the hands of its maker. It is true, there is a tendency on the part of mankind to forget or rather forbear speaking evil of one whom has passed from among us; this we believe is proper, and how glorious a thing it would be if we would be equally as ready to forget and forgive when we have that same being alive and among us. It would be far better we think, if a minister would make a funeral the occasion to bring to the hearts and understanding of his hearers the uncertainty of human life; and lift their thoughts to a higher conception of that life that need never die except of our own will. Speaking of eulogizing the dead reminds us of the Irishman who upon reading the inscriptions carved upon the headstones in a certain cemetery, was led to exclaim, "Faith and be jabbers! where are all the bad men buried?" And who could blame Pat for such a view? We are thankful that one man had the moral stamina to stand for a principle instead of following an old moth-eaten, threadbare custom of speaking his private personal opinions of the moral standing of a deceased person. We need men who can defy custom and lead out into untried, but better paths, and thus help the world along one more step toward higher advancement in human thought and action. What think ye, ministerial brother?

It is the desire of the postoffice department that patrons of rural delivery paint their boxes and the posts to which they are attached a pure white color. This course, if pursued, will not only result in benefit to the patron in serving to protect his box and post from damage by the weather, but will give all boxes a uniform color and serve to fix their identity. It is also desired that patrons be induced to imprint their names and box numbers on boxes in black block letters about two inches high.

WOVEN WIRE FENCE.

There is so many makes of fence on the market, some good, some very poor. I have handled a number of different makes and am convinced that the AMERICAN FENCE is the best value for the money of any fence on the market. The strength of fence depends on the weight of the wire in the fence. Now compare the weight of a ROD of AMERICAN FENCE with the weight of a rod of any other fence then compare the price. Do not take the dealers word as to how much it weighs but put it on the scales and weigh it. I can sell you

Can you buy any other fence so cheap?

I have eight different styles on hand now. The American Steel and Wire Company make nearly all the wire that is woven in the different makes of fence and it is folly for an agent of any other make of fence to claim a superior quality of wire or of galvanizing. Every manufacturer of fence has an idea as to what temper the wire should be for a fence and orders his wire tempered accordingly, in other words he experimenting at the Farmers expense. The American Steel and Wire Company have passed the experimental stage and are producing a composition of Steel for Fence that is perfectly adapted for it. Every farmer that has had any experience with wire knows that wire exposed to the weather becomes hard and brittle, this feature has been largely eliminated in the special wire used in AMERICAN FENCE. While the wire is stiff and springy it is flexible enough to be easily spliced and will remain so. We will explain other good features if you will call and see us.

An Appeal to Republican Voters.

Since the 7th of March, I have been an active candidate for the Republican nomination as Circuit Judge. The office of Judge is not a political one, yet, a candidate, in most localities, must secure a party nomination in order to be elected. I have lived in DeKalb County most of my life, and have always been a Republican without receiving any reward at my party's hand. Since announcing my name as a candidate, I have seen a large number of republicans, the vast majority of whom have readily conceded my right to this nomination. But, I cannot see the greater part of the republican voters of the county, before the caucuses meet, much as I should like to. I take this method of requesting a large attendance at the caucuses, so that my claims to the nomination may secure full and fair consideration. The office of Circuit Judge is the most important office to be filled at election this fall.

Most Respectfully Submitted.

P. V. Hoffman.

What They Say of Gonser

A. W. Gonser, cashier of the bank at Ashley, has announced his candidacy for the office of county treasurer, subject to the will of the democratic party. Mr. Gonser has been connected with the Ashley banking institution ever since its existance, and is a man highly respected all over the county.—Ft. Wayne Journal Gazette.

Elsewhere in the Courier will be found the announcement of A. W. Gonser of Ashley, who will be a candidate for Treasurer before the Democratic primary. Mr. Gonser is well qualified for the place, having served as cashier of the bank at Ashley when that institution was in existance. He has been a life long Democrat.—Auburn Courier.

We understand that G. W. Gonser, cashier of the Commercial Bank, is a candidate for county treasurer of DeKalb county, subject to the decision of the democratic primary, to be held June 1, 1910. In our opinion the party would make no mistake in giving Mr. Gonser this nomination as he would certainly be a strong candidate and if he should be chosen at the primary we feel confident the people would elect him as he is in every way qualified for the position.—Ashley News.

Money Coming to You.

Put $100 in this bank, at the end of one year you will have that $100 and also $4.00 coming to you as interest.

At the end of the second year, you will still have $100 in the bank; you have had $4.00 interest and have $4.00 more coming to you.

There will be money coming to you as long as savings are in the bank.

The republican county convention will be in Auburn sometime during the first two weeks of June, the exact date not having been decided upon. This much was agreed upon at a meeting of the precinct committeemen and other workers held here Wednesday afternoon. It was the general opinion that the convention should be held after the democratic primaries billed for June. Another matter settled was that the delegates to the county convention should be selected as seperate caucuses from the judicial caucuses. There were some who favored selecting judicial, congressional and county delegates all at the same caucuses.—Dispatch.

Mistakes of Editors

It is said to be an inexcusable outrage for a newspaper editor to make the slightest mistake in a statement of any sort, while professional persons upon whose certainty of knowledge and on whose statement in regard thereto, life and death or the most important interests depend, make the most serious errors without incurring the slightest criticism, much less blame. Take the judge on the beuch, whose decisions are set aside and annulled by higher courts almost every day, and the judge whose judgement is so reversed does not suffer in the least in public and professional estimation. In the same way the physician who makes a wrong diagnosis of his patient's disease, administers treatment that results in death instead of cure, loses none of the confidence of his patrons in his skill, and he may kill any number of persons secundum artem without incurring the slightest responsibility. These are curious facts, say the New Orleans Picayune, but they are mentioned, not by way of excusing editorial mistakes, for there is no excuse for them. It is because every individual firmly belives that he could conduct newspapers better than those who are charged with the work, while no unprofessional person would undertake to usurp functions of the judge or the physician.

Nervous Collapse

"I have traveled for thirty years continually. I lost a great deal of sleep, which together with constant worry left me in such a nervous state that finally, after having two collapses of nervous prostration, I was obliged to give up traveling altogether. I doctored continually but with no relief. Dr. Miles' Nervine came to my rescue—I cannot describe the suffering which this Nervine saved me. Whenever I am particularly nervous a few doses relieve me." A. G. C. LIBBY, Wells, Me.

There are many nervous wrecks. There is nervous prostration of the stomach, of the bowels, and other organs. The brain, the kidneys, the liver, the nerve centers are all exhausted. There is but one thing to do—build up the nervous system by the use of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. Its strengthening influence upon the nervous system restores normal action to the organs, and when they all work in harmony, health is assured. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

The splendid work of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets is daily coming to light. No such grand remedy for liver and bowel troubles was ever known before. Thousands bless them for curing constipation, sick headache, biliousness, jaundice and indigestion. Sold by H. L. Dunkle, St. Joe; and W. L. Wernert, Spencerville.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address: F. J. The Flannel Shirt Joke.

There used to be a favorite funny paper story about a man who bought a flannel shirt, and every time it was washed it had to be handed down to one of the children until at last the baby was wearing it. Washing flannels used to be a critical task, but now Easy Task soap is used, and it not only does not shrink the goods, but it leaves the garment soft and comfortable as elderdown. Easy Task soap is pure, white and sanitary.

Smiles of The Day

Take It and Welcome.

Organizer of Village Concert (to small farmer, reputed owner of a pianoforte)—Excuse me, Mr. Mangold, but would you be so kind as to lend us your pianoforte for the concert at the schools?"

Small Farmer—Take it, take it! But, mind, I doan't suppose you'll find all the noates in't, for when my missus wants a bit o' wire she allus goes to the old planner.—Tit-Bits.

After Service Easter Sunday.

He (thinking of sermon)—Quite a novel treatment, eh?

She (thinking of the hat in front)—Yes; but too glaringly a bargain, don't you think?—Judge.

Complimentary.

She (to partner claiming first dance)—You are an early bird, Mr. Glossinest.

He (gallantly))—Yes, and by Jove, I've caught the worm.—M. A. P.

A Wonderful Invention.

"Here is something new, madam—permanent hairpins. You cannot lose them."

"How is that possible?"

"They are fastened to the hair. In fact, you buy them along with the hair."

Science Versus Tact.

"Frank, never bring that scientific man to our house again."

"What's the matter?"

"I never saw such impudence! He says the diamonds I wear are merely another form of charcoal; the idea."—Life.

Father's Dinner.

A little boy was sent to a shop by his mother, and, desirous to get away to play, he made all the haste he could. The shop was full of customers when he arrived, but he pushed himself to the front and cried out:

"I say, grocer, will you serve me quick? It's for my father's dinner?"

"Well, what do you want, my little man?" said the grocer, leaving the customer he was serving.

"Two pounds of soft soap and a packet of washing powder," was the quick response.—London Telegraph.

Her Shopping Instinct.

Kate—So Maude broke her engagement with Jack because the doctor said he had a tobacco heart.

Belle—Yes, and I don't blame her. Who wants a husband that's damaged by smoke?—Boston Transcript.

Taking Time Out.

Roebottom was a roofer. One day, as he was lunching, he was heard to give a yell of pain.

"What's the matter, Roebottom?" a carpenter asked.

"I got a nail in my foot," the roofer answered.

"Well, why don't you pull it out?" said the carpenter.

"What! In my dinner hour?" yelled Roebottom, reproachfully.—Philadelphia Record.

A Swan Song, As It Were.

Friend—Why did you "honk" then?

Autoist—I didn't honk. We ran over a goose.

A Dozen Chantecler Hats.

"Mrs. De Spinster has a dozen new chantecler hats!"

"Well, if she put on the whole dozen at once they wouldn't make her look like a spring chicken."—Judge.

Lost.

Husband—I am ruined, and my son's musical career cannot continue. Go to the barber's, Karl, and get your hair cut—Fliegende Blatter.

The Alternative.

Assum (after the performance)—I shouldn't think you'd care to take part in amateur theatricals.

Sinnickson (one of the cast)—I don't; but if I didn't I'd probably have to sit in the audience.

Not Always.

"Does your boss always address you by your Christian name?"

"Only when he's feeling good. When he's sore, he calls me the most un-Christian names he can lay his tongue to."—Cleveland Leader.

A Bright One.

Mr. Jinks—Every time the baby looks into my face he smiles.

Mrs. Jinks—Well, it may not be exactly polite, but it shows he has a sense of humor.

Hopeless.

"Your store is no good, sir! I asked for lace curtains last week, and I couldn't get 'em."

"Indeed?"

"Yes. And I asked for silk socks yesterday and I couldn't get 'em."

"That's strange."

"And to-day I ask for credit and can't even get that. Is this a regular store, or what?—Cleveland Leader.

Her Clever Motive.

"So you are going to housekeeping as soon as you're married? I thought you had made up your mind to board."

"Yes, but George is equally determined to have a house of our own."

"And so you are going to keep house in order to please George?"

"No. I'm going to keep house so that George will be glad to board."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Cheap Extravagance.

"Say, the amount of capital of that new trust won't fill this head line."

"How much is it?"

"It's $300,000,000."

"Add another cipher."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Silence.

Cynicus—It is impossible for a woman to keep a secret.

Henpeck—I don't know about that. My wife and I were engaged for several weeks before she said anything to me about it.—Tit-Bits.

Her Secret.

Mrs. Grech—How do you get your little boy to behave so nicely at table before visitors?

Mrs. Wise—Easily enough. You see, I give him plenty of cake before we sit down—Boston Transcript.

Art.

"How are you getting on as a newspaper artist?"

"Rapidly. They now allow me to draw the crosses showing where the tragedy occurred."—Cleveland Leader.

Unnecessary Advice.

"Governor Hadley says every man should keep a cow."

"Well, judging from the size of our milk bills, I guess I keep a cow and a couple of hired men."—Houston Post.

Foolish.

"Her father says Georgie must be taught to swim."

"How foolish, when everybody is learning to fly."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Losing His Standing.

"Why did you quit coming to Sunday school, James?"

"Aw, I had to—I was losin' me standin' wid de gang."

Not Quite Qualified.

Policeman—Do you have to take care of the dog?

Nurse Girl—No. The missis says I'm too young and inexperienced. I only look after the children.—Life.

Experience Taught Him.

"My borrowing this money of you won't hurt our friendship, will it?"

"No, indeed. I must keep friendly in order to get it back."

Glad He Went.

"There was a thunder of applause when I left the stage."

"Serves you right. You shouldn't stay on so long."

Oh! These Jealous Girls.

Her Mother—Have you told any one that Tom proposed to you?"

Alice—No one but Betty Smith, who thought he was going to propose to her.

Great.

Manager—I've got a new idea for a melodrama that ought to make a hit.

Writer—What is it?

Manager—The idea is to introduce a cyclone into the first act that will kill all the actors.

Wealth.

"He has eight fine looking daughters."

"Gee! And is he as rich in dollars as he is in daughters?"

"Just about. I think he's worth about $8."—Cleveland Leader.

How He Raised It.

"That man raises wheat and barley as high as your shoulders."

"A scientific farmer, is he?"

"No. A strong man."—St. Louis Star.

Columbus' Fleet.

The entire fleet of Columbus was worth only $8,000, and the explorer's salary was $300 a year.

Not Her.

The Doctor—Mrs. Murphy, you must be at your husband's side constantly, as you will need to hand him something every little while.

Mrs. Murphy—Niver, doctor! Fur be it from me to hit a man whin he's down!—Puck.

Unkind.

"I think," she said, "I should like to marry an imaginative man."

"Well, said her friend, speaking very sweetly, "what other kind of a man can you possibly expect to marry, if he has a chance to see you in daylight?"

THE POPULAR PULPIT

THE FIGHTING CHRISTIAN.

By Henry F. Cope.

"Fight the good fight of faith."—I. Tim., vi., 12.

Of course it is easy to criticise and exceedingly hard to amend, easy to paint the ideal and difficult to take one step toward the real. But there is not only no good, there is much harm to us in the habit of harshly condemning the wrong and facilely painting perfection while we ourselves make no endeavors toward meeting the present need.

Of what value is all our condemnation of sin if we do nothing to stop its ravages? The fashion too often seems to be that of regarding the work of the church as accomplished whenever she has invented some new phrases with which to describe iniquity, to deplore its existence, and to warn of its results, but never to take it by the throat and seek to throttle the beast.

Of what value are all our pictures of a beautiful land beyond, of a fair and glorious city over there, if we must stand idly by, waiting for that city and leaving our own, the one in which we and our brothers live, to be foul and dark, a snare to the young and a tool for the depraved? Is our piety able only to picture better things and never to bring them into being?

If we really desire that men shall be holy, that the soul shall grow in beauty, that our brothers shall come to that moral and spiritual beauty which for us is the glory of our great Father's face, we shall not forget that the features of eternity are molded in time, that the soil in which the soul grows is this present environment.

A deadly apathy has crept over any man who can see iniquitous conditions about him, who can see the depraved and the vicious working the machinery of lust and shame, who can see the ways of life full of menace to the young and weak and still feel no great tide of moral passion or holy hatred stir within him.

The trouble is that a good deal of our ardor for righteousness is either a zeal for proselytes, anxiety to make sure that all men think only as we think and that no man dares venture beyond our limited capacities, or it is a desire for respectability and comfort; we would clean up the resorts of vice because, really, you know, they are not nice to look at and, besides, they give us a bad name.

It is better to tilt at windmills than to remain impassive before great wrongs. It is better to be jeered at as a fool of a reformer than to win admiration for calmness when passion should be aroused to hatred and swift retribution. It were better to suffer from the mania of fighting the devil than to believe that this world will become really fit to live in without any effort on our part.

We can always manage to work up tremendous tides of feeling at the least hint that some invader should tread on our soil or stain our national honor; yet we remain blind to the fact that traitors in our midst, for greed of gain, step on and trample under foot the hearts and souls of men, despoil all that really constitutes the wealth and glory of a nation, the characters of her people.

Is there not grave danger that the church may miss her great chance, the chance to waken and fan in men a holy, flaming passion for real, actual, concrete rightness? What can religion be for in this world if it be not for this—to inspire and lead men to the fullness of their living, to the best in character, and to aid to this by furnishing the best possible conditions for the growth of character?

The function of the church is neither legislative nor executive; it is inspirational. But of what value is all the inspiration if it leads to no activity, to no endeavor for the realization of those ideals which the church paints? We have been singing great songs of spiritual patriotism and then shunning the battle until the emotions are at high tide while the moral passion is paralyzed.

It is time for all who have any religious faith to realize that moral and social facts are our concern, that, if we believe in the eternal goodness we must actually fight the present evil, that if we really love our fellows we must make the upward way possible for them, we must fight the foes of the weak and make straight paths for their feet; if we want men to win to a better world there we must make as good a world as it can be here.

MAKE USE OF YOUR GIFTS.

Rev. Abner H. Lucas, D. D.

"And he said, leave us not, I pray thee; for as much as thou knowest how we are to encamp in the wilderness, and thou mayst be to us instead of eyes." Num. 10:31.

What more glorious use can be made of knowledge, influence, and personal strength than to turn them to the help of the needy? If your vision is penetrating and clear, what nobler service can you render than to "be eyes" for those who may not see afar? If your hand has strength and cunning, to what better use may it be turned than lifting the burdens of the weak and teaching the unskilled how best to accomplish their task?

If you have wealth you have possession of a power for good which is nearly omnipotent, if rightly applied. What more worthy aim can lead men and women of wealth than that through their help the poor may catch visions of the highest and holiest life? If we have the gift of prophecy, we must use it for the instruction of the ignorant, if we retain it. To hesitate is ingloriously to fail; selfishly to keep for ourselves what God has intended shall serve His children, is to lose life with all its opportunities of good. Hobab's knowledge and influence never were more precious to him than when, having refused the appeal to enrich himself, he accepted the opportunity to assist others. As the new dangers arose, and he helped Moses meet them and conquer them, his own mind and soul grew imperial. By the number, magnitude, and stress of the responsibilities which he accepted in his service of others, he was developed into his own worthiest life. When a great Italian commander was defeated he issued his immortal appeal: "Soldiers, I am without money and without reward. I have nothing to offer you but cold and hunger, rags and hardship. Let him who loves his country follow me." But with that summons to self-denial and patriotism he gathered to his side the choicest souls of his generation. The men who followed in response to that appeal became courageous heroes themselves. When our Lord turned and said to the multitude, "The Son of man hath not where to lay His head," and invited them to follow Him, He was calling to men and women who had counted the cost, and were ready to surrender themselves to the cause of purity, truth, and human helpfulness. The way of life is narrow; the gate to it is narrow; but the narrowness of the way and the gate are its glory. Narrowness of the way demands energy, high purpose, and noble perseverance. There is no other way of success in life but the narrow way. To invite a great soul to a broad path is to invite him to smallness, to the cessation of growth, and impotence. The cry has been heard in every age. "Would God it were easier to be good!" "And would God it were easier to redeem the earth!" But that is a mistaken cry. When the ten spies returned from Canaan murmuring because of the obstacles to their conquest, their murmuring was an evidence of weakness of character; but the cry of Caleb and Joshua was, "Up, let us conquer these giants, and take their walled cities." That was the token of the greatness of the two.

Jesus Christ did not come primarily to change the circumstances that should make life easy, but to give a new incentive and lofty inspiration that would enable men to meet life's circumstances as they are. He never promised His friends that the path of duty should be free from danger. In the spirit of the Spartan mother who charged her soldier son, "Come home with your shield or on it," Christ says to His disciples, "Take the field and save humanity, cost what it may." It is always true that the choice of the broad path of personal ease and comfort, instead of the narrow path of duty, leads to the loss of self-respect, the world's esteem, and true success. Sir Henry Stanley describes bravery as a requisite for those who push into the African forest, and says: "The bigger the work the greater the joy of doing it. The whole-hearted striving and wrestling with difficulty to lay hold with a firm grip and level head, and the calm resolution of the master, and tugging and toiling and wrestling at it to-day, to-morrow, and the next, until it is done—is the soldier's creed of forward, ever forward; it is a man's faith that for this task he was born." When McKay wrote from Uganda in Africa to the home Church, he said: "For our work at this station we want the best men in England; not a man who can be easily spared, but the man who cannot be spared." Christianity from the beginning has grown upon tasks that were so great as to require the consecration of all its power, "O, pray not for easy lives, pray to be stronger men; do not pray for tasks equal to your power, pray for power equal to your tasks; then the doing of your work shall be no miracle, but you shall be a miracle; every day you shall wonder at yourself at the richness of the life which has come to you by the grace of God."

HYMNS AND THEIR AUTHORS

A STRANGER AT THE DOOR.

By Joseph Grigg.

[The Rev. Joseph Grigg has a number of the most beautiful and best known hymns to his credit. He was a precocious child, writing such hymns as "Jesus, and Shall It Ever Be," when he was but 10 years of age. He began preaching when he was 16. He lived about the middle of the eighteenth century. Although his ministry at Silver Street Presbyterian Church, London, is forgotten, this fugitive hymn is better known every day.]

Behold, a Stranger at the door!
He gently knocks, has knocked before;
Has waited long, is waiting still;
You treat no other friend so ill.

O lovely attitude; he stands
With melting heart and laden hands;
O matchless kindness! and he shows
This matchless kindness to his foes.

But will he prove a friend indeed?
He will; the very friend you need;
The Friend of sinners—yes, 'tis he,
With garments dyed on Calvary.

Rise, touched with gratitude divine;
Turn out his enemy and thine,
That soul destroying monster, sin,
And let the heavenly Stranger in.

SKRMONETTES.

The only smile that helps rises in the heart.

The gushing preacher often leaves a desert.

Success is an unreliable evidence of righteousness.

WESTERN CANADA

What J. J. Hill, the Great Railroad Magnate, Says About its Wheat-Producing Powers

"The greatest need of this country [United States] in another generation or two will be the providing of homes for its people and producing sufficient for them. The days of our prominence as a wheat exporting country are gone. Canada is to be the great wheat country."

Upwards of 125 Million Bushels of Wheat

were harvested in 1909. Average of the three provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba will be upwards of 23 bushels per acre.

Free homesteads of 160 acres, and adjoining pre-emptions of 160 acres (at $3 per acre), are to be had in the choicest districts. Schools convenient, climate excellent, soil the very best, railways close at hand, building lumber cheap, fuel easy to get and reasonable in price, water easily procured; mixed farming a success. Write at once for best plans for settlement, settlers' low railway rates, descriptive illustrated "Last Best West" (sent free on application), and other information, to Sup't of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to the following Canadian Gov't Agents: W. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Is the best of all medicines for the cure of diseases, disorders and weaknesses peculiar to women. It is the only preparation of its kind devised by a regularly graduated physician—an experienced and skilled specialist in the diseases of women.

It is a safe medicine in any condition of the system. THE ONE REMEDY which contains no alcohol and no injurious habit-forming drugs and which creates no craving for such stimulants.

THE ONE REMEDY so good that its makers are not afraid to print its every ingredient on each outside bottle-wrapper and attest to the truthfulness of the same under oath.

It is sold by medicine dealers everywhere, and any dealer who hasn't it can get it. Don't take a substitute of unknown composition for this medicine of KNOWN COMPOSITION. No counterfeit is as good as the genuine and the druggist who says something else is "just as good as Dr. Pierce's" is either mistaken or is trying to deceive you for his own selfish benefit. Such a man is not to be trusted. He is trifling with your most priceless possession—your health—may be your life itself. See that you get what you ask for.

WESTERN CANADA AS A GRAIN PRODUCER.

Never Saw Such Fine Wheat Anywhere.

Gust. Anderson, of Maidstone, Saskatchewan, was formerly of Minnesota, and has been in Central Canada three years. On January 16, 1910, he writes:

"Arriving fifteen miles from Maidstone, I bought a couple of steers from a rancher, as my capital was not large, and with the two oxen I brought with me, I broke 25 acres which I put in crop in 1908, and had to clear some brush. I earned $45.00 by breaking fifteen acres for a neighbor and during the summer I put up hay and hauled timber and put up houses for other settlers. Notwithstanding a heavy frost on August 12th, I had 22½ bushels of wheat per acre and 60 bushels of oats. Off 35 acres of wheat in 1909, I got 27 bushels of wheat per acre and 1,300 bushels of oats off 20 acres. I never saw such fine wheat anywhere. We have plenty of rain between May and August and after August seldom any but dry, warm days. Water can be had at from 20 to 40 feet, and plenty of grass for cattle."

The evidence of Mr. Anderson is given because it is encouraging to the man of small means who is desirous of bettering his condition. It shows what can be done, and there is really but small limit to the man with push and energy to become wealthy on Canadian lands. And the grain that he raises is good. A press dispatch says:

The quality of the wheat continues to be the feature of the deliveries. In the total of 3,378 cars in the February inspections there were 2,847 of high grade stuff, a percentage of 84.28. For January the percentage was 82.21, and for the six months it was 88.6. This is an unusually high average, and it demonstrates beyond the shadow of a doubt that the farmers in this part of the Dominion still know how to grow first class wheat. The crop of 1908 was considered good enough, and its average of contract wheat was only 70 per cent. Good weather throughout the season was an important factor, of course, in insuring the high quality of the grain, and it is not likely that atmospheric influences of so favorable a character will be encountered for a long time to come. The best that can be expected is that a fair average for a term of years will be maintained.

Practical View.

"You have heard, I presume," said the student who was taking an astronomical course, "that we've found oxygen on Mars?"

"What good will that do us?" grunted the agricultural college student. "What we need on this planet is more nitrogen, and we need it darned bad!"

Treating Cancer with Heat.

Dr. Eugene Doyen explained at the International Congress of Physiotherapy in Paris his treatment of cancer by means of electrically produced heat. The secret of the discovery is that the cancerous cells are destroyed by a temperature of from 50 to 55 degrees centigrade, which is entirely harmless to healthy cells. The method shows wonderful results, he says, in eliminating the need of the knife in all lesions which are accessible to an electrical current, artificially applied. The healing of the tissues follows immediately upon the coagulation of the cancerous cells.

REST AND PEACE

Fall Upon Distracted Households When Cuticura Enters.

Sleep for skin tortured babies and rest for tired, fretted mothers is found in a hot bath with Cuticura Soap and a gentle anointing with Cuticura Ointment. This treatment, in the majority of cases, affords immediate relief in the most distressing forms of itching, burning, scaly, and crusted humors, eczemas, rashes, inflammations, irritations, and chafings, of infancy and childhood, permits rest and sleep to both parent and child, and points to a speedy cure, when other remedies fail. Worn-out and worried parents will find this pure, sweet and economical treatment realizes their highest expectations, and may be applied to the youngest infants as well as children of all ages. The Cuticura Remedies are sold by druggists everywhere. Send to Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., sole proprietors, Boston, Mass., for their free 32-page Cuticura Book on the care and treatment of skin and scalp of infants, children and adults.

"Yaller."

Some soaps are so yellow that no word describes them so well as the homely old expression "yaller." They are made of cheap grease—often rancid—and lots of rosin is put in to give the soap weight. Add to this the strong caustic and you understand why your table linen rots into holes and your white garments come from the laundry with streaks of dirt ironed in them. Use Easy Task soap—the pure, white, guaranteed soap that is an enemy to dirt and a friend to fabrics.

The man who permits his head and his heart to work in unison generally remains poor.

Nothing so good as Russ Bleaching Blue. Delights the laundress. All grocers sell it. Refuse imitations.

Naturally Bashful.

Many happy marriages have been made on short acquaintance, nevertheless it is unwise to recommend very short courtships as a general rule. A writer in Tit-Bits relates an instance of the extremely brief wooing of a certain English maid who had gone to America. One morning she appeared before her mistress and announced that she had named the day and would become a wife at the end of the week.

"Are you going back home then?" the lady asked.

"Oh, no, ma'am; it's an American gentleman," replied the maid.

"But," remonstrated her mistress, "you've only been here a fortnight."

"That's no matter. He wants the wedding to be on Saturday."

"But can't you get him to postpone the marriage just a little till I can get another maid?"

"Well, ma'am, I'd like to oblige you, but, ye see, I don't feel well enough acquainted to ask him to do that."

Hard to Swallow.

"Yes, my lad," the health crank was remarking, "people should be careful not to eat much when they are going to take exercise. I once took a walk of fifty miles on nothing but a few soft boiled eggs."

"Gee!" said the boy. "What lookin' feet you must have had when you got there!"

REVIEW OF INDIANA

The recent rains and snow killed hundreds of young sparrows and some other birds in the vicinity of Muncie. Little feathered bodies were found in large numbers beneath trees.

A strange monkey, believed to have escaped from a circus, committed suicide at the plant of the Globe Handle Company in Evansville, whither he had wandered, by hanging himself with a chain from one of the rafters.

The new city directory for Peru and its immediate suburbs shows that there is a population of seventeen thousand in the territory included within a radius of one mile and a half from the Public Square. The census of 1900 gave Peru proper a population of less than nine thousand.

Notwithstanding the wintry weather of the last week, mushroom hunters have been coming into Peru with large quantities of them. James Rhineberger, while there was snow still on the ground, found 119 mushrooms. Frank Moeck also brought in a bushel basketful of fine ones. Several persons report that they found mushrooms protruding through the snow, which is unusual.

Frank M. Young, of Hopkinsville, Ky., who is six feet seven inches tall, was denied admission into the regular army at Evansville because of his height. Young says that until recently he was a street car conductor, employed on the lines in St. Louis, and he gave up his job because the company refused to alter the cars so he would not have to bend over each time he entered one.

Christian Graff, a resident of Caborn Station, on the Louisville & Nashville railroad, a few miles west of Evansville, is mourning the loss of $100 in paper money which he placed in a pair of old felt boots. He had more confidence in the boots than he had in banks. A few days ago while cleaning house his wife burned the boots along with some other rubbish. Graff says he will put his money in the bank next time.

Mrs. Eva Phillips, age thirty-eight, of Cottonplant, Ark., who is visiting her brother, Will Sage, of Lawrenceburg, was stricken blind. Mrs. Phillips was reading when a windstorm blew a shutter against a window near which she was sitting, breaking several panes of glass and extinguishing the lamp. The woman called for help and Mr. Sage went to her room, and found that while his sister was unhurt she was unable to see. Physicians can not explain the woman's case.

Attracted by the action of his collie, John Lee, a farmer near Anderson, followed the dog in its effort to lead him across a field until Lee found seven dogs surrounding sheep and lambs in fence corners. Lee ran back to his house for a gun, but his faithful dog undertook to engage the sheep-killing dogs into a fight and kept them there until Lee returned and killed six of the stray dogs. Lee said it was not the first time that his collie dog had saved sheep on his farm.

James McElroy, aged 60, a farmer living two miles southeast of Newcastle, is dead and the fact that he indulged in a hearty laugh is believed to have hastened his death. With several friends he was at his barn attending the stock and the men were telling jokes. McElroy was laughing heartily at one of them when suddenly he was seized with a severe hemorrhage. His companions rushed to his side and bore McElroy to the house nearby, but he died within a few minutes and before a physician could be summoned. He is survived by a widow and six children.

Judson Miller, a farmer near Frankfort, had a narrow escape from death when sixteen sticks of dynamite, within a few feet of where he stood, exploded. Miller had been blasting stumps and as the dynamite had become damp he placed it near a heater to dry it out. He had kept the caps separate from the dynamite but in some manner they were touched off causing the dynamite to explode. The heater was shattered and Miller's team, standing nearby, took fright and ran away, doing some damage to the wagon. Miller was knocked down by the force of the explosion, but escaped injury.

James K. Yeagley, a produce buyer and shipper of DeMotte, was fined for the shipment of fifty-four quails, eight wild ducks, one snipe and seventeen rabbits to commission merchants in Chicago on December 28 last. The game was shipped in a barrel by express and billed as rabbits. Yeagley's fine and costs amounted to $109. Convinced that there have been many violations of the game law in the Kankakee valley, Chief Deputy Game Warden Earle says he intends to break up the practice of illegal killing and shipping of game birds, if he has to camp on the Kankakee all the year round.

Because he harrowed a small field one Sunday last June, Samuel Shipley, a wealthy farmer, living near Newcastle, was fined $25 in the circuit court. Shipley was recently indicted for working on Sunday.

A cow valued at $90, belonging to Milton White, of near Nashville, became entangled in a clothes line last week and choked to death. Mr. White found the animal in the morning lying on the ground with the wire wrapped around its neck.

Sherman Mackey, of Indianapolis, is serving a jail sentence for trespassing on the farm of Alva B. Smith, near Avon, while fishing.

Four unidentified men, believed to have been highwaymen, stole a Big Four engine from the yards in Greenburg and abandoned it after running the locomotive fourteen miles south of the city. The police are holding John O'Brien, of Cincinnati, who is believed to have taken part in the theft.

Gladys Nash, the 12-year-old daughter of Walter Nash, a farmer, was shot to death by Rex Woodard, aged 16, in the Nash home near Sullivan. The girl died a half hour after the shooting. The boy was a neighbor and had picked up the gun from a bed to examine it, not knowing it was loaded. The girl's father exonerates Woodard and says the shooting was accidental.

News has been received in Evansville from Gordon, Neb., telling of the death of the Rev. John A. Schamaborn, a veteran of the Civil War, who for many years was a resident of Evansville. He was about 68 years of age and is survived by a widow and several children. At the time of his death he was presiding elder of the Gordon, Neb., district of the Methodist church.

Clarence Morgan and Ernest Hoover, of Indianapolis, were arrested on a charge of dynamiting fish in Eel river in the vicinity of North Salem. The charges of the explosive they turned loose in the stream were so large that they blew most of the water from the creek for the time being. They entered pleas of guilty and their fines and costs will amount to something like $130.

Pensions have been granted to the following Indianians: Lawson V. Brown, $15; Rebecca Bunner, $12; William D. Burns, $15; Isaac E. Carmin, $20; Helen Chadwick, $12; John T. Everhart, $20; Angeline Gray, $12; Silas A. Lambert, $24; special act, William M. McClure, $12; Alivia Nelson, $12; James Reynolds, $12; Ira C. Sowles, $20; John Thomas, $15; John Trinkle, $15.

In a freight wreck on the Chicago, Cincinnati & Louisville railroad three miles south of Richmond, three trainmen were slightly injured and Joseph W. Hardlica, of St. Louis, was killed. Hardlica is believed to have been a tramp beating his way. Letters in his pocket fixed his identity. The wreck occurred just across the Wayne County line, in Union County, and was caused by a car jumping the track. A number of cars were badly damaged.

Dick Conway, a well known sporting man of Lawrenceburg, lost his valuable bird dog, Duke, in a peculiar way. The dog had been trained to play ball and when Mr. Conway was playing billiards a ball was accidentally knocked off the table. The dog made a bound for the ivory ball, caught it in his mouth and the ball slipped down the dog's throat, choking the canine to death before it could be removed. Mr. Conway had won several field prizes with the dog and valued him at $150.

Robert L. Sears, proprietor of the White Anchor laundry in Lafayette, and Jesse Beemer, an employe, were seriously scalded by the overturning of a copper tank containing fifty gallons of boiling water. The tank stood on a shelf just above the two men who were at work in the wash room. The shelf broke and the tank fell, throwing the water on Sears and Beemer. Sears is badly burned on the right side from the shoulder to the foot and Beemer about the lower limbs. Both will recover.

Because he would not tell who was with him catching fish unlawfully on Nolans Fork, a stream which runs through Waterloo Township, John Wrigley, of Evansville, paid a fine of $70 and costs for unlawful possession of a fish gig. Gallian Lamphere, of Indianapolis, was the fish and game commissioner who prosecuted him. Wrigley was urged to tell who else beside himself in the neighborhood had been fishing by unlawful means. He steadfastly refused to do so, saying the justice might pile on any fine he pleased, for it would cost him (Wrigley) only a few dollars anyhow.

A free library for Plymouth is assured. The woman's library committee has filed with the County Clerk the petition for the appointment of a library board. A few weeks ago representatives from twenty-seven women's clubs formed an organization to start a public library and rest room. They obtained over $2,000, more than enough to meet the requirements of the statute. Andrew Carnegie has given assurance that when the Council has provided for its maintenance and a site purchased, he will set aside a sum from $10,000 to $15,000, as the committee may decide, for the erection of a public library building.

While drilling a water well, near Kempton, on the farm of Walter Williams, James M. Fishback reports that at a depth of seventy-one feet he encountered an obstruction, which later proved to be a heavy log.

For the first time in years the Howard county jail is without an inmate. The last prisoner was released last week and since then the cell doors have stood ajar. The temperance people say that this condition is due to the fact that Kokomo is "dry."

Stop Women And Consider

This Fact—that in addressing Mrs. Pinkham you are confiding your private ills to a woman—a woman whose experience with women's diseases covers twenty-five years.

The present Mrs. Pinkham, daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham, was for years under her direction, and has ever since her decease continued to advise women.

Many women suffer in silence and drift along from bad to worse, knowing well that they ought to have immediate assistance, but a natural modesty causes them to shrink from exposing themselves to the questions and probable examinations of even their family physician. Such questioning and examination is unnecessary. Without cost you can consult a woman whose knowledge from actual experience is great.

MRS. PINKHAM'S STANDING INVITATION:

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read and answered by women. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established this confidence between Mrs. Pinkham and the women of America which has never been broken. Never has she published a testimonial or used a letter without the written consent of the writer, and never has the company allowed these confidential letters to get out of their possession, as the hundreds of thousands of them in their files will attest.

Out of the vast volume of experience which Mrs. Pinkham has to draw from, it is more than possible that she has gained the very knowledge needed in your case. She asks nothing in return except your good will, and her advice has helped thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, should be glad to take advantage of this generous offer of assistance. Address Mrs. Pinkham, care of Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

Decorate Your Walls at Small Cost

These Free

We will send you free of cost, a complete color plan for the walls of your home. We will furnish free stencils to help you make your home beautiful.

Alabastine
The Sanitary Wall Coating

comes in all sorts of rich, soft shades of color that enable you to decorate your walls in the same style as the handsome city houses.

Alabastine is a powder made from pure native alabaster, you mix it with clear cold water and apply it with a flat wall brush. Simple directions printed on every package. Anyone can do it. Then when you want to redecorate, just put the new coat over the old. That saves a lot of work, trouble and money.

People do not like kalsomine, as all kalsomine is mixed with glue to make it stick. The glue rots and the kalsomine comes off—on your clothes and on the floor. Alabastine adheres to the wall of its own cementing qualities. It requires no dirty glue, nor paste, as with kalsomine or wall paper. These always attract insects and disease germs.

Lion Fondles a Child.

In Pittsburg a savage lion fondled the hand that a child thrust into his cage. Danger to a child is sometimes great when least regarded. Often it comes through Colds, Croup, and Whooping Cough. They slay thousands that Dr. King's New Discovery could have saved. "A few doses cured our baby of a very bad case of Croup," writes Mrs. George B. Davis, of Flat Rock, N. C., "We always give it to him when he takes cold. Its a wonderful medicine for babies." Best for Coughs, Colds, LaGrippe, Asthma, Hemorrhages, Weak Lungs. 50c. $1.00. Trial bottle free. Big Mass Meeting.

People for miles around St. Joe know that during certain times each year, that the high waters make it impossible for them to come to town. Therefore the matter is being taken up and your presence is earnestly requested at a public meeting to be held in Widney's opera house, Friday evening, May 6, (of this week) for the purpose of discussing and formulating plans to obtain a high water grade or levy between Hadsell's bridge and Poper's corners. Come sure, you are wanted. This is of interest to everyone. Enough money has been spent on the road to have it fixed right but as long as the water is able to raise over the road it will be washed out and more work required. Come and help have it done right. Don't forget.

TREASURES OF THE SEA.

Quantities of Gold Which Will Probably Remain Buried Forever.

It is estimated that at least $500,000,000 of treasure in the shape of coin, ingots and plate lies buried under the waves or in tiny bits of islands little heard of.

Among some of the most notable fortunes waiting to be picked up is the $15,000,000 which sank in the flagship Florentia of the Spanish armada, in Tobermory bay, off the west coast of Scotland in 1588.

Because the Spanish galleons, returning with their harvest of four years' looting in Mexico, were so hard pressed by the British in 1702, they scuttled their ships in Vigo bay and their $140,000,000 of gold, silver and precious stones has not yet been recovered from the deep.

Cocas Island is an insignificant dot of land sixteen miles square, but it contains $60,000,000 worth of loot, which was hidden by Benito Bonito, a daring pirate. No fewer than eighteen expeditions have searched every nook and cranny of the island, but without success.

Alboran Island is only a lonely rock in the Mediterranean, but about it somewhere there lies $5,000,000 in gold buried by a pirate crew of the Young Constitution when chased and cornered by a British gunboat in 1831.

The Black Prince, a British ship, loaded with $8,000,000 in gold to pay the British soldiers, was sunk by Russian gunfire at Sebastopol. The East Indiaman Grosvenor went down off St. Johns, Cape Colony, with $5,000,000 on board.

On the Island of Mauritius is buried the nice little nest egg of $150,000,000 in gold, silver and precious stones, which was captured by pirates from French and British ships, which in turn had been looted from India. A tiny island in the Spanish main conceals $7,500,000, deposited by a French pirate, Latrobe, about 100 years ago, while another pirate hoard of $5,000,000 lies on a small island in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

In the famous sea fight off Navarina in 1827, in which seventy Turkish vessels were sunk by the combined Anglo-French-Russian fleets, something like $5,000,000 was lost.

When President Kruger fled from the Transvaal it was stated that he took $5,000,000 with him. Some declare it was lost in the wreck of the Zululand in Delagoa bay; others say that it is buried in the fastnesses of the Transvaal mountains.

Lying 110 feet beneath the surface of Lake Nemi are two galleys belonging to the Roman Emperors Tiberius ad Caligula, which contain gold plate, jewels and art treasures worth at least $5,000,000.

Capt. Kidd, notorious of all pirates, buried $5,000,000 of ill gotten gains on one of the West Indian islands. Attila, at one time one of the greatest terrors of the mercantile service, unwillingly left $50,000,000 in the river Danube—a huge treasure, indeed.

SIDELIGHTS.

The railroads of the world are valued at $27,775,000,000.

The house fly becomes full grown in about four weeks.

Muscles to the number of 4,061 have been counted in the body of a moth.

Spiral wire hoops now take the place of wooden hoops on barrels and kegs.

Whooping cough kills more children under 5 years of age than scarlet fever.

There is now an international standard unit of candle power, which will soon be in use in every country except Germany.

Of the 4,000,000,000 gallons of wine manufactured in the civilized world every year about 40,000,000 are made in the United States.

Waterways in Alaska navigable by steamers approximate 4,000 miles, of which nearly 2,700 are in the watershed of the Yukon river.

According to a statement by the German colonial secretary, the value of the diamondiferous deposits in German Southwest Africa amounts to $250,000,000.

SPLINTERS.

Skin game—The leather business.

You never hear a man howl when his conscience hurts him.

The man who grows vegetables is not necessarily a vegetarian.

You cannot always judge a man's speed by the way he walks to work.

The mountain that looks the easiest is sometimes the hardest to climb.

Benners—Did you say that Smith was a civil engineer? Jenners—No, he is the worst grouch on the road.

Customer—I have just bought a suburban lot, and I am thinking about planting it. Storekeeper—I see; I suppose you want some grass seed. Customer—No, I guess you had better make it water lily seed.

Goldsmith in the Race.

Nicholas Goldsmith of Spencerville, announces his name in this week's issue as a candidate for the nomination of State Representative subject to the will of his party at the primary held June 1. Mr Goldsmith needs no introduction to the people of DeKalb County, having been a resident of the same for 36 years. He is at present a member of the county council, has always been a man loyal to his party. After spending many years of his life on the farm he purchased the S. S. Shutt property and is living there now. Mr. Goldsmith is a man of years experience and should he be successful he will be in shape to do the people considerable good. He knows the needs of his farmer friends as well as the others and it will be his whole desire to serve the public in general. He is making a thorough campaign and feels encouraged at the prospects.

Frank Named the Baby

Mr. F. R. Bowman, census enumerator for the township of Spencer and the south half of Newville Tp., has completed his work and returned all papers to the 12th District Supervisor, John W. Sale, at Ft Wayne. While going over the territory he found a family with a baby boy, some three weeks old that up to the time of his call they had failed to give a name. Mr. Bowman told them they would have to give the baby a name and the family told Mr. Bowman to name it, so he did calling the baby Ralph. We feel safe in saying that this is the first baby ever Christened by Mr. Bowman.

Young Bride Showered.

Sunday was a disastrous day for rats in St. Joe. Claude Mason and some of his neighbors set apart this day when they would make a cleaning up of the rats about his barn. A ferret was put under the barn and then the fun began. Clubs were in the air and when the fight ended the dead bodies were piled up and 33 were counted. The rats had did considerable damage to Mr. Mason's barn and corn crib until they could not stand it any longer. This beats all records for rat killing we have heard of.

C. B. Leighty is working for Carnes & Co., in the meat market at Spencerville.

A. J. Collins, of north of St. Joe, preached Sunday morning at the M. P. Church in the absence of Rev. L. Coomer. Mr. Collins is an earnest speaker and all seemed to be pleased with the services. His remarks made a lasting impression on all present. We feel safe in saying that should he be called upon again to fill the appointment he will be greeted with a larger house.

The meeting held in the opera house last Friday evening was quite well attended, and the enthusiasm of the farmers across the river in regard to establishing a high water grade between the Hadsell bridge and Poper's corners will add in making the undertaking successful. The petitions are being circulated for signers and a large number have already expressed their willingness by signing it. The proposed work will be a benefit to the entire community and should receive the hearty support of the people. As soon as the names are secured the petition will be presented to the Commissioners for action.

The laying of the corner stone of the Eckhart Public Library, will be Friday afternoon, May 13. Gov. Thos. R. Marshall will deliver an address, and other appropriate exercises will be given.

Mrs. Nancy Widney died at her home Sunday night at 12 o'clock, after an illness of several weeks. The funeral services were held yesterday afternoon from the Lutheran Church. Obituary will appear in next issue.

Band Concert.

The Coburntown band has been secured for each Saturday night during the summer, to play on our streets, commencing with this week. Tell all your friends and then come to town Saturday night. We expect to make things lively this summer and want everybody to come each night.

Lutheran Church Announcements.

Weekly prayer meeting Thursday evening. Sunday School Sunday morning followed by the regular services. C. E. in the evening at 6:30. You are cordially invited to attend these services.

Rev. Hitchner, Pastor.

It Is a Fact.

Our sales on Carpets and Rugs for the past week has been the largest in our history. There must be a cause for it, which is simply this, we have the goods to show and the price to make good on. When we offer you the best all wool carpet at 65 cents, or one of our 9x12 rugs at $19.50, or Lineoleum at 55c. yard, it is just like selling you gold dollars at 90 cents each.

THESE PRICES backed up by our large stock is the answer to our fine business. Then when it comes to Lace Curtains we are simply it.

McKinley Home Museum.

Mrs. Joseph W. Weiss, who owns McKinley Heights, a suburban residence section near Girard, Ohio, has moved the old McKinley home from Riverside Park to her property and will make a museum for McKinley relics out of the building. The house is the one in which McKinley was born at Niles. It was moved from Niles several years ago to make room for a business block. Relic hunters have carried away much of the interior, but it will be replaced as near its original condition as possible. Relics of McKinley's early days and later life have been secured by Mrs. Weiss and these will find a permanent resting place in the museum.

Ancient Enemies Ill in St. Louis.

J. W. VanCleave, president of the Buck Stove and Range Company of St. Louis and former president of the National Manufacturers' Association and the Citizens' Industrial Association, is critically ill with heart trouble. By a coincidence, Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, facing a prison sentence as a result of an attack on Van Cleave's company, is also ill in St. Louis. He has been unable to leave his bed because of a severe attack of neuralgia.

Young Chickens Roasted.

The eight-room residence of William Elliston, a dairyman living outside the city limits of Bedford, Ind., was destroyed by fire, causing a loss of several thousand dollars. In the upstairs rooms he had a number of incubators. Nearly one thousand young chickens had been hatched and the machines were filled with eggs of fine stock. The chicks and eggs were roasted. The fire originated from a lamp in one of the incubators.

$13,750 for Boy's Leg.

Thirteen thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars for the loss of a leg was awarded to Harold Schaffler, the 13-year-old son of a policeman, by the appellate division of the Supreme Court in New York City affirming a decision of the lower court against the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company. It is the largest verdict ever upheld there for such an injury.

Strangled by His Own Machine.

An oil producer was strangled to death by the machinery on his "lease" near Hartford City, Ind. Winfield S. Fowler, who came prospecting to the Indiana oil field from Virginia two years ago, was standing alone near his pump. He wore a long "overall" coat, buttoned tightly at the throat. A whirling shaft caught the tail of the coat, ripped it up the back to the neck band and garrotted him.

Mary Harriman to Wed Sculptor?

Mrs. Mary Averell Harriman, widow of the late E. H. Harriman, of New York City, declined to discuss a report that her daughter Mary will marry Charles Cary Rumsey, a sculptor, of Buffalo. When Mrs. Harriman was informed that news of such an engagement was current she sent back word: "I will neither confirm nor deny the rumors."

Maine to Be Raised at Last.

After twelve years the ill-fated battleship Maine is to be removed from the Havana harbor and the bodies which went down with the vessel will be interred in the National Cemetery at Arlington. A bill providing for such removal and burial which had passed the House was passed by the Senate.

Train Fatality at Glandorf.

John H. Uphaus, 78, of Glandorf, Ohio, was struck and killed by a F., P. W. & W. train while attempting to cross the tracks. He was a prominent Democrat, ex-probate judge of Putnam County and founded the Glandorf Woolen Mills in 1865. He leaves a widow and six children.

Vicious Colt Kills Farmer.

Henry Sparks, a wealthy farmer who lived six miles northwest of Silver Lake, Ind., was kicked to death by a vicious colt which he was leading to water. This was the third time that the colt had attacked him in the last two months.

Mark Twain Left Wealth to Daughter.

The will of Samuel L. Clemmens (Mark Twain) was filed for probate at Redding, Conn., and leaves the entire estate to the surviving daughter, wife of Ossip Gabrilowitsch. The amount of the estate is not given.

Two Killed on Ohio Electric.

W. H. Ferguson, the motorman and another man were killed in a wreck on the Ohio Electric railway near Urbana, Ohio. Nine other persons were hurt.

FARMERS HEAR TAFT IN ST. LOUIS MEETING

PREVIOUS DAY IN CINCINNATI

Statue of Theodore Thomas Is Unveiled in Hall During Great Musical Festival.

President Taft arrived in St. Louis the other day and was met by the reception committee of the Business Men's League, Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson and Governor H. S. Hadley. The presidential party was taken to the St. Louis Club as the guest of the Commercial Club at breakfast. The President addressed the farmers' convention at 11 o'clock. After a drive through the business section of the city the President was the guest at a luncheon given by the Business Men's League at the Southern Hotel. From the luncheon President Taft was driven to the National League baseball park, where he witnessed the opening innings of the Cincinnati and St. Louis clubs' game. From there he was driven to the American League park, where the Cleveland and St. Louis clubs played.

After the ball games President Taft motored through the residence section and was taken to a dinner of the Traffic Club. When he had finished speaking there he was taken to his train, which was scheduled to start for Washington at 1::30 the next morning. Besides President Taft, eighteen speakers were on the day's program of the National Farmers' Union rally.

In Cincinnati the previous day President Taft had appeared at the opening of the Cincinnati's annual May music festival as dedicator of an heroic statue of Theodore Thomas, first conductor of the festivals and until his death head of the Chicago orchestra. A fanfare of trumpets ushered the President upon the stage after Handel's "Judas Maccabeus" had been sung. A chorus of 800, supported by the immense organ and the full Thomas orchestra from Chicago, sang "O Liberty, Thou Choicest Treasure, Seat of Virtue, Source of Pleasure," and was augmented by 300 boys' voices when the "See the Conquering Hero Comes" chorus was reached. Mrs. Theodore Thomas and her two sons occupied a box at the concert and heard the President's eulogy of Mr. Thomas. The statue of the musician, who conducted the festivals from 1873 to 1904, had been placed in the corridor of the building. The draperies were removed at the close of the President's speech.

PLAN TO RAISE FREIGHT RATES.

Freight tariffs showing considerable increases over the present rates from western territory to the Atlantic seaboard will be filed with the Interstate Commission, to become effective June 1. This is the first step taken by the railroads which appears to indicate a purpose generally to increase freight rates throughout the country in order to enable them to meet their increased operating expenses.

Already tariffs have been filed for western roads increasing the rate for the transportation of wool from Minneapolis and St. Paul to New York and other Atlantic seaboard points. The present rate on wool from Minneapolis to New York is 54 cents per hundred pounds. Under the provisions of the tariff the rate will be 64 cents a hundred pounds, an increase of nearly 20 per cent. The rate to Boston will be proportionately higher. An increase also has been made in the freight rate on live hogs between Minneapolis and St. Paul and Chicago of 2½ cents a hundred pounds. This is an increase of about 12 per cent over the present rate. The tariffs already filed with the commissioners are for all the roads in Western Freight Association territory and the increase will become effective simultaneously on all of them.

WESTON SETS NEW RECORD.

72-Year-Old Pedestrian Finishes Transcontinental Walk.

Edward Payson Weston's record-breaking walk across the continent is at an end. At 8:35 o'clock the other morning he set foot on Manhattan island, crossing King's bridge over the Spuytendyvil creek. Cheered by thousands of persons and followed by a constantly increasing crowd, he walked down Broadway on the last few miles of his journey to the City Hall.

The feat which Edward Payson Weston thus brought to a happy conclusion is unique in the annals of sport. The original program called for the covering of the distance from the Pacific to the Atlantic—approximately 3,480 miles—in ninety walking days. In the face of rains and storms, in defiance of heat and cold, undeterred by numerous minor accidents, and, in the last stages of the journey, trudging along in spite of a sprained ankle, the heroic old man has made it in seventy-seven days. Glorious as is this accomplishment from the point of view of sport pure and simple, it assumes the character of greatness when it is considered that Weston is 72 years old, and second, that no tempting monetary prize was held out as a reward for his feat. The transcontinental walk was made by the aged philosopher and athlete as an object lesson to the youth of America of the beneficial results to be attained through walking.

BOY FIGHTS OFF POSSE.

Youth Who Tried to Slay Girl Gives Up When Soldiers Fire Volley.

Clarence Woods, a 19-year-old clerk employed by the Title Guaranty and Trust Company of Manhattan, killed himself in a boathouse on the Hackensack River, near Rutherford, N. J., after the State militia had been called out to take him dead or alive and with a posse of armed citizens waiting for the first chance to shoot him down. Woods had barricaded himself in the boathouse after attacking 17-year-old Anna Kip with a club because of her refusal to marry him. Believing her dead, he took refuge in the boathouse. Armed with a rifle and two revolvers he shot and seriously wounded Deputy Sheriff Smith of Rutherford and repeatedly fought off all attempts by seventy armed officers and citizens to rush the boathouse. Woods apparently lost his nerve when Company M of the Third Regiment of Hackensack was rushed to the scene and fired a volley into the boathouse and killed himself rather than surrender.

PICK KERN FOR SENATE.

Indiana Democrats Choose Bryan's Running Mate in 1908 Campaign.

Opening in riotous discord and closing in enthusiastic harmony, the Indiana Democratic convention in Indianapolis adopted Gov. Marshall's proposition that it should indorse to next year's Legislature a candidate for the United States Senate, and named John W. Kern, who was the party's candidate for Vice President in 1908.

The opposition made a grim fight, under the leadership of Thomas Taggart, former chairman of the Democratic National Committee and himself a candidate for the nomination for Senator, but in defeat it joined heartily with the element headed by Gov. Marshall and John E. Lamb of Terre Haute, vice chairman of the National Committee, and another aspirant for the Senatorship, in a shouted acclamation of Kern as the party's candidate.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

Macalester College is beneficiary to the extent of $2,500 by the will of the late Amanda H. Moss of St. Paul.

Courses in agriculture and domestic science will be given in the summer school of the University of Wisconsin this year for the first time.

Jesse H. Ames, of Shiocton, who graduated from the University of Wisconsin in 1907, is now professor of history in the River Falls Normal.

The corner-stone of Carnegie Science hall at Macalester College was laid recently, Prof. D. N. Kingery officiating. An extended program was given.

Prof. Moses Cobb Stevens, of Lafayette, Ind., aged 84, the oldest member of Purdue University faculty, and one of the best known educators and mathematicians in the Middle West, died recently at Tallapoosa, Ga.

One of the most highly prized scholarship honors at Columbia University has been awarded this year to a negro student. George W. Scott, 1911, a Southern negro, is the winner of one of the two Curtis medals for oratory.

FRIENDS OF MISSIONS IN GREAT GATHERING

Notable Men of Nation and World Attend Convention in Chicago.

AN EVENT OF HIGHEST IMPORT

Every Protestant Church Is Represented in Step Toward Christian Unity.

Representing every Protestant denomination in the United States, 3,500 business men, foreign missionaries and men of national and world-wide note gathered in Chicago for the men's national missionary congress, one of the greatest religious events of recent years. It was the climax of the national campaign of the laymen's missionary movement, in which conventions have been held in seventy-five cities.

The event which opened at 3 p. m. Tuesday in the Auditorium was the first gathering in the history of the country of representatives of all the Protestant churches. It is regarded as one of the greatest steps ever taken toward church unity. The accredited delegates were from every State in the Union except Nevada. They discussed America's religious responsibility to the rest of the world and were to adopt a missionary policy for the entire country.

The needs of the heathen were discussed by such men as Lord William Cecil, brother of the Earl of Salisbury; Prince T. H. Yun, of Korea, and the leaders among foreign missionaries. In attendance were former Vice President Fairbanks, Governor Hadley of Missouri, former Governor Folk of that State, former Governor Hanly of Indiana and many United States Senators.

One of the achievements planned, as recommended by the local co-operating committee, is to increase the offerings of the churches in Chicago to foreign missions from $160,000, the amount given last year, to a quarter million dollars.

America's religious responsibility to the Orient was the subject at Sunday's session of the Chicago convention in Orchestra Hall. Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, a missionary to China, declared that the awakening of the Orient to the influence of Western civilization and the consequent inrush of American vice and morals placed the responsibility for China's moral future upon the American people. Missionary W. N. Blair declared that 1,000,000 souls was the goal set for the results this year in the present revival in Korea. Attorney Mornay Williams, chairman of the New York State Board of Charities and Correction, declared that America, with all her money and power, must be judged for the outcome in China and Korea.

Sunday evening fifty of the delegates to the national congress preached in churches in Chicago and the vicinity. Rear Admiral Proctor, U. S. N., retired, addressed a large audience in the Christ Episcopal Church on the needs of foreign missions.

Kills Self as a Baby Crows.

After playing with her baby, rolling from side to side of the bed, Mrs. Ida May Crockett, of Cincinnati, suddenly reached under a pillow, seized a revolver and shot herself in the head. While the child was still laughing, the mother rolled to the floor and expired. She had been a victim of melancholia.

Accuse Two of Poisoning Bride.

Louis W. Patterton and Mrs. Emma A. Allen, his foster-mother, were arrested in Arkansas City, Kan., on a warrant charging them with having caused the death by poison of Mrs. Frances Kimmel-Patterton, wife of G. W. Patterton, a bride of a few months, who died suddenly last January.

Big Four's Head to Retire.

At the conclusion of the next meeting of the board of directors of the Big Four Railroad M. E. Ingalls will have ceased to be chairman of the board and the executive head of the road. Mr. Ingalls said he had been in ill health for some time and that it was for that reason alone that he was to resign.

General Miles Is Injured.

General Nelson A. Miles, U. S. A., retired, was thrown from a new horse he was riding in Potomac Park, Washington. One rib was broken, he received a slight scalp wound, and was bruised somewhat on the shoulder and side. It is not thought that he suffered any internal injuries or that the scalp wound will prove serious.

Refuses Salary of $25,000.

Archibald S. White, of New York City, president of the Columbia Gas and Electric Company of Cincinnati, has just refused a salary of $25,000 voted him by the board of directors of that organization. "I want a just dividend to be paid the stockholders, before anything else," said Mr. White.

Creel Is Given New Post.

Enrique C. Creel, governor of the State of Chihuahua and formerly Mexican ambassador to the United States, gave out a statement in which he says he has been appointed to the office secretary of foreign relations, and WEATHER COSTS $500,000,000.

Warmest April Day in Eleven Years and Chilliest in 30.

One recent day was the warmest April day in eleven years. The thermometer said 84 degrees. Friday, April 22, was the coldest April day in thirty years. Temperature 26 degrees. The range between the two days was 58 degrees.

This conflict of the gods of heat and cold, and the resultant extremes, will cost America a billion dollars in 1910. Oats, cotton, corn, fruit trees, vegetables, wheat and other crops were damaged in a sum estimated at $500,000,000. And reports received from all over the Middle West and South indicated that the extremely hot and dry weather will add much to the damage.

Warm rains, which are not forthcoming are needed everywhere. Wheat and corn in Illinois are deteriorating, like in Missouri. The situation in Kansas and Nebraska is pictured as worse than ever, being aggravated by the extremely dry weather. It is estimated that 3,000,000 acres of spring wheat have been plowed up in four States and other grains seeded. Twenty per cent of the South's cotton crop will be replanted or abandoned entirely.

ROOSEVELT DAM FINISHED.

Project in Arizona Cost National Government $8,640,000.

The Roosevelt dam, the great engineering work in connection with the Salt river irrigation project in Arizona, is finished and the United States has closed down its cement plant at Roosevelt. The government entered into the manufacture of cement for the Roosevelt dam nearly five years ago, because of its inability to obtain cement at reasonable prices, owing to the inaccessibility of the dam site and its remoteness from transportation. The engineers of the reclamation service state that the mill has saved the government more than $650,000.

The reservoir created by the dam is the largest artificial body of water in the world. Its capacity is 61,000,000,000 cubic feet, and if its water were spread over Delaware it would cover the entire surface of the state a foot in depth. The project when completed will cost $8,640,000. It will irrigate 240,000 acres of land and it is estimated that the crops of a single season will return enough to repay the entire investment of the government.

Comet Drives Man Insane.

Fred Bowers, of Orrville, Ohio, has become insane by brooding over Halley's comet. Bowers insists that the earth is to be destroyed by fire on May 17, when the tail of the comet will hit it. He was arrested on an insanity charge when he refused to pay for groceries, saying that the early ending of the world made it needless to pay money.

Buys Twenty-one Grain Elevators.

The Shellabarger Mill and Elevator Company of Salina, Kan., announced the purchase of twenty-one elevators from the Peavy Grain and Elevator Company of Minneapolis and the Midland Company of Kansas. The latter concern is a branch of the Peavy Company. This gives the Shellabarger Company thirty-four elevators in Kansas.

Burglars Dynamite Safe.

Burglars looted the postoffice in Middleville, Mich., blowing the safe with nitroglycerin and securing about $100. In their haste they overlooked $500 that was within easy reach. The interior of the building was wrecked, the door of the safe being blown across the room and every window broken.

Knox, Jr., and Bride Forgiven.

The surrender of the Secretary of State to his young son, Philander C. Knox, Jr., has been made complete in the reception of the youthful lover and the "college widow" bride in the parental mansion on K street, N. W., Washington, where they were house guests for the week end.

FROM FOREIGN LANDS

Tom L. Johnson, former mayor of Cleveland, Ohio, is now in London. He is visiting Europe with the hope of improving his health, which has recently been poor.

The Kaiser's cousin, Prince Friederick Heinrich, of Prussia, has embraced Roman Catholicism, has ceded his entire fortune to the Roman Catholic church, and has entered a monastery as a monk.

The Argentine consul, A. Geiger, was killed in Munich in an automobile accident. His wife, who accompanied him, and also the Paraguayan consul, W. Korte, and the driver were severely injured. The automobile dashed into a tree at full speed.

King Albert has decided to give $200,000 for a campaign against sleeping sickness, $100,000 to build hospitals in the Belgian Congo, $100,000 for a pension fund for Congo civil servants and $10,000 for a fund for the assistance of their families.

Advices received at Liverpool recently state that the fighting between the natives and Liberian troops at Cape Palms, Liberia, continues, and is growing more serious. The Rev. Mr. Speare, a native pastor at the mission in Cape Palmas, has been shot and killed, and the lives of the white residents are said to be in danger.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Chicago trade says:

"Seasonable weather stimulates activity, but distributive branches recover slowly from the recent setback, and the curtailment in business generally is reflected by reduced payments through the banks and increased trading defaults. Allowing for exaggerated estimates it is clear that the late bad weather has been hurtful to various interests, but most indications encourage large hopes of good prospects in agriculture, although grain growers are confronted with declining prices.

"The industrial position as a whole exhibits sustained strength in both production and new demands despite efforts of pig iron operators to lessen outputs. Transportation returns testify to enormous movements of heavy freight, and the aggregate remains good in general merchandise and raw material for factory use.

"Packing operations are still limited by a poor supply of raw material, and advance estimates of provision stocks in store indicate little change over a month ago.

"In general merchandise dealings a fair business is apparent in dry goods, clothing, millinery, silks, footwear and food products, notwithstanding a smaller attendance of outside buyers.

"Bank clearings, $267,301,374, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1909 by 6.8 per cent and compare with $235,642,956 in 1908. Failures reported in the Chicago district number twenty-eight, against fifteen last week, twenty-three in 1909 and thirty-nine in 1908. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number eight, as against four last week, seven in 1909 and nine in 1908."

NEW YORK.

Cold weather, with snow West and South, has checked retail trade and dulled reorder business in spring goods, while the reports of crop damage resulting from the return of winter have tended to discourage full business, pending clearer views of the ultimate crop outcome. Taken as a whole, the reports from jobbing and wholesale trade lines and industries point to a slowing down rather than a quickening of demand, and the downward tendency of many commodities does not seem to have brought out much new business.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with April 28 were 189, as against 193 last week, 268 in the like week of 1909, 282 in 1908, 163 in 1907 and 139 in 1906. Business failures for the week in Canada numbered twenty-one, which compare with fifteen last week and twenty-one in the corresponding week of 1909.—Bradstreet's.

None the less, I did press him, inch by inch, driving him at each new clash of the steel a little deeper into the gloom that crowded close upon the narrow circle of candle-light. He saw my object—to push him to unfamiliar ground where he might trip and stumble in the darkness—and he strove furiously to defeat it. Yet he had no choice, and presently I had him among the empty wine-butts, foiling and parrying for his life.

Here the end came quickly. Being entangled among the broached butts he had no room to play skillfully. So presently it chanced that he caught his point in the chine of a cask and his blade snapped short at the hilt. He snatched up the broken blade to fling and stick it javelin-wise in my shoulder; and then I saw the dull gleam of the candle-light on the barrel of a pistol.

Had he aimed the pistol at me, I trust I should still have given him his gentleman's chance. But when I saw him level the weapon at my dear lady * * * they came in one and the same heartbeat; the sword-thrust that found his life and took it; the crash of the pistol-shot echoing like a clap of thunder in the close vault, and pitchy darkness to draw its curtain over all.

I know now how I reached her, pulling the broken sword-blade from my shoulder as I ran; nor can I tell you how an upgushing spring of thankfulness choked me when I found her unharmed by the bullet which had snuffed the candle out.

She was in a most piteous state, now it was all over; and though I charged it all where I supposed it should belong—to the account of a natural womanly passion to cling to something in her moment of weakness—yet the blood ran quick in my veins when she suffered me to lead her out of that dismal, smoking death-pit, she clinging to me the while so close that I could feel the warmth of her and the fluttering of her dear heart beneath my hand.

She said no word, nor did I, till we were come above stairs. We found the rooms on the main floor deserted by all save the blacks, who were clearing away the debris of the feast of leave-taking. In the hall we came upon old Anthony, putting on the chain of the outer door. Here my lady drew apart from me.

"Is my Lord gone?" she asked.

"Yis, Missa. He say tell yo' he gwine tek it mighty hawd yo' no come ter gib hi mhe stirup-cup."

"And my father?"

"Gone to de lib'ry to wait fo' Massa Pergarbin; yis, Missa."

She turned away, shuddering at this mention of the factor for whose coming the master would wait long and in vain, and I heard her murmur: 'Oh, the horror of this night!" But in a moment she came back to me, and was her cool, calm self again.

"For that I am here, alive and well, I thank you, Captain Ireton. Need I say more?"

I can not tell you what was in the words to make me hot with anger. But the new wound in my shoulder was bleeding freely, and I would not let her see I was hurt; and if aught will stanch a wound, 'tis anger.

"You need not say so much," I retorted, bowing low. "You have spoken now and then of certain duties binding upon those who are knotted up, ever so loosely, in the marriage bond; I have my part in these as well as you, Mistress Margery."

She bit her lip and was upon the edge of tears. When she spoke again it was to say: "This is your own house, Captain Ireton; what will you do?"

"One puestion first, is Richard Jennifer safe?"

"He is."

"Then, by your good leave, I shall do what I came to do."

She bent her head in acquiescence.

"You will find the—the person whom you wish to see in your old room in the north gable. Shall I have Anthony light you up?"

"No; I can find the way."

My hand was on the stair rail when the cruel irony of it struck me like a blow. She had planned the loosing of the bond in the very room where we had knelt to take the good father's blessing upon it. I stepped back, stumbled, I should say, for a curious weakness had come upon me, and drew her arm in mine.

"We will go together, if you please, my lady. 'Tis only just to me that you should hear what I must say to Father Matthieu."

And so, dear heart! she bore with me to the last; and together we climbed the stair to come into the upper corridor with the room of destiny at its farther end.

We came as far as the door; I mind it perfectly, for I remember marking that the wooden bar my father had put upon it was gone, and the iron brackets as well. But whilst I was groping for the latch there came a taste of blood in my mouth, and I heard my dear lady's voice as if she were calling to me across the eternal abysses. "Monsieur John!—you are hurt!" And then, from a still remoter distance: "Oh, Father Matthieu—Dick! come quickly! He is dying!"

CHAPTER XXII.

When I awoke I was lying in bed in my old room at Appleby Hundred. The armored soldier was glowering down upon me from his frame over the chimney piece; the great blackened clothes-press loomed darkly in its corner; the show of curious china filled the shelves where my boyhood books had rested; and there was the same faint smell of lavender in the bed linen that once had minded me of my mother.

Mistress Margery was sitting where I last remembered her. She was deep in the hollow of the great chair of Indian wickerwork; and the soft grayings of the evening sky was mirrored in her eyes.

'Twas while I looked, minding not the eye-ache the effort cost, that she rose and came softly to the bedside. She said no word, but laid a cool palm on my forehead. Weak as I was the old love-madness of that other day came to thrill me at her touch, and I made as if I would take her hand and press it to my lips.

"Nay, sir," she said, with a swift return to sickroom discipline, "you must not stir; you have been sorely hurt."

"Aye," said I; "I do remember; 'twas in a duel with one Francis Falconnet. Was it not yesterday that I met him under the oaks in the wood field and got this pair of redhot pincers in my shoulder?"

She turned away, and if I ever saw a tear there was one trembling in her eyelashes.

"'Twas three full weeks ago," she said. "And it was not in the wood field—'twas in the wine cellar. Never tell me you do not remember."

"I remember well enough," I hastened to say. "But being here, and seeing you there in the great chair, carried me back to that other time, making all the interval stand as a dream. Have I been ailing?"

"You have been terribly near to death, Monsieur John; so near that Doctor Carew has twice given you over."

"No," said I; "there was no fear of that. Death would not take me as a gift, Mistress Margery; I have tried him too often."

"Hush!" she said; "'tis an ill thing to jest about. Why should you want to die?"

"Rather ask why I should choose to live. But this is beside the mark. You should have let me die, dear lady; but since you did not, we must e'en make the best of it."

She faced me with a smile that struggled with some deeper stirring of the heart; I knew not what.

"I must not let you talk of doleful things; indeed, I must not let you talk at all—'tis Doctor Carew's order."

So saying, she smoothed the counterpane and straightened my pillows; and after giving me a great spoonful of some cordial that first set a pleasant glow alight in me and afterward made me drowsy, she took post again in the hollow of the big chair and was so sitting when I fell asleep.

This day's awakening was the first of many so nearly of a piece that I lost the count of them; and sleep, deep and dreamless for the better part, stole away the hours till the memory of that inch-by-inch return to health and strength is itself like the memory of the vaguest of dreams.

CHAPTER XXIII.

By times when I awoke it was the bluff Doctor Carew bending over me to dress my wound; at other times it was Margery come to tempt me with a bowl of broth or some other kickshaw from the kitchen. Now and again I awoke to find Scipio or old Anthony standing watch at my bedside; and once—but that was after I was up and in my clothes and able to sit and drowse in the great chair—I opened my eyes to find that my company was the master of the house.

He was sitting as I had seen him s't once before, behind a lighted candle at the little table with a parchment spread out under his bony hands. He was mumbling over the written words of it when I looked, but at my stirring he gave over and sat back in his chair to cross his thin legs and match his long fingers by the ends, and wink and blink at me as though he had but now discovered that he was not alone.

"I give ye good even, Captain Ireton," he said, finally, rasping the greeting out at me as it had been a curse. "I hope ye've slept well."

I said I had, and thanked him, once for the wish, and again for his coming to see me. I know not how it was, but if there had been rancor in my former thoughts of him 'twas something abated now.

"Ye've had a nearhand escape this time, sir," he said, after a longish pause.

"One more or less of a good many since we were last met together in this room, Mr. Stair," I would say.

"That is as it may be; but my being here this second time a pensioner on your bounty is by no good will of mine, I do assure you, sir."

He sat nodding at me as if I had said a thing to be most heartily agreed to. But his spoken word belied the nods.

"The ways of Providence are inscrutable—something inscrutable, Captain Ireton. I make no doubt ye are sufficiently thankfu' for all your mercies."

"Why, as to that, there may be two ways of looking at it. As a soldier, I may justly repine at a fate which ties me here when I should be in the field."

"Well said, sir; brawly said; 'tis the part of a good soldier to be ay wanting to be in the thick o' the fight. But now that ye're a man of substance, Captain Ireton, ye will be owing other debts to our country than the one ye can pay with a hantle o' steel."

"'Our country,' did you say, Mr. Stair?" I asked, feigning a surprise which no one knowing him could feel in very truth.

"And what for no? 'Tis the birthland of some—yours, for example, and the leal land of adoption for others—your humble servant, to wit. I've taken the solemn oath of allegiance to the Congress, I'd have ye to know."

"Have you take it one more time than you have forsworn it, Mr. Stair?"

"Laugh and ye will," he said, quite placably; "ye shall never laugh the peetriotism out o' me. 'Tis little enough an old man can do, but the precious cause o' liberty will never have to ask that little twice, Captain Ireton."

Since he would ever be on the winning side, this foreshadowed good tidings, indeed. So I would ask him straight what news there was.

"Have they not told ye? 'Tis braw news," he chuckled. "Whilst ye were on your back, General Greene led Lord Cornwallis a fine dance all across the prov—the state, I mean, crooking his finger at him and saying, 'Come on, ye led-captain of a tyrant king, and when I'm ready I'll turn and rend ye.' And by the same token, that is just what he did the other day at Guilford Court House."

"A victory?" I would ask.

"Well, not precisely that, maybe; they're calling it a drawn battle. But I'm thinking 'tis Lord Cornwallis that's drawn. He's off to Wilmington, they say, and I'm fain to hope we've seen the last o' him and his reaving redcoats in these parts."

His words set me in a muse. I could never make out what he would be at, telling me all this. But he had an object, well-defined, and presently it showed its head.

"Ye're the laird o' the manor, now, Captain Ireton, with none to gainsay ye," he went on. "So I've come to give me an account o' my stewardship. I made no doubt, all along, ye'd come back to your own when ye'd had your fling wi' the Old Worldies, and so I've kept tab o' the poor bit land for ye."

"Oh, you have?" said I, being so far out-brazened as to be incapable of saying more.

"I have that—every plack and bawbee. 'Tis ten years come Michaelmas since I took over the charge o' Appleby Hundred, and I'm ready to account to ye for every season's crop—when ye'll pay down the bit steward's fee."

"Truly," said I; "you are an honest man, Mr. Stair." Then, to humor him to the top of his bent: "Haphazarding a guess, now; would this accounting leave a balance in my favor, or in yours?"

He gave me a look like that of a costermonger weighing and measuring the gullibility of his customer.

"Oh, aye; I'm no saying there mightn't be a bit siller coming to me; a few hundred pounds, more or less—sterling, man, sterling; not Scots," he added, hastily. And then, as if it were best to leave this nail as it was driven, he changed the subject abruptly. "I've brought ye that last will and testament ye signed," handing me the parchment. "No doubt you'll let it stand; but when the bairns come, ye'll want to be adding a codicil or two."

(To be continued.)

Sioux Girls All Own Farms—Children Bring 160 Acres Apiece.

In Gregory, S. D., I saw a bright-eyed, hard-muscled, clean looking young fellow from Iowa who had just returned from a honeymoon trip to Sioux Falls, with as neat a piece of red calico as you would find in a long day's journey. The girl was suspiciously close to the age limit fixed by the government, Nullard Bailey says in Everybody's, but intelligence, good humor and true womanly nature beamed from her button-bright eyes. I happened to follow this couple into a restaurant, and I took a seat near them. The girl was plainly dressed in a neat plum-colored traveling suit, and the only thing about her make-up that suggested the Indian was a pair of wide, beaded bracelets of striking color and design. The honeymoon pair talked low over the table, the girl looking proudly at her new husband while he ordered dinner, and when he laid down the bill of fare her hand stole under it and pressed tightly upon his. She blushed a little, just as a white girl would have done, when a ranchman came in, slapped her husband on the back, and congratulated them both in the crude, prairie folk way. When the meal was served, she ate with her fork. And mind you, she was a fullblooded Sioux whose people were carving up white men only a few years ago and didn't know a fork from a French horn. After they had gone out, the man who had congratulated them told me all about it.

"She's got as pretty a piece of government land as there is on White River," said he; "good, rich gumbo. She's a nice girl—been to school six or seven years, and she'll make Charley a good wife. If they have as many as three children, he'll get a whole section, counting hers, and that's going to be worth $16,000 to $20,000 in ten years, the way land's going up now."

No great wonder, is it, that so many young men of the prairies, who know pretty girls and good land when they see them, are fascinated by the black-eyed Sioux maidens?

REVIEW OF INDIANA

While standing in a doorway of his home in Terre Haute, Everett Ferrell, a dairyman, was killed by lightning.

While playing a game of baseball Roy Boyer, aged 16, living at Howell, was struck in the face by a bat that a player accidentally let go. His nose was broken and he was otherwise injured.

Mrs. Alice Landis, of Middlebury, has in her library a copy of Lindley Murray's grammar, the pioneer American text book on language, issued more than one hundred years ago, and for half a ceneury the standard in the schools of England and America. It was used by her grandfather, Isaac Heaton, an experienced teacher of many years in the days of the old seminary system of Indiana.

Although Mrs. Rosan Westbrooks, aged 78, of Jackson Township, Brown County, has several notes amounting to $700, secured by a lien on her father's home, she was taken to the County Infirmary at Nashville by Trustee Walker. Mrs. Westbrooks can not get any money on the notes and is in destitute circumstances. She has several brothers who are well-to-do, one of them being worth $40,000.

Frank Suits, a young man, totally blind, has completed breaking a fifteen acre field on a farm near Greenfield. He is the first blind man in Hancock County to undertake this kind of work. Suits used an ordinary walking breaking plow. When he supposed the plow to be near a corner he would stop the team and feel over the ground to get his bearings. Suits completed the field without any assistance.

A colt that was born blind and that has cloven hoofs, like those of a cow, is attracting attention on the farm of Arthur Jones, near Parker. The colt's head is unusualy large also, and its features differ somewhat from the normal. The colt seems to be perfectly healthy. Its mother is a fast pacing mare, and its sire is a thoroughbred with a fast record. The colt gives indication of being a pacer.

E. A. Enos, of East Connersville, has engaged in mushroom farming. He has twenty beds, each six by ten feet, all sown with the peculiar spawn from which the mushrooms spring. The little white points are bristling thickly through the soil, and a warm rain or a few warm days will bring the first harvest through in a few hours. Mr. Enos expects to gather two thousand pounds of mushrooms this spring.

James Vandusen, age ninety-eight, is dead at home of his daughter, Miss Katherine Vandusen in Richmond. He was born in New York in 1812, and with his parents went to Cincinnati, Ohio, in the early forties. During the period that steamboating was at its hight, Mr. Vandusen was in the freight department of a Cincinnati and Memphis packet line. Later he became identified with railroad work until 1880, when he was retired. Four children survive.

Residents of Lawrenceport, seven miles east of Bedford, on White river, have had the time of their lives catching fish since last week. Noticing that black suckers were shoaling, Charles B. Stewart, a young man of that place, unaided and with his naked hands, caught hundreds of them, which he afterwards sold for $50. It is estimated that over three thousand pounds of fish were taken from the river at the old dam at that place in three days, some of which weighed twelve pounds. A large number of the fish were brought to Bedford and sold in the streets.

South Bend Democrats returning from the State convention broke all section records. The Northern Indiana company's car, in which they made the trip, covered the 171 miles in four hours and fifty-two minutes. The car left the Traction Terminal station in Indianapolis at exactly 12 o'clock at night and arrived in South Bend at 4:52 in the morning. This is thirty-five minutes better than can be done by the steam roads between the two cities. An average of fifty miles an hour was maintained over the new and as yet not well ballasted track between Peru and Warsaw.

Annoyed by the howling of a cat, which persisted in mounting his back fence, George Klise, aged 45, of Onward, ten miles south of Logansport, obtained his gun, and going into the yard, fired point-blank at the cat. The animal toppled from the fence, dead, and Klise simultaneously fell. He was seen to fall by his daughter, who was looking from a window, and thinking that he had been shot, she ran to him. Examination revealed that he was dead. Coroner George D. Miller, of Logansport, was summoned, and the investigation which he conducted showed that Klise had died from heart failure. The sudden shock caused by the discharge of the gun, brought on death.

Owing to the scarcity of fish and the high price of meats Evansville commission men report that hotel and restaurant men now serve the whole frogs on their tables instead of the hind legs as heretofore.

John Milthaler, a farmer living near Portland, has a hen that took under its wings a family of small kittens. The hen resists all efforts to remove the kittens from its nest, with the same spirit that might be expected were they a brood of chicks.

Mrs. John Dakins, 27, was burned to death at Newcastle when a can of oil exploded, enveloping her clothing in flames.

Richard Dalton came near meeting death by fire while walking to his home in Bedford, when his pipe, which he thought had gone out before he dropped it into his pocket, set his clothing on fire. Dalton was badly burned before he could tear off the blazing garment.

Daniel E. Storms, former Secretary of State of Indiana, and for many years prominent in Republican politics in this state, has taken out incorporation papers for the Sandusky Auto Parts and Truck Company with a $150,000 capital at Sandusky, Ohio. Mr. Storms is a resident of Jackson, Cal.

Daniel Fry, living near Sullivan, has a freak egg almost perfect in shape and as large as a goose egg. Being curious to know what was inside, he broke it open and found an egg within an egg. The outside egg contained two yolks and the inside one. The shells of both were hard and the inside egg was a little larger than a robin's egg.

Because his father gave him a flogging with a piece of a rail, Everett Roberts, of Bright Light, on the Wabash river, ran into the house and obtaining a shotgun returned wounding him. The boy left home at once and is still at large. The son is said to have refused to assist in driving hogs, whereupon his father seized a club and administered punishment.

Mrs. Nellie W. Lowe, matron of the Y. M. C. A. of Omaha, Neb., will be the successor of Mrs. Martha E. Walker as matron of the Y. M. C. A. of South Bend. Mrs. Walker tendered her resignation at the last meeting of the directors. She will leave July 2 for Europe, as chaperon of a party of young women on a one-year tour. Mrs. Lowe is one of the best-known Y. M. C. A. matrons in the country, and with Mrs. Walker, ranks high in Y. M. C. A. circles.

Marshall Gorrell, a farmer living north of Danville, shot and killed a large bald eagle on his farm, bringing down his prey with an old-fashioned "Long Tom" rifle. The eagle was the largest ever killed in Hendricks county, measuring over seven feet from tip to tip tnd three feet from tail to beak. When killed it was carrying off one of Mr. Gorrell's young Poland China pigs, and at the present price of pork the farmer did not think he could stand for the loss.

"Comet eggs" are reported from many henneries. A photograph of one laid in Terre Haute shows it formed like a comet with a tail. It measured four inches in length. Not all "comet eggs" are shaped like comets, but the many rare forms are attributed by the superstitious to the comet. One was found last wek at the home of M. M. Shumaker in Terre Haute, which was shaped like a dumb-bell, with the yellow in one bell and the white in the other and the connecting bar solid shell.

While looking over his ground a few days ago, Lewis Hobson, a farmer living west of Decker, found a quail's nest which in addition to having eleven quail eggs, also contained six hen eggs. The nest is some distance from the house, and it was a surprise to find hen eggs that far away. Mr. Hobson says the hen must have strayed away and after growing tired of being alone, returned to the house, leaving a nest with six eggs, and that some quail, finding the nest already made, took possession of it and the eggs.

Married in their youth, divorced twenty-seven years ago, each taking another mate a short time afterward, only to go back to each other and be secretly married again in South Bend is the succession of marital experiences of Henry Ranstead, aged 81, a retired farmer, of Terre Coupee, St. Joseph County, and Mrs. Jane Frame, aged 77, of the same place. Mr. and Mrs. Ranstead, during their first marriage, before clouds gathered to obscure their happiness, had three children, one son and two daughters. Walton, the son, is now 58 years old, and lives on the old homestead.

Robert Squires, who recently moved from Anderson to a farm adjoining Marion, relates a remarkable story of egg incubation. A week before Mr. Squires was ready to move he set a black Minorka hen on fifteen eggs. Not desiring to leave the hen behind, he took her with the box in which she was setting and boarding an interurban car brought hen, eggs and all a distance of thirty-five miles by traction car and then changed to a Marion street car to get to his home. The hen remained on the nest with her changed surroundings and a few days ago every one of the fifteen eggs hatched a chick.

James Cherry and Jesse McLain, farmers near Shelbyville, narrowly escaped injury when a dynamite stick they were thawing exploded. The accident occurred while the men were preparing to blast stumps.

Fire of mysterious origin in broad daylight destroyed the large barn on the farm of George Sheller, six miles east of Muncie, resulting in a loss of $1,500. Two horses, valued at $500, and a number of other animals were cremated.

DOCTOR ADVISED OPERATION

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Galena, Kans.—"A year ago last March I fell, and a few days after there was soreness in my right side. In a short time a bunch came and it bothered me so much at night I could not sleep. It kept growing larger and by fall it was as large as a hen's egg. I could not go to bed without a hot water bottle applied to that side. I had one of the best doctors in Kansas and he told my husband that I would have to be operated on as it was something like a tumor caused by a rupture. I wrote to you for advice and you told me not to get discouraged but to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did take it and soon the lump in my side broke and passed away."—Mrs. R. R. HUEY, 713 Mineral Ave., Galena, Kans.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has proved to be the most successful remedy for curing the worst forms of female ills, including displacements, inflammation, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, and nervous prostration. It costs but a trifle to try it, and the result has been worth millions to many suffering women.

If you want special advice write forit to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass. It is free and always helpful.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Dictionaries Up to Date.

"Talk about keeping up with the times," said the professor, "the makers of dictionaries have to be up to the very minute. I don't believe a day passes without some new word being introduced into our language. For most of them the originators of slang—delightfully original fellows, aren't they?—and the men of science are responsible. I was running over the other day a list of new words assembled for the latest dictionary, and I declare I was amazed at the number that were, in truth, new to me. Did you know, for example, that the pomato is the name given to the cross between the tomato and the potato, that a grasshopper destroyer is called a hopperdozer, and that the scientific term for hookworm is uncinariasis? Speaking of slang, I notice that place has been found in the dictionary for rubberneck, stunt, tank up and fan—of course," the professer added somewhat hurriedly, "I mean a baseball fan. And there are hundreds and hundreds more."

Useless Study.

Mr. Fond Father reproved his little son for having only 75 per cent in arithmetic. "Mathematics, my boy," he said, "is a very useful study, and you must try to do better."

"I thought that was only useful for sailors," said the boy.

"Why for sailors?"

"Well, people on land have adding machines, don't they?"—New York Tribune.

A QUESTION ANSWERED.

A Few Reasons Why Doctors Are Able to Make a Living.

"How does that doctor make a living? I can't understand how he has a single patient." How many times that remark is made in the course of a year about how many physicians! Dr. Abraham Jacobi, of New York, veteran of the medical profession, answers the question thus:

"How do we doctors succeed in gaining and holding the confidence of our patients? We are not equal in learning, skill, or character, in looks, or habits; and still we all make a living. The best explanation is the fact that the public, our patients, are as different as we are. In our ranks we have the most astounding, and the queerest varieties of physical, moral and intellectual features. Still, we all 'get somewhere.' A man with a minimum of knowledge which he uses more or less conscientiously, or the reverse, may be successful in practice.

"Our ranks are filled with the young and the old. Some are good looking, or ugly, or tall, or short. Some are dancers, sports, golfers, horsemen, know bridge and are the premiere theater visitors. Some talk philosophy, music, gossip with or without quotations. Others frequent funerals and churches, and have the specialty of being called out. Some are serious, or boisterous or jovial; bearded, clean-shaven, perfumed with cologne—not frequently—or tobacco, which is frequent. Some have finger nails manicured, some with mourning rings. Some talk in plain language, some are refined. Most have correct habits. I have known those, however, who owed large family practices to their spirituous capacities; you would judge how bright they would be if only sober!

"Some succeed because they are optimistic; others because they are pessimistic in diagnosis and prognosis. There are those who become popular because they have their waiting room crowded and their telephone in an uproar, not to speak of those who fill their place with shiny and noisy tools and call themselves specialists. Some are loud and imperious; some whisper with obsequious servility.

"Some obtain practice because they have become married; there are those who rely on their bachelorship. I know one at least who told me smilingly that his large practice among rich people and mothers of families was due to his 'being in the market.'

"As there are many roads that lead to Rome, so there are many modes, or methods, or characteristics, or peculiarities that gain favor in the eyes of the public."

THE WORLD'S RAILWAYS.

America Leads in the Mileage by a Big Margin.

"America leads the whole world by a big margin in the building of railways," said Henry S. Thomas, of New York city, a railway constructor, recently. "Out of a total of nearly 500,000 miles of railway in the world, nearly half are on the North American continent. Europe has nearly 200,000 miles, while Africa has only about 19,000. The smallest mileage is in Australasia, which has approximately 17,000 miles of tracks. South America possesses nearly 35,000 miles.

"In South America will be the greatest development of the future in the railroad building business. Immense stretches of country remain in that vast continent, which need only the 'iron horse' to develop them. This is especially so in Brazil and Argentina. Mexico yet remains to be covered with a complete network of steel rails like the United States possesses.

'Statistics for the last year show that there has been extraordinary activity in building railways in nearly every country on the globe, the largest gain being, as usual, in North America."

ATCHISON GLOBE SIGHTS.

To act sassy and look vicious is a great help in a fight.

An ugly woman can become uglier than anything else on earth.

Horses have quit scaring at automobiles, but dogs still chase them.

Most of the new stories you hear are simply old ones with variations.

Form good habits, and you will find them as hard to break as bad habits.

No man believes that he makes any extra trouble around the house when he is sick.

We have always imagined that we would as soon keep a cow in the house as a parrot.

A woman will take about the same chances with heartache that a man will with headache.

All the old fashioned boys have been located, except the one who used to spit on new shoes.

There is one good thing about girl clerks in dry goods stores: they do not smoke while on duty.

Nothing makes a woman quite so indignant as to hear of a wife who supports her husband.

An amateur singer's great ambition is to sing so pathetically that people in the audience will cry.

After a man has been sick a week, his wife looks worse than he does, from taking care of him.

If men were as violent in their actions as in their thoughts, the world would soon be depopulated.

And it would help some if men would only wait to be led into temptation instead of hunting it up.

There is more evil thinking than evil doing; everybody watches everybody else, and not much is found out.

We once knew a man who was very impudent. But soon after his marriage, he became the meekest man in town.

People who have no religious belief are so much like some church members that they can exchange pulpits with them.

If men had right good sense, they could see that seven-tenths of the "schemes" offered to them are absolutely foolish.

FROM AN ELECTRICIAN'S NOTE-BOOK.

An electric lawn mower has been perfected.

The last cable road in Brooklyn will soon be electrified.

Electric light can be adapted to suit any imaginable architectural scheme without entailing the slightest fire risk.

Electric motors can be applied to all commercial machines and appliances where power is needed in any desired quantity and at any desired speed.

The adaptability of electrical energy is only limited by human imagination to devise new ways to put it to work. New methods of applying it are invented every day.

The General Electric Company has perfected the new tungsten lamps for 200 and 250 volt circuits. This was formerly thought to be too high a voltage for the new lamps.

Germany used 300,000 horse power developed from water; France, 650,000; Italy, 464,000; Switzerland, 380,000. Over 5,250,000 horse power from water is now developed in the United States.

The city of Naples will soon be lighted by electricity, secured from water power. At Capo-Volturno 16,000 horse power will be generated and carried at 45,000 volts to the city, fifty-six miles away.

During the last year the General Electric Company has produced a new gas-electric car for short line railroad work. The new car is driven by electric motors from current supplied by a gas engine driven generator located in the forward part of the car. This single car takes the place of an entire steam train including engine, tender, baggage and passenger coach.

THE CONTADINO IN ITALY.

His Most Eventful Hours Are Spent at the Market Place.

The typical mountain peasant of Italy, the contadino, goes to market once a week, usually on Monday, during the late spring, summer and fall months. In the winter he is snowbound for weeks at a time. At the market place are spent the most eventful hours of his life. In an open space reserved for this purpose those having fruits, vegetables, poultry, butter, cheese and eggs for sale gather with their baskets in hand. Early in the morning they arrive sometimes on foot and sometimes on horse or burros. Very often one of the women of the family will come, hatless, but with a yellow or green scarf thrown over her shoulders and bearing, in addition to the ordinary produce, a basket of wild strawberries or raspberries for sale.

In Italy there is not a settlement, no matter how small, that does not contain a principal piazza, or open square. On market days this piazza is filled with rough tables covered with cloth. Dry goods, shoes, hats, cooking utensils, trinkets and in fact almost every imaginable necessity or luxury of the contadino are sold at these tables. Here the contadino does his bargaining. To a peasant there would be no pleasure in buying an article at a fixed price. He would not be happy if he could not boast to his friends of the sharp bargains he had made. Even in cities like Florence, many of the shopkeepers have two establishments, one with fixed prices for the foreign custom and that of Italians of the better classes, and another where the contadino may go and argue for half an hour over 3 cents.

At times, a large number of cattle are brought to be sold on market days. The cows or oxen are made to show their paces like race horses and are examined minutely by the prospective purchasers. If sellers and buyers, after much talk, finally agree upon a price, they make a contract by shaking hands, all four at the same time. Sometimes three parties to a bargain may be agreed and one not; he thereupon refuses to shake hands. The landlord always enters into these business matters to see that they are arranged equally. The contadino is the employe of the owner of the land surrounding his cottage, and pays no rent. He receives half of the proceeds from the grain he raises for the landlord, for the grapes, sheep and goats, and for the butter and cheese he makes.

The Submarine.

John W. Titcomb, of the United States bureau of fisheries, said recently of a fishing excursion:

"I once made a fishing excursion to a stream that flowed behind a lunatic asylum. As I sat and smoked on the bank, watching my cork, I noticed a strange object floating down towards me with the current. I saw that it was a man. He had all his clothes on, and he was swimming in the strangest way. I verily believe every part of him was submerged but one nostril.

"'Hi!' I shouted, 'what are you doing there?'

"He lifted his head from beneath the surface, and then, before drawing it under again, he snapped:

"'Sh—sh! Don't interfere! I'm a submarine!'"

A touch of rheumatism, or a twinge of neuralgia, whatever the trouble is, Chamberlain's Liniment drives away the pain at once and cures the complaint quickly. First application gives relief. Sold by H. L. Dunkle, St. Joe; and W. L. Wernert, Spencerville.

As a result of the high water on the Warren Silberg farm, last Saturday a number of our townsmen had great sport in landing about 29 large carp, the smallest of which weighed about 5 pounds. There seemed to be a small bayou, from which a small channel led to the river. When the water came up the fish came up and as soon as it began to lower men placed a small gate in the channel and kept them from escaping.

The Mrs. Maud and Anna Henderson most delightfully surprised their mother, Mrs. J. W. Henderson, at her home in Spencerville, on the evening of May 7, by inviting forty-five of her friends, who came to offer their congratulations on her natal anniversary. The evening was very pleasantly spent, an elegant luncheon was served to all present and a most enjoyable time for all was the result of the surprise. Mrs. Henderson wishes to thank all her friends for the many beautiful cards which she received.

A Minister's Constipation

Rev. Kemp Tells of His Digestive Troubles and How He Overcame Them—You Can Do So Free.

The lack of exercise in a minister's life makes him very prone to constipation—but for that matter, most everybody is constipated now and then. It is the national disorder. Many already know that a sure way to cure constipation and other stomach, liver and bowel troubles is with Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which church people have been buying for twenty years. Rev. E. A. Kemp, of Rising Sun, Ind., Secretary of the Indiana Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, says in part:

Dr. W. B. Caldwell
Look for this picture on the package

"For years I have been a victim of constipation but I have never found anything to equal Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. I also had indigestion and heart trouble. I can certainly recommend it."

It can be bought of any druggist at 50 cents or $1 a bottle. If there is anything about your case that you don't understand, write to the doctor. If you have never used this remedy and would like to try it, send your address and a free sample bottle will be forwarded to your home. Address Dr. W. B. Aguinaldo To-day.

Aguinaldo is living the life of a country gentleman in a small estate just outside of Cavite. He takes no part whatever in the politics of his country. From the moment of his capture Aguinaldo took the position that it would be improper for him to express any opinion whatsoever regarding the rule of his country by Americans. So far as is known he has not commented in any way, either favorably or adversely, upon the administration of the white man.

"For a couple of years," said Manuel L. Quezon, the Philippine commissioner to Congress, according to a Washington correspondent of the Brooklyn Eagle, "I lived with Aguinaldo in his home. We were on the most intimate terms. Remarkable as it may seem, I have not heard him make any comment whatever about the change in the government of the islands. No one has been able to trap him into any kind of an admission. If he is asked whether he thinks conditions in the island have improved under the administration of the Americans he will reply: 'I am very busy with my farming.'

"Whether he approves or condemns the new order of things nobody knows. Still he seems to be contented. Once or twice a year he is invited to dine with the governor-general. He always accepts these invitations and seems to enjoy himself. He maintains an air of dignity and composure at all times and has the respect of every one."

CERTAINTIES IN RELIGION.

By Henry F. Cope.

"If any man will do his will he shall know the doctrine."—John vii., 17.

Are there any certainties in religion? Is it not all either mere speculation or a matter of feeling? Is anything susceptible of absolute proof? Some answer that the religious life does not need to concern itself with certainties in anything like the scientific sense, while others say that any kind of certainty is impossible in that which has to do with things so intangible as the life of faith.

Yet neither scenticism on one side nor blind indifference to facts on the other will keep man from keenly desiring to be sure of the things which seem to him to constitute his religious life. Who can blame the passion found in all for some glimpse of the facts of life beyond, and what more natural than that we should want to know whether all the time and thought invested in religion are wasted, spent on a delusion or not?

Then come the real questions of life: What makes right? What determines ultimately the higher values in existence? What solution is there to this mystery of existence, to the problem of pain, to the shadow of death? Why does iniquity seem to prosper? What becomes of eternal justice under our modern conditions of living.

To many it seems as if there is no longer anything clearly, definitely settled. Once we were quite sure of the statements of the creeds and the church spoke with a voice of authority. Now the plain fact is that for many the old compulsions and the old imperatives have lost their authority. What is there to take their place?

The fear of hell persuades few, if any, to-day; the hope of heaven seems too indefinite, too uncertain to act as a motive, even if the securing of goodness by the promise of a reward could be counted a commendable moral process. Now when a man holds in the balance questions of conduct, motives of fear and reward being absent, what is there to govern his decision?

It is not necessary to deny the validity of old beliefs in order to assert the imperative of newer conceptions. Many things we doubt may be just as true as those of which we are most certain. The difficulty is we are not convinced of them and we dare not profess to believe where we remain unconvinced.

Nevertheless certainties are ours; they have an authority far greater than those of past days; they speak, not from without, but from within. Childhood listens for the word from the skies or the message graven on stone, the man hears the voice within and obeys the inner witness. All the external phenomena of religion might be discredited, but the fact of religion in the heart of man would remain.

We are sure of ourselves as moral beings, as those who are capable of self-examination, of choice between acts, of determination and responsibility. More, we know ourselves as born for higher things. The great prophets of the race speak first in our own breasts. Our aspirations are due not so much to invitations from above as to propulsions from within. The evidence for any revelation is that our hearts answer to it.

Even though all scriptures and records should be blotted out, all external authority vanish, all the history of religion be lost to us, yet there would remain the external trend of our lives, the longing for fuller, better life, and the passion for perfection; there would remain the sense of harmony with good and the doubt as to evil, while the record of what we are reveals the power that has brought us from what we were.

The essential things are written where they cannot be erased save by our neglect or denial of them, that it is better being good than bad, that we know the good from the evil, that life was made to climb from level to level, that love is fairer than hate, that self-seeking is the denial of the best we know.

The uncertainties are in the past, matters of yesterday's records; the certainties are for the life of to-day. Let a man answer the best in himself with affirmative action, let him give freedom to his own soul and he shall know of the truth. Do the right and the right will be increasing clear. Look within for your certainties. Debate not with the voice that bids you rise.

LIFE OF POWER.

By Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D. D.

There is something morally sublime about a heroic decision, born of obedience to the will of God and sacrifice of self as well. Perhaps the noblest thing any man ever does is to see the plan of God in his life and for his life, and then patiently and persistently do it; as Constantine said when he marked out the limits of the Eastern metropolis, "I am following One who is leading me." Such a man alone, can, like Roebling when he looked on the finished East River Bridge, say, "It's like the plan." The end of life is not gratification, even of the highest sort, not even salvation, not yet sanctification, but service. That is a shallow notion that makes our three-score years and ten a mere probation of grace, and saving our own souls its supreme issue and end.

A true man wants to move the world if he can. He is not satisfied with taking a stone out of the way if he can lift the earth itself to a loftier level. Ambition becomes aspiration and inspiration when it is attuned to a heavenly key. The only adequate purpose is an eternal one. Nothing temporal is big enough. The mist may invest the mountain with a robe of beauty, but it is evanescent; and the petrified shaft of eternity will continue to kiss the azure firmament when centuries of cloud and mist have come and gone. He is utterly unwise who makes time the measure of eternity; the wise man makes eternity the measure and mold of time. The man who is to move the world must have his standing place in the invisible. He can only lift it as he can rest his lever on a fulcrum, without it; and that fulcrum is faith in the unseen God, and that lever is prayer which links man with God.

The one grand secret therefore is to be in the will of God. That is the secret place of the Most High, where one dwells under the shadow of the Almighty, not only security but success assured. From that hiding place he cannot only escape the snares of the fowler and the arrows of the pestilence, but tread upon the lion and adder and trample under foot the young lion and the dragon. Thus Christ Himself turned the culprit's cross into the conqueror's crown. Here is the secret of service to men. The man who has clear celestial visions is the man to bless humanity on the terrestrial plane.

Physicial laws are inexorable and forgive no transgressors. As Tennyson said: "They who will not be ruled by the rudder, will, in the end, be ruled by the rock." And not by quantity but by quality all work is to be judged. Benjamin West said to Morse, "Finish one picture and you are a painter." As to the other temptation, compromise, never has there been more danger of it than now. There is a spirit of union and federation abroad in Church as well as State, and the risk is of sweeping away landmarks of doctrine and practice in the passion for organic and superficial unity. Charity is an angel while she the handmaid of truth, but when she gives countenance to error becomes a demon. Even amiability loses its virtue when it loses its grit and grip, and ceases to have power of protest and resistance.

HYMNS AND THEIR AUTHORS

THE BETTER LIFE.

By William Augustus Muhlenberg.

[The Rev. William Augustus Muhlenberg (Philadelphia, Sept. 16, 1796—New York, April 8, 1877), a noted Episcopalian minister, especially distinguished for his work in founding St. Luke's hospital in New York, is the author of several hymns. While this hymn usually is classified as suitable for occasions of mourning, its thought has made it popular as a song of aspiration at all times. Until recently it was not found in any hymnal; but it now is coming into common use.]

I would not live alway; I ask not to stay
Where storm after storm rises dark o'er the way;
The few lurid mornings that dawn on us here
Are enough for life's woes, full enough for its cheer.

I would not live alway; no, welcome the tomb!
Since Jesus hath lain there I dread not its gloom;
There sweet be my rest till he bid me arise,
To hail him in triumph descending the skies.

Who, who would live alway, away from his God?
Away from yon heaven, that blissful abode,
Where the rivers of pleasure flow o'er the bright plains,
And the noontide of glory eternally reigns;

Where the saints of all ages in harmony meet,
Their Savior and brethren transported to greet;
While the anthems of rapture unceasingly roll,
And the smile of the Lord is the feast of the soul.

SERMONETTES.

No man has a large mission who neglects the little ministries.

Religious forms easily become caskets in which faith is buried.

This is a godless world whenever the divine is all in the past tense.

When a man is ethically wabbly he is usually theologically rigid.

Real prayers and real mountains always put a pick in your hand.

You will not help the man who is looking to you by looking at yourself.

Greatness of character arises in willingness to make small beginnings.

There's nothing a lazy man enjoys better than designing "Busy" signs.

Many put a thousand lives in danger rather than hurt the feelings of one.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't forget that long prayers often hide wrong practice.

Don't fail to learn that malice always misconstrues.

Don't expect to save men without suffering with them.

Don't measure your moral soundness by the amount of sound you make.

Don't forget that formation is always better than reformation.

Don't imitate the man who uses the beam in his own eye to pick out the mote in another's.

Don't strive for greatness of character without being willing to make small beginnings.

There Was a Reason.

When a negro was arrested the other day for wandering around the streets, he wore one of those invincible smiles. When he was taken before Magistrate Briggs he was still smiling.

"What's your name?" asked the magistrate.

"Ah don't know, sah," smiled the negro.

"Where do you live?"

"Ah don't know, sah."

"Where do you work?"

"At the Tem Hotel, sah."

The magistrate thought that perhaps there was some truth in the negro's place of employment, so he thought he would see if the negro knew any of the students in the college near this particular hotel.

"Do you know any of the students at Tem College?"

"No, sah," answered the negro, his smile bigger than ever. "Ah nebber goes in de bar!"—Philadelphia Times.

Doctors Know Soap.

Ask your family physician what he thinks about a laundry soap that is made of borax, cocoanut oil, clean tallow and naptha. He'll tell you such a soap will be cleansing, sterilizing and antiseptic. That means it will not only make your clothing sweet and clean, but that it will also have you from the dangers of contagion that lie in common soaps. Easy Task soap is the only one that would fill his prescription.

Saved by Fireflies.

The gigantic tropical fireflies which swarm in the forests and canebrakes of most of the low lying West Indian islands once proved the salvation of the city of San Domingo. A body of buccaneers, headed by the notorious Thomas Cavendish, had laid all their plans for a descent upon the place, intending to massacre the inhabitants and carry away all the treasure they conveniently could, and had actually put off their boats for that purpose. As they approached the land, however, rowing with muffled oars, they were greatly surprised to see an infinite number of moving lights in the woods which fringed the bayou up which they had to proceed, and, concluding that the Spaniards knew of their approach, they put about and regained their ship without attempting to land.

Kept Her Promise.

"Billy, dear," said his young wife, coaxingly, "tell me the password of your lodge."

"But I pledged myself never to disclose that, Bella."

"You're not disclosing it when you give it to me. You know we have no secrets from each other."

"If I tell you what it is, dear, will you promise sacredly never to repeat it to a living soul?"

"Yes, I promise."

"Well, here it is: Chattybiddybeechittybiddybiparaparagoolagarithehowk-aspecklybexlybim."

True to her word, the young wife never repeated it to anybody.

Looking Backward.

On the night following the Yale-Princeton game last fall, a young man who had slipped and fallen was assisted to his feet by a passer-by.

"Just a little shelebration of victory," the young man explained as he waved a bedraggled bit of orange and black ribbon.

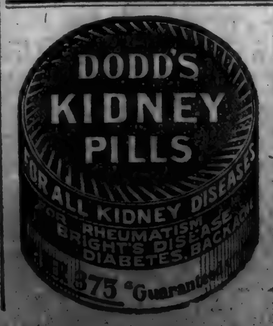
"But Princeton lost," the other told him.

The young man looked painfully surprised for an instant.

"How do you know?" he asked.

"Why, it was on the bulletin board an hour ago," the other said. "Yale won to-day's game.

"I wash referrin'," said the young man with great dignity, "to th' game of 1903."—Lippincott's.



THE HOUSEHOLD

The Kitchen Entrance.

The kitchen entrance of a house should be as attractive as the front entrance. A back porch with mops, brooms, buckets and scrubbing outfit scattered about is inexcusable. A large box, painted any desired color, could be used as a closet for them. Plant boxes placed along the porch edge and filled with flowers will add beauty. Vines over a door, where there is no porch, will prove bright and cheerful.

Salad Dressing.

One tablespoonful of flour, one tablespoonful of dry mustard, one tablespoonful of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-half cup of sweet milk, one-half cup of vinegar, three-quarters cup of water, a lump of butter the size of a walnut. Mix flour, mustard, sugar and salt with a little of the water until smooth, then add the other ingredients and stir over the fire until thick.

Mock Mince Pie.

Roll out four crackers and stir into them one and one-half cups of sugar, one cup of molasses, one cup of cider, one cup of water, two-thirds of a cup of butter, melted, one cup of chopped raisins, spices to taste, and, last of all, two well-beaten eggs. Bake in a pie plate lined with good pastry and cover with an upper crust.

Hollandaise Sauce.

Cook together two tablespoonfuls each of butter and flour and pour on them a cup of heated milk. Beat to a smooth sauce. Take from the fire and beat in gradually the whipped yolk of an egg, a tablespoonful of salad oil, pepper, salt and sugar, a pinch of each, and the juice of half a lemon. Serve at once.

Bran Biscuits Again.

Two cups of cleaned wheat bran, one cup of white flour, one teaspoonful of baking soda, one teaspoonful of salt. Mix thoroughly and add one-half cup of molasses and one and one-half cups of sweet milk. Bake in gem tins in a slow oven for thirty minutes.

Chocolate Almonds.

Shell and blanch the almonds by pouring boiling water over them, then slipping off the skins. Lay on a towel until dry. Melt in a double boiler a cake of sweet chocolate and dip each almond quickly in this, rolling it over and over, and then lay on waxed paper to dry.

Bean Soup.

Cook small soup beans (which have been soaked over night) in the water in which the ham was boiled. About twenty minutes before serving add a couple of potatoes cut fine. No seasoning will be required. Serve very hot.

Looks Well and Tastes Well.

A round loaf-shaped sponge cake with the center scooped out and filled with diced pineapple and mixed with whipped cream and seasoned with sugar makes a sightly and tasty dessert. Decorate the top with cherries.

Oatmeal Soup.

Slice one large onion into one teaspoonful of melted butter. Add one cup of cooked oatmeal. Cook five minutes. Add two small cups of milk, one cup of stock and season. Strain. Boil up and serve hot.

Nut and Cream Sandwiches.

Chop very fine (or grind) two dozen English walnut meats. Whip half a cup of cream very stiff, add a little salt and add the minced or ground nuts and spread between slices of graham bread.

Olive and Cheese Sandwiches.

Chop a dozen stoned olives very fine. Rub a Philadelphia cream cheese to a paste with the minced olives and spread between crustless slices of bread cut thin.

Hints About the House.

Slice bananas over the cereal and serve with milk or cream.

A cloth wrung out of vinegar and wrapped round cheese will keep it from molding.

Ammonia water that has been used for washing may be used for plants. It is an excellent fertilizer.

Suede shoes that have become shiny and worn looking can be freshened by rubbing them with fine sandpaper.

A coarse cloth dipped in salt and water and rubbed over straw matting will prevent it from turning yellow.

Pour a little melted butter on top of cereals and cover with stewed prunes, figs, canned peaches or raspberries.

Garments that are to be hung out to air can be put on hangers rather than pinned to the line. This prevents sagging or marking with the clothespins.

After the weekly washing rub a little vinegar and spirits of camphor over the hands. This will keep the hands in good condition summer and winter.

To remove ink stains from colored wash goods cover spots with lard, rub well, then wash in usual manner. While this method is simple, it is sure, and will not injure the most delicate colors.

When beating the whites of eggs for any purpose the busy housewife will find it a saving of time and the eggs will be stiffer and nicer in every way, if a pinch of salt is added before the beating begins.

WOMAN'S GENTLE NATURE CALLS FOR GENTLE TREATMENT

Delicately formed and gently reared, women will find, in all the seasons of their lives, as maidens, wives or mothers, that the one simple, wholesome remedy which acts gently and pleasantly and naturally, and which may be used with truly beneficial effects, under any conditions, when the system needs a laxative, is—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna. It is well known to be a simple combination of the laxative and carminative principles of plants with pleasant aromatic liquids, which are agreeable and refreshing to the taste and acceptable to the system when its gentle cleansing is desired.

Only those who buy the genuine Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna can hope to get its beneficial effects, and as a guarantee of the excellence of the remedy, the full name of the company—California Fig Syrup Co.—is printed on the front of every package, and without it any preparation offered as Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is fraudulent and should be declined. To those who know the quality of this excellent laxative, the offer of any substitute, when Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is called for, is always resented by a transfer of patronage to some first-class drug establishment, where they do not recommend, nor sell false brands, nor imitation remedies. The genuine article may be bought of all reliable druggists everywhere; one size only. Regular price 50 cents per bottle. Get a bottle today to have in the house when needed.

The Week in Congress

An invitation extended Wednesday by Senator Rayner to the "insurgent" Senators to join the Democratic party was spurned by Senator Dolliver on behalf of the "insurgents." This suggestion by the Maryland Senator followed a speech by him in the Senate criticising as unconstitutional some of the features of the administration railroad bill. He told the "insurgents" that they were out of sympathy with their party and should embrace the principles of Democracy. A lively tilt ensued when Senator Bailey of Texas advised the "insurgents" to remain in sympathy with the regular Republicans if they desired to win in the coming campaign. Otherwise, he said, they should join the Democracy. The session was concluded with a speech by Senator Bristow, who arraigned the present system of railroad rate making. In the House the entire day was devoted to the consideration of bills relating to Indian lands. One of these measures was amended on motion of Mr. Sabath of Illinois so that in the disposition of lands of the Rosebud Indian reservation in South Dakota citizens could make application for such lands at their homes without the necessity of going to the reservation.

In the Senate Thursday a spirited debate on the provisions of the railroad bill authorizing the making of rates was engaged in by Senators Clay, Bristow, Cummins, Crawford, Bailey, Aldrich, Borah, Root and Heyburn. The small number of Democratic members in attendance in the House during most of the session made it impossible for the insurgents to score victories over the regular Republicans. An amendment was adopted to include telegraph and telephone companies within the scope of the interstate commerce law.

The first test vote on the railroad bill was had in the Senate Friday and resulted in a victory for the administration members. The Cummins amendment, which would require all traffic agreements made between railroads, and all rates, fares and charges to be approved in advance by the Interstate Commerce Commission, was defeated by a vote of twenty-nine to thirty-five. Eleven Republicans, most of them from the insurgent ranks, and eighteen Democrats, voted for the Cummins provision. All of the votes against it were cast by Republicans. In the House the railroad bill was under consideration also. Numerous amendments were offered, most of which were voted down. An amendment making provision that the physical valuation of railroad properties shall be ascertained was offered by Mr. Madden of Illinois and adopted after an extended discussion. The provision adopted yesterday for the inclusion of telegraph and telephone companies within the scope of the Interstate Commerce law was further amended so as to permit of different charges being made for press dispatches and for night messages than are made for commercial dispatches.

The acceptance by Congress of a statue of Francis H. Pierpont from the State of West Virginia, for the permanent exhibition in statuary hall at the capitol, was the occasion of eulogies in the Senate, Saturday. The House accepted the Pierpont statue and heard eulogies. Several hours were also devoted to the passage of several private claim bills.

In addition to considering the railroad bill two hours, the Senate Monday discussed at length and passed the bill creating a bureau of mines in the Interior Department. The bill had received the sanction of the House and now only requires the signature of the President. The long and short haul amendment to the railroad bill prepared by Senator Dixon was the subject of lively debate. It was "suspension day" in the House and numerous bills were passed. Among them were measures to increase the personnel of the engineer corps of the army, to provide for additional lighthouse equipment and to build a monument at Midway, Ga., to the memory of General Stewart, of revolutionary fame, the great-great-grandfather of former President Roosevelt.

In the Senate Tuesday the traffic agreement provision and section 12, dealing with the combination of railroads, were stricken from the railroad bill. The Senate also passed a House bill creating an art commission for Washington. The House also removed from the traffic agreement provision from the rail bill. The House agreed to the long-and-short-haul clause of the House bill in the form that it came from the committee except that it provided for an investigation by the interstate commerce commission of data relating to that class of rates.

Lost Fee Inside Patient.

Many a surgeon has had to repeat an operation to recover bits of sponge or other medical equipment left in the victim on the operating table. But the story is going the rounds here, says a Paris correspondent of the St. Louis Republic, that a brilliant French surgeon has distinguished himself by leaving his fee in the sufferer's abdomen when he stitched it up.

The patient was a merchant, who saw to all the arrangements himself, up to the commencement of the operation for appendicitis. The last thing he did before going under the anesthetic was to pay the surgeon the fee with a check for $1,000. The great man tossed it aside on a pile of absorbent wool that was presently in use.

Later, when the last stitches were being put in after the operation, he looked for the fee and could not find it. He opened the patient again and found the boodle, according to the story that is diverting medical circles.

You want it, because it will cook any dinner and not heat the room. No heat, no smell, no smoke, no coal to bring in, no ashes to carry out. It does away with the drudgery of cooking, and makes it a pleasure. Women with the light touch for pastry especially appreciate it, because they can immediately have a quick fire, simply by turning a handle. No half-hour preparation. It not only is less trouble than coal, but it costs less. Absolutely no smell, no smoke; and it doesn't heat the kitchen.

Cautionary Note: Be sure you get this stove—see that the name-plate reads "New Perfection."

The nickel finish, with the turquoise blue of the enameled chimneys, makes the stove ornamental and attractive. Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without Cabinet.

CANADA FORGING AHEAD.

Thomas C. Shotwell, one of the greatest market reporters in America, writes from New York, under date of March 20th, and says:

"The tariff tangle with Canada which President Taft has taken in hand is of importance chiefly because of the multitude of American farmers that are crossing into the Canadian northwest. Most conservative estimates of their number place it at 150,000 for 1910. Some say as many as 250,000 will cross. These are all expert farmers and their places in the United States are being filled by untrained men from Europe and from the cities. Canada is gaining rapidly in agricultural importance and within a few years the United States will have to call on the Dominion for wheat. Production of wheat in the United States is not keeping pace with the population. A tariff war would complicate the problem of getting food. Even now Canadian farmers are getting higher prices for their cattle on the hoof, and Candian housewives are paying less for meat in the butcher shops than farmers and housewives are receiving and paying in the United States. The tariff on cattle and wheat must be removed as between the two countries before long."

She Was Frank.

Miss Mary Morris, daughter of the late William Morris, poet and craftsman, said at a dinner in New York: "I like the American taste for its frankness. Better be frank, even if wrong. The pretty American girl was by no means hopeless whose comment on first seeing the incomparable glory of the Venus de Medici was, 'I wouldn't be seen dead with ankles like that!'"

A Girl Gold Miner.

Awful Burning Itch Cured in a Day.

"In the middle of the night of March 30th I woke up with a burning itch in my two hands and I felt as if I could pull them apart. In the morning the itching had gone to my chest and during that day it spread all over my body. I was red and raw from the top of my head to the soles of my feet and I was in continual agony from the itching. I could neither lie down nor sit up. I happened to see about Cuticura Remedies and I thought I would give them a trial. I took a good bath with the Cuticura Soap and used the Cuticura Ointment. I put it on from my head down to my feet and then went to bed. On the first of April I felt like a new man. The itching was almost gone. I continued with the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment and during that day the itching completely left me. Frank Gridley, 325 East 43rd Street, New York City, Apr. 27, 1909." Cuticura Remedies are sold throughout the world; Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props., Boston, Mass.

Have You a Baby?

Every woman knows how imperatively necessary it is that baby's things should be absolutely and perfectly clean. She knows the trouble she has with common yellow soaps that leave the dirt in and often make the little garments harsh and irritating to baby's skin. A Clean Man

Outside cleanliness is less than half the battle. A man may scrub himself a dozen times a day, and still be unclean. Good health means cleanliness not only outside, but inside. It means a clean stomach, clean bowels, clean blood, a clean liver, and now, clean, healthy tissues. The man who is clean in this way will look it and eat it. He will work with energy and think clean, clear, healthy thoughts.

He will never be troubled with liver, lung, stomach or blood disorders. Dyspepsia and indigestion originate in unclean stomachs. Blood diseases are found where there is unclean blood. Consumption and bronchitis mean unclean lungs.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

prevents these diseases. It makes a man's insides clean and healthy. It cleans the digestive organs, makes pure, clean blood, and clean, healthy flesh.

It restores tone to the nervous system, and cures nervous exhaustion and prostration. It contains no alcohol or habit-forming drugs.

Constipation is the most unclean uncleanliness. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure it. They never gripe. Easy to take as candy.

Culture Club

Mrs. Jennie White was hostess to the Culture Club Wednesday evening. The lesson "Evangeline" conducted by Mrs. Buchanan, was thoroughly enjoyed by all. Election of officers was then held as follows:

President	Mrs. Eva Sheffer
Vice president	Mrs. Mary Buchanan
Secretary	Mrs. Jessie Benjamin
Treasurer	Mrs. Jennie White
Critic	Mrs. Kate A. Leighty
Press Cor.	Miss Flossie Copp.

The ladies have all thoroughly enjoyed the study hours as well as the social hours of the past year and all are looking forward to another profitable and enjoyable year of club life. The Club closes with a full membership, three new members being added in the past few weeks. Mrs. Bowman then extended the ladies of the Club and their husbands an invitation to hold their mid-summer meeting at her beautiful cottag home at Hamilton Lake and it was accepted for June 15. Club then adjourned.

The Submarine.

John W. Titcomb, of the United States bureau of fisheries, said recently of a fishing excursion:

"I once made a fishing excursion to a stream that flowed behind a lunatic asylum. As I sat and smoked on the bank, watching my cork, I noticed a strange object floating down towards me with the current. I saw that it was a man. He had all his clothes on, and he was swimming in the strangest way. I verily believe every part of him was submerged but one nostril.

"'Hi!' I shouted, 'what are you doing there?'

"He lifted his head from beneath the surface, and then, before drawing it under again, he snapped:

"'Sh—sh! Don't interfere! I'm a submarine!'"

A Debate on Baptism.

(FROM LUTHERAN OBSERVER)

On April 20th, 21st and 22nd, it was my privilege to hear the Rev. M. R. Mohler, of St. Mark's Lutheran church Harlan, Ind., and Elder Brown, of the Christian Church, debate the question, "Resolved, That immersion is the only scriptural mode of Christian baptism."

Rev. Mohler was challenged repeatedly before he decided to take up the negative side of the question, as he did not care to argue a question with people who love argument merely for argument's sake.

The first night of the discussion there was not a large crowd present, but it became evident that Rev. Mohler had his opponent worsted at every step, so that when the news went abroad, the house was too small for the audience on the second night. Elder Brown, by ridicule, personal reflections and other questionable methods, tried to bolster himself up in the minds of his hearers, but to no avail. It was plain that the Lutheran minister, with his Greek and Hebrew, had no trouble at all to refute the statement of his opponent at every turn.

On the third night, the Christian minister got so short on argument that he resorted to interruptions to break the force of his opponent's telling points.

While the real value of the discussion can never be told here, it seems in fact there was an overwhelming majority on the negative side. I regard it as a distinct victory for Rev. Mohler. I heartly endorse his splendid arguments on the subject.

services will be appropriately observed at St. Joe, May 29, 1910 at 2 o'clock p. m. at the Lutheran church. Services will open with a song by the choir, roll call, responses and reports by the G. A. R. members, song by choir, scripture reading and prayer, solo, chorus, Memorial sermon will be delivered by Rev. L. Coomer, pastor of the M. P. church of this city, then a song followed by the benediction. All members of the G. A. R. will meet promptly at 1:30 at their hall and march in a body to the church. It is the earnest wish of the members of the G. A. R. and those who have this work in charge that we give Rev. L. Coomer a large audience.

Decoration day Services will be held in Riverside cemetery at St. Joe, Monday, May 30th, at 2 o'clock p. m. The procession will form at G. A. R. hall and march to the cemetery where decoration day services will be held. The procession will be led by the Coburntown band and all citizens big and little, old and young are urged to be present and help swell the procession. After reaching the cemetery, first will be music by the band, followed by the decorating of the soldiers graves, song by the choir, address by Captain F. F. Boltz late of the 88 regiment, Indiana Vol. Infantry, of Bluffton, Indiana; music by the band, address by Rev. L. Coomer of St. Joe, song, march back to hall and disband. Let all the children big enough to, walk march in this procession. Centuries ago a Roman patriot wrote:

"It is Sweet and Honorable to Die for Ones Country."

This sentiment has thrilled the hearts and stirred the blood of patriots in every country for ages past. Let us meet together on this day, not alone to decorate the graves of those who gave of the best years of their lives to the service of their country, but also to commemorate the spirit of loyalty shown by their deeds.

Mrs. Nancy Widney.

Nancy Jane (Knight) Widney was born in Morrow County, Ohio, April 15, 1835. Departed this life May 8, 1910, aged 75 years and 23 days. In 1837, she came with her parents to DeKalb County, settling on what is known as the Florence Buchanan farm, where she grew up to womanhood. In 1854, she united with the M. P. Church at Concord. January 1, 1857, she was wedded to John Widney. To this union were born eight children, three boys and five girls. Two boys and one girl together with the husband have preceded her to the spirit world. In 1875, she became one of the charter members of the St. Mark's Evangelical Lutheran Church at St. Joe, and her departure removes the last one of these devoted followers of their Savior who at that time united to perpetuate the seed sowing in the Master's vineyard. The large front window in the church, depicting the parable of the seed sower, is a monument to their memory. She loved the church, and with her husband trained their children to follow him whom they both so devotedly served. In the great day of accounting, many will rise up to bless them for their part in establishing and maintaining this church. Mother Widney suffered with Christian fortitude. She was conscious until the end and often expressed herself as being ready and willing to go, realizing what every true christian realizes, that the Master whom she served was waiting to give her a home eternal in the New Jerusalem.

She leaves to mourn her departure five children: Sylvester S., Mrs. Frank Sechler, Mrs. S. J. Bowen, of Fort Wayne, Mrs. Lulu Foote, of Harlan and Mrs. Marion Smith, of Auburn; eleven grand children, one great grand child, one brother, two sisters and a host of other relatives and friends.

The funeral services were held from the Lutheran Church, Wednesday afternoon, May 11, conducted by her local pastor, Rev. Hitchner, assisted by Rev. E. W. Erick. Short services were held at the home. Elza Kinsey funeral director. Interment in Riverside Cemetery.

Those from a distance who attended the funeral were: Mrs. Lucinda Knight, Goshen; Mrs. Alice Lewis, Morris Widney and family, Wm. Hull and family, Mrs. Mary Lockwood, Mrs Depew, Mrs. Smith, Miss Brandon, Mrs. Samantha Hull, of Auburn; Mrs. Joe Pfer and daughter of Mooresville; Layton Lake, Joe Miller and wife of Butler; Mrs. Fosnight and Mrs. Snyder of Harlan; Samuel Lawhead of Corunna; Mrs. Kathryn Rummell of Spencerville; Mrs. L. W. Yeiser of Avilla, besides many other relatives

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Telegraphic Information Gathered by the Few for the Enlightenment of the Many.

Explosion on Battleship.

Reports are current at Dover, Eng., of a serious explosion on the flagship London, of the British Atlantic battleship fleet in Norwegian waters. The reports cannot be confirmed in London. Rear Admiral Sir Colon Richard Keppel is in command of the fleet. The London is a twin screw battleship of 15,000 tons. Her captain is Alfred E. M. Chatfield. The flagship was built at Portsmouth, being launched in 1899 and completed in 1902. Her cost was in excess of $5,000,000. Her armament consists of four 12-inch and twelve 6-inch guns, sixteen 12-pounders, eight 3-pounders and machine guns. Her complement is 757 officers and men.

Donau Wins Kentucky Derby.

Leading throughout the entire route of one mile and a quarter, but compelled to fight for his vantage over every inch of ground, Donau, a bay colt owned by William Gerst, of Nashville, won the thirty-sixth Kentucky Derby at Louisville, Ky. But three-quarters of a length separated the winner from Joe Morris, which horse in turn was a neck in front of Fighting Bob. The time, 2:06 2-5, was but one-fifth of a second slower than the record for the race. Donau carried the public's money and 25,000 people acclaimed the winner. The Pari mutel machines paid $13.25 on a $5 ticket on Donau, making his price about 8 to 5. The guaranteed value of the race was $6,000.

Gas Wrecks Building.

Five persons, one of them a week-old baby, were injured by an explosion and fire in the Hamilton building, on Main street, Hackensack, N. J. The explosion is presumed to have been due to escaping gas. The building, a store and residence structure, was completely wrecked. The injuries to the occupants were caused by flying bricks, one of which struck an infant child of Mrs. John Morgan, and others injuring 9-year-old John Morgan so seriously that he may die. The Morgan boy got his injuries going to the rescue of his mother and infant brother. The loss is estimated at $60,000.

Lost Bet; Is in Hospital.

Henry Truman is in the hospital at Danville, Ill., with a bullet wound in the jaw and in a serious condition as the result of a playful attempt at hold up. Truman had boasted to J. E. Gillespie, a grocer, he could hold up his store and get away with it. Mr. Gillespie told him to try it. A few minutes later Truman stole into the store and demanded the proprietor to hold up his hands. Gillespie reached for a revolver and shot Truman through the jaw. He claimed he did not know the revolver was loaded.

Rats Gnaw Silver Coin.

Missouri rats—at least some of them believe in free silver as food. E. B. Allen, collector of internal revenue at St. Louis, Mo., received two silver dollars from Murley Smith, a farmer near Laclede, Mo., which Mr. Smith says he lost in his corn cribs last fall. Nearly one-fourth of one of them had been eaten and the marks of the rodents' teeth were plain on both. The tellers at the sub-treasury refused to redeem the coins, and said they were marketable only as old silver.

Historic Spot Marked.

A bronze tablet appropriately inscribed was unveiled at Market and Lake streets, Chicago, the site of the old "Wigwam," where Abraham Lincoln was nominated in 1860. The memorial is a present from the Chicago Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution.

Kidnapped Girl Found with Gypsies.

A special dispatch to the Lexington Herald from London, Ky., says that Alma Kellner, the Louisville (Ky.) child kidnapped last winter, was found at Grays, Knox County, with a gypsy fortune teller. The report is not confirmed.

Admiral Kersted Dead.

Rear Admiral Andrew J. Kersted, U. S. N., retired, is dead at his home in Philadelphia, Pa. He was 77 years old.

King's Death Killed Her.

Mrs. Sarah J. P. Mobley, aged 70, and wealthy, lies dead in the county morgue at Minneapolis, Minn. Coroner Seashore pronounced her death due to heart failure brought on by reading of the death of King Edward, of England.

EDWARD VII. IS DEAD AND GEORGE V. RULES

Last Words of Great Britain's King Are, "I Think I Have Done My Duty."

MONARCH IS PNEUMONIA VICTIM

British Sovereign Succumbs to Disease After Illness of Less than a Week.

FIRST GENTLEMAN OF EUROPE

Late Ruler Was Sincerely Loved for Character of Democratic Simplicity and Kingly Dignity.

King Edward VII. of England died from pneumonia at 11:45 Friday night at Buckingham Palace, London, and at the same moment the crown and scepter of the empire of Great Britain passed automatically to his son and heir, Prince George of Wales, now George V.

King Edward died almost before his subjects had begun to realize that he was seriously ill. He was taken sick a week before. After three days serious complications began to develop. The fourth day his physicians issued a bulletin that stirred the whole nation to its depth. On the sixth day the king was dead. The shock to Great Britain and to the world has been tremendous, not in a material way, for the death of the king has been discounted in the markets for many years.

Nearly all the members of the king's immediate family were at his bedside when the king died. Just before the end came the royal patient rallied and spoke weakly to those about him.

"I know it is all over," he said, "but I think I've done my duty." These were King Edward's last words, the end coming peacefully a few minutes later.

The first official act of the new king, George V., was performed immediately after his father had breathed his last. He dispatched to the Lord Mayor of London the announcement of Edward VII.'s death, in pursuance to an age-old custom.

Pneumonia, following bronchitis, is believed to have been the cause of death, but the doctors thus far have refused to make a statement. Some of the king's friends are convinced that worry over the critical political situation which confronted him together with sleepless nights, aggravated, if it did not cause, the fatal illness.

FARMERS AND WORKERS BAND.

Federation and Union Join on Industrial Lines Only.

The Farmers' National and Co-Operative Union has agreed to accept Samuel Gompers' plan of co-operation with the American Federation of Labor along industrial lines only. Representatives of the farmers' union declare the alliance has no particular tinge. Organized labor and organized farmers will work together hereafter in preserving the rights and liberties of both classes of workers." The affiliation has been a favorite project of Gompers and the adoption of the resolution of co-operation followed a four day conference between Gompers and the farmers' committee. The resolution says:

"We pledge ourselves to give preference to the products of the industrial workers who manifest their intelligence to protect themselves by organization and urge reciprocal purchase of products of union farmers.

"Our legislative committees are pledge to co-operate with the similar officers and committees of organized labor to secure such relief and reformatory legislation as may be necessary to conserve the rights and freedom to which the workers as men and citizens are entitled under the constitution of the United States."

The farmers' union claims a membership of 3,000,000.

NEW KING AND QUEEN OF ENGLAND.

KING GEORGE V. QUEEN VICTORIA MARY.

King Edward was sincerely loved throughout the length and breadth of England's possessions. He was loved as the great son of a noble mother and he was loved for himself because he had in his character that rare commingling of democratic simplicity with kingly dignity which made him justly "the first gentleman of Europe."

MASKED MEN HOLD TOWN AT BAY

Newell, W. Va., Roused by Dynamite, Pursues Bandits.

Highwaymen entered the office building of the North American Manufacturing Company in Newell, W. Va., at 2:30 o'clock the other morning, blew open a safe with dynamite and held up the entire community, which had been summoned by the commotion. Only $200 in cash, but many valuable papers, were stolen. Four masked men were implicated. While the two were inside a third was in the corridor of the building and the fourth stood guard at the street entrance. When the safe was blown the charge startled the occupants of the building on either side. As they rushed into the streets the burglar on guard ordered them back at the point of a gun and when they returned with arms the robbers had fled. Police of five communities and possees with bloodhounds were put on the trail.

BIG FRUIT CROP.

Yield in Four Western States Expected to Break Records.

Officers of state horticultural organizations in Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana say in reports to the Spokane Chamber of Commerce there is every indication that the fruit crop this year will be the largest and most profitable in the history of the four states.

RAIL BILL PASSED BY HOUSE.

Traffic Agreement and Buying of Noncompeting Lines Killed.

The emasculated administration railroad bill went through the House the other day according to schedule. It was passed exactly as it came from committee of the whole, the final vote, 200 to 126, with every Republican voting aye on the main question.

Previous to the roll call on passage a motion to recommit the bill, made by Representative Adamson, of Georgia, with instructions to strike out the section providing for a commerce court, was defeated by a vote of 157 to 176. And before that a motion by Mr. Mann, chairman of the committee on interstate and foreign commerce, to replace the eliminated merger section with one permitting acquisition of lines "not substantially competitive" upon authorization of the interstate commerce commission, was rejected by a vote of 160 to 169.

Not only did every Republican place himself on the side of the measure either by his vote or by being paired in its favor, but fourteen Democrats joined the majority to make the total vote in favor of the measure 200 to 126.

FARMERS IN BIG FOOD POOL.

Body Formed at St. Louis to Combat High Prices.

The American Co-Operative Union, the purpose of which is to aid in the movement against high food prices, has been organized by farmers who attended the national rally in St. Louis. The organization was formed secretly and was announced a few days later. Thomas G. Nelson, of Indianapolis, Ind., is president; the Rev. J. T. Tuohy, of St. Louis, secretary, and Thomas Emmerton, of Bloomer, Wis., treasurer. The union is to be incorporated for $1,000,000.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY.

Illinois has more than a million and a half of horses, worth a little more than $100 each.

Missouri produced last year more than half a million pounds of tobacco, worth 13 cents a pound.

The annual convention of the South Dakota Cattlemen's Association convened at Rapid City recently.

A raise in wages amounting to three cents an hour for all trainmen on the Butte, Anaconda and Pacific Railway has been bulletined.

In Japan day laborers receive 20 cents a day, women servants 84 cents a month, men servants $1.86 a month, women farm laborers, $8.50, men farm laborers, $15.96.

Articles of incorporation were filed at Perre, S. D., recently, for the Farmers' State Bank of Roscoe, with a capital of $15,000. Articles were filed for the State Telephone Company, with headquarters at Draper, and a capital of $5,000.

PROCLAIM NEW KING WITH MEDIAEVAL RITE

Fanfare by Four Heralds Opens Ceremony at St. James' Palace Marking Accession.

GEORGE V. HAILED BY NATION

Bands Play "God Save the King" and People Wildly Shout the Refrain.

With the time-honored ceremony of a brilliant and impressive character, George V. Monday morning was publicly proclaimed King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the British Dominions Beyond the Seas, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India. Sharply at the stroke of 9 four heralds, arrayed in medieval uniforms of scarlet, heavily braided with gold, mounted the balcony of friary court at St. James' Palace, where Queen Victoria presented herself to the people upon the opening of her memorable reign, and blew a fanfare through their long silver trumpets.

The palace by this time was surrounded by a great mass of people, many of whom could secure only the briefest glimpse of the proceedings. The balconies and roofs of the ancient palace, which had been draped with red cloth, were reserved for the notables, all of whom were in the deepest mourning. Members of the royal household, the ministers and their wives and high officers of state, all in brilliant uniforms, were gathered around the court.

The heralds having concluded their duties, the officers of arms, chief of whom is the Duke of Norfolk, the hereditary earl marshal and chief butler of England, took their places on the balcony forming the great heraldic company. None wore mourning, this having been removed for the occasion. Sir Alfred Scott Scott-Gatty, garter principal king of arms, with the Duke of Norfolk and two officers bearing the staves of office, stepped to the front of the balcony, and in a voice which could be heard across the court and in the streets adjoining, read the proclamation, while great throngs stood uncovered in a drizzling rain.

The Duke and Sir Alfred then called for three cheers for the King, and the people responded with fairly deafening hurrahs, which were silenced only by the reappearance of the heralds, who sounded another fanfare. The last note hardly had died away when the band of the Coldstream Guards, which had taken up a position in the square, struck up "God Save the King." As the national anthem was concluded the first gun of the battery in St. James' Park belched forth a royal salute, and the people in the square and streets at the same moment took up the refrain, "God Save the King."

EARTHQUAKE KILLS 500 PEOPLE

Many Hundreds Injured in the Destruction of Cartago, Costa Rico.

A large part of Cartago, Costa Rico, was destroyed the other night by an earthquake. Details are meager, as the telegraph wires have been leveled betwen San Jos and Cartago. The operators at the latter place were killed.

It is known that at least 500 persons are dead and many hundreds injured. Scores of buildings were thrown down, among them the palace of justice erected by Andrew Carnegie. The wife and children of Dr. Bocanegra, the Guatemalan magistrate to the Central American arbitration court, lost their lives. Panic reigns as the earthquakes continue.

San Jose was shaken, some of the buildings being damaged, but no deaths are reported in that city. Many persons were slightly injured. Earth shocks also were felt at several points in Nicaragua near the Costa Rican frontier. There is much suffering and destitution at Cartago, consequent upon the disaster.

Cartago, capital of Cartago province, lies at the foot of Irazu volcano, about fourteen miles from San Jose. It has an estimated population of 10,000 and is the seat of the Central American Peace court, for the home of which Andrew Carnegie donated a large sum.

The Week in Congress

The postoffice appropriation bill, carrying about $240,000,000, was passed by the Senate Friday without amendment. As the result of this action no conference will be required upon this bill. A large number of bills were passed, including one to provide for the division of the lands in the Crow Indian reservation and one granting pensions of $12 a month to nurses who served in the Civil War. The Seate adjourned until Monday. The House practically concluded with the consideration of the administration railroad bill for the adoption of amendments before adjournment and agreed that a final vote would be taken Tuesday. The section authorizing mergers between railroads was struck out by a vote of 131 to 128. Efforts of Democrats to strike out the sections relating to the capitalization of railroads were ineffectual.

The Senate was not in session Saturday. A sharp exchange between Speaker Cannon and Representative Shackleford, of Missouri, over an alleged breach of order by the latter in a speech of St. Louis subtreasury conditions under a former regime featured session of the House. Mr. Shackleford complained of "coercion" by the Speaker and asked if he were to be "traduced" and "bulldozed." The Speaker heatedly and repeatedly called the Missourian to order, but overruled an objection by members of the committee which investigated the situation in the St. Louis subtreasury, and Mr. Shackleford spoke for an hour. A personal tribute of both parties to Speaker Cannon in commemeration of his seventy-fourth birthday was expressed for the House by Democratic Leader Clark and replied to by the Speaker. Several minor bills on the private calendar were passed. The House adopted a resolution of sympathy for the family of the late King Enward and the British people, and as a "further mark of respect" adjourned.

Previous to adjournment at 3 o'clock Monday, on account of the death of King Edward VII. the Senate devoted two hours to the consideration of the railroad bill. Senator Overman of North Carolina spoke in favor of the long and short haul clause of the bill, while Senator Piles of Washington opposed that provision of the measure. Earlier in the day Senator Stone of Missouri introduced a resolution instructing the committee on postoffices and post roads to make inquiry into the propriety of the use of franks in circulating a pamphlet in support of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. The resolution was referred to the postoffice committee under a promise of a speedy report, there being some indication that the inquiry might take on a broader scope and that the misuse of the franking privilege generally might be entered upon. In the House legislation relating to the District of Columbia occupied the entire session.

Continuing the consideration of the railroad bill, the Senate Tuesday heard arguments by Senator Bristow in support of the Dixon amendment prohibiting a greater charge for short than for long hauls on the railroads, and by Senators Lodge and Piles against it. There were many interruptions and much sharp colloquy. Toward the close of the session a resolution authorizing an investigation into alleged abuses of the franking privilege was adopted. By a vote of 200 to 126 the House passed the administration railroad bill, with many of the original provisions stricken out. A proposition to revive section 12 relating to the acquisition of competing lines was voted down before the bill was finally placed upon its passage. Some of the New England Republicans joined with the Democrats in voting down that provision. The bill now goes to the Senate, where a bill similarly introduced as an administration measure has been pending for nearly three months. The House passed several resolutions calling for identity of the real purchasers of the Philippine friar lands and adopted the conference report on the bill to create the bureau of mines and mining, which now goes to the President for approval.

The Master of Appleby

By FRANCIS LYNDE

COPYRIGHT 1902 BY

CHAPTER XXIII.—(Continued.)

Leaving the matter of the estate, I thought it high time to cut to the marrow of the bigger bone. So I said: "Let us be frank with each other in this, Mr. Stair. How much has your daughter told you of the matter between us?"

"She's a jade!" he rasped, lapsing for a moment into his real self. But he recovered his self-control instantly. "Ye'd no expect a romantic bit lassie wi' French blood in her veins to be confidencing wi' her old dried-up wisp of a father, now, would ye? She's no tell't me everything, I daresay."

"Then I will tell you the plain truth of it," I said. "This marriage was never anything more than the form we all agreed it should be at the time; a makeshift to serve a purpose. If you think I would hold your daughter to it——"

"Hut, tut, man! what will ye be havering about! Ye'll never cast the poor bit lassie off that way! Ye canna, if ye would; her Church will have a word to say to that."

For all his aping the matter of the ignored father, I shrewdly suspected that he knew more about the ins and outs of our affair than he owned to. Nevertheless, I was forced to meet him on his own ground.

"There is no 'casting off' about it, Mr. Stair; and as to the Church, there is good ground for an appeal to Rome. The marriage as it stands is little more than a formal betrothal, as you well know. Your daughter loves Richard Jennifer well and truly; and with this entanglement brushed aside she will marry him when he comes back from the wars."

"She will, ye say? And what will become o' the braw acres of Appleby that gait, I'd like to know? But ye're daft, man; clean daft. Didn't I speir her giving him his quittance once for all that night when he rode away after they had pitten ye to bed? She tell't him flat she loved anither man."

"Another man?" I echoed. "I—explain yourself, if you please, Mr. Stair. What other man——"

"Has it never come intil your thick numbskull that the poor fule lassie is sick wi' love for ye, ye dour-faced loon?"

And with that he let himself out and slammed the door behind him, and I heard him go pottering down the corridor.

CHAPTER XXIV.

I may confess to you, my dears, that Mr. Gilbert Stair's parting tirade did not move me greatly, since I would set down everything he had said to the one account—the miser's.

Yet when I came to second thoughts upon it, this account balanced but indifferently. Why should he be so eager to make me think small of Margery's love for Richard Jennifer? And why, misliking me, as I made sure he did, should he be so hot to make the shadow marriage a thing of substance? From the miser-father's point of view, Richard, with his goodly heritage of Jennifer House, was a match to be angled for; yet here was the man in whose eye house and lands loomed largest flying into rabe because I sought to put his daughter in the way of marrying them.

I was pondering thoughtfully on this, giving the pinching old man credit for any and every motive save that which he had so cursingly avowed, to wit, the furthering of his daughter's happiness, when there came a tap at the door and Mistress Margery entered.

"Dear heart! Do they limit you to a single candle when my back is turned?" she said, in mock pity; and saying it, went to light the candles in the mantel sconces.

The sight of her standing a-tiptoe to touch off the candles on the chimney breast set the old love-spell at work to make my heart beat faster. What if there were a hint of truth in Gilbert Stair's wrathful protest? What if, after all, she cared less for Richard and more for me? For a time we sat in silence, and 'twas she who spoke first.

"My father has been with you," she said. "I hope you did not quarrel with him."

"No," I denied, salving my conscience with the remembering that it takes two to make a quarrel. "He came to give me this," I added, handing her the will.

She opened the folded parchment, reading a line of it here and there softly to herself.

—"'Being of sound mind, doth bequeath and devise to his loving wife, Margery—' Ah, had you been writing it you would not have written it so, would you, Monsieur John?"

"'Tis but a form," I would say. "All wives are 'loving' in lawyers' speech."

She smiled up at me so like an innocent and fearless child that for the moment I could figure her no otherwise. Yet her rejoinder's was a woman's.

"I say you would not have written it so; is not that the truth?"

"If I should write it now, it should be written in great letters, dear lady. Though it is but a form, though that which followed was but another form, you have not failed in any wifely duty, Mistress Margery."

"Not once?"

"No, not once. Three times you have done what the lovingest wife could do to save a husband's life."

She fell silent for a space, and when she spoke again she was become by some subtle transmutation my trusting little maid of the bygone halcyon-time.

"Do you remember how you used to make a comrade of me in the old days, Monsieur John, telling me things my elder brother might have told me, had I had one?"

I said I remembered; that I was not likely to forget.

"Are you strong enough to stand in that elder brother's place again tonight?"

"Try me and see, dear lady."

"Not whilst you say 'dear lady,'" she pouted. "'Twas 'Margery' and 'Monsieur John' a year agone."

"Have it as you will; I will even call you 'Madge' if it pleases you better."

"No," she said; "that is Dick's name for me; and—and it is of Dick that I would speak. You love him well, do you not, Monsieur John?"

I said I could never make her, or any woman, fully understand the bond there was between us.

"Truly?" There was the merest flavor of playful sarcasm in the uptilt of the word, but it was gone when she went on.

"Being so good a friend to Dick, then, you can advise me the better. Tell me, if you please, must I marry him—when——"

"When you are free to do it?" I finished for her. "Why should you not, my dear?"

She was pulling the threads from the lace edging of her kerchief and would not for a king's ransom let her eyes meet mine.

"You used to say—in that other time—that love should go before a marriage; did you not? Or do I remember badly?"

"You remember well. I said it then, and I say it again at this present. But Dick loves you well and truly, sweetheart; and you——"

She looked up quickly with the little laugh that used to mind me of happy children at play.

"And I?—now you will read a woman's heart for me, Monsieur John? Tell me; do I love him as his mistress should?"

"Nay, surely," said I, gravely, for somehow her laugh jarred upon me, "surely that is for you to say. But you have said it, long since."

"Have I?" she queried, with an arch lifting of the pencilled brows that came straight from her French mother. "Mayhap you overheard me say it, Monsieur Eavesdropper?"

"So I did," said I.

All in a flash her laughing mood was gone and she stood before me like an accusing goddess.

"You told me once the past was like a dream to you; you must have dreamed that part of it, sir. And yet you said a little while ago that I had not failed in any wifely duty!"

"The time and circumstance were their own best excuse. Sure I am far from blaming you, my dear. But let it pass, 'tis enough that I know you love him as he loves you."

Again her mood changed in the twinkling of an eye. She sank down upon the hassock, laughing merrily.

"O wise Monsieur John! how well you read a woman's heart! 'Tis you should be the lover, instead of Dick. He rides a-courting as he would charge legion on a battle-field. But nothing would ever tempt you to be so masterful rough, would it, Monsieur John? You would look deep into your sweetheart's eyes and say—Tell me what you would say, mon ami?"

Ah, my dears, I hope no one of you will ever be tempted as I was tempted them. I forgot my dear lad, 'forgot honor, forgot everything save that I had leave to tell her how I had loved her from the first; how I should go on loving her to the end. So for a moment I hung trembling on the brink; and then she pushed me over.

"Is this how you would do, Monsieur—Monsieur Ogre?—sit stock still and glower at the poor thing as if you were between two minds as to loving her or eating her?"

I bent quickly, took her face between my hands and kissed her twice—thrice.

"That is what I should do. Now that you have made me what I was not before, are you satisfied?"

'Twas long before she gave me a word. And when she spoke it was only to say: "Are you not most monstrous ashamed, Monsieur John?"

"No!" said I. "I love you, Mistress Margery; do you hear? I have loved you since that day in June when I came back from death's door to find you sitting here to bear me company."

She locked her fingers across her knee and would not look at me.

"But by your own showing you should be ashamed, sir," she insisted. "What of the dear friend to whom you would give up even the love of your mistress?"

"You may flay me as you will; I shall neither flinch nor go back from my word. You are mine, and I shall live you up to no man. I know I have not your love—shall never have it. Also, I know that I have gained an enemy where once I had a loving friend. Richard Jennifer may kill me if he please—he shall have the chance to do it; but you are mine and shall be whilst I live to claim and hold you."

There was something less than anger in the blue-gray eyes when she let me see them; nay, I could have sworn there was a flash of playful mockery in them when she said: "Dear heart! how masterful rough you have grown, all in a moment, my Lord." 'And then the beautiful eyes filled and she said "Poor Dick!" in a way to make me suffer all the torments of that old myth-king who could never quaff the water that was ever rising to his lips.

"Aye, you may love him, if you must and will," I gloomed. "I know you do love him."

She looked up quickly. "So you have said a dozen times before. Tell me, Monsieur Oracle, how do you know it?"

"If I tell you, you will hate me more than you do now."

"That would be hard, indeed," she murmured. "Yet I would hear you say it."

"Listen, then: once, when we three were at the very door and threshold of death, you wrote the cry of your heart out on a bit of paper for a leave-taking and sent it to the man you loved. You said, 'Though you must needs believe my love is pledged to your dear friend and mine, 'tis yours, and yours alone.' Were not these your very words?"

Her "yes" was but the lightest whisper, but I heard it and went on. "That is all, save this; the Indian bearer of your letter blundered and gave it me instead of Dick."

She looked me full in the eyes and my soul went all afire. Then she laid her cheek against my knee and I heard her dear voice as it had been a chime of sweet-toned joy-bells:

"Ah, Monsieur John; how blind this thing called love can make us all. Suppose—suppose the Indian did not blunder, dear lord and master of me?"

DECADE OF EDWARD VII.

British Capital Now Rivals Berlin as Diplomatic Center.

Edward VII., "by the grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the British dominions beyond the seas, king, defender of the faith, emperor of India"—such is his official designation—began the tenth year of his reign in January.

When he ascended the throne, on the death of his mother, the diplomatic capital of Europe was Berlin, and the kaiser's will was the dominating power of European affairs.

London now rivals Berlin as the diplomatic center, and the purposes and plans of the British king are more dominant than those of any other European personality, says the Youth's Companion. Edward has devoted himself to the diplomacy of peace through the conservation of the rights of the powers and the removal of causes of irritation. He has allayed the century-long suspicion by Frenchmen of British purposes and has done much toward checking the development of jealous hostility on the part of his subjects toward Germany. Were it not for his pacific efforts, the anti-German agitators might before this have precipitated a conflict of arms.

In domestic affairs his influence has been exerted toward a better understanding between the contending factors, and he is recognized by all parties as an impartial arbitrator, seeking, above all things, the best interests of the empire.

No suggestion has been made for years that he is unfit, by intellectual equipment or by temperament, to be the head of the great nation.

At one time in his youth there were agitators against the monarchy who predicted that a revolution would ensue on the death of Victoria, and that the prince of Wales would never ascend the throne. But the idea of such a revolution disappeared long before he became king. When he finally did ascend the throne, he had fortunately come to the ripe maturity of his great abilities, with a full appreciation of the responsibilities and obligations of the head of a wide-spreading and powerful empire.

WHERE CHINESE SAILORS FAIL.

They Never Learn to Tie a Knot Properly, Says a Skipper.

"I don't know why it is," said the captain of the tramp steamer in South Brooklyn, sixty days out from Hongkong, according to the New York Sun, "but you can't teach any of those Chinese sailors there to tie a real knot.

"There isn't much need aboard a steamer for the rope knowledge that used to be so much the part of a fo'c'le training, but we do need splices and knots now and again just the same.

"Those Chinese there, who were signed on as A. B.'s, can do anything needed in the way of splices that would make an old tar green with tar than most of the men I've shipped, envy, and they'll fix up deadeyes better.

"But you can't get one of 'em to tie a right knot. Teach 'em again and again, they remember the lesson for half an hour. Next time there's a straight everyday knot to be tied the Chinese fo'c'le hand makes up the same old granny.

"Every child that tries to tie a knot makes a granny. This kind of a knot is made up by passing the ends around each other in the reverse direction, making the ends stand out at right angles. The ends should be wound around each other in the same direction. When they come out of the knot they should lie alongside the line on either side of the knot. Such a knot won't slip. But a Chinaman can't learn it for keeps—not he.

"The Lascar and Malay and Kanaka learn the right knot easily enough. In a storm that's one of the things we have to guard against if we have Chinese sailors."

It is hard to make both ends meet when the financial end is short.

A Fatal Temptation

THIS is a most charming little story of modern life, strongly drawn and clear and progressive from the start. The central figure is a bright, ambitious young doctor, who has a secret which becomes known to a siren-like creature named Marion Leigh. She wins the gratitude and confidence of young Laurence Blantire and upon this basis a powerful plot is brought into play.

Through perfectly reasonable circumstances the young doctor becomes the possessor of great wealth. He finds his life ideal in beautiful, trustful Magdalen D'Este. It is then that the wilful Marion Leigh exercises her baleful power and blights two lives through her cruel tyranny.

The lovers are parted, but fate weaves out the reward of loyalty and duty and the siren falls a victim to her own devices.

CHAPTER I.

The two doctors, although nearly of the same age, and living in the same place, had always more or less disliked each other. But when the shadow of death hung over the younger and less prosperous one, the elder man relented and became his friend. For many years Stephen Leigh had been the only doctor in Seafield. He had saved money enough to purchase Seafield House, a carriage, and a fine pair of horses. Just as he was thinking of advertising for a partner to undertake the more laborious work, a new doctor, to his great annoyance, came to the town. Dr. John Blantire, as he called himself, took a house just outside Seafield, named The Laurels; he had no carriage, nor did he seem to have much money; but he was clever. No one ever heard him laugh; he seemed to have but one pleasure in life, that was his love for his fair-haired little son, a boy of seven when John Blantire first came to Seafield.

For seven years Dr. Blantire fought his way; then all at once he seemed to grow tired of the struggle, and became seriously ill. During this time there had been a sharp contest between the two medical men. Stephen Leigh, so long established, so well known, seemed always to have the best of it; but of late some of the leading families in Seafield had sent for John Blantire, whose manner had a charm of its own. Then Stephen Leigh, spoke bitterly of his rival, and John Blantire, hearing of it, spoke more bitterly still. Matters went from bad to worse until John Blantire fell ill and sent for his rival to attend him. He was beyond all earthly help, as Dr. Leigh saw at once.

There was no rivalry then; all ill-feeling disappeared in the presence of death. Stephen Leigh, bending over him, told him that he would not live beyond sunset; but the look that came over the dying man's face was not of sorrow or regret.

"You will see to my boy," he said, feebly. "We have not been good friends, you and I. I have been in your way; but instinct tells me you are a just and honorable man; you have no son of your own, you will befriend mine."

Stephen Leigh promised that he would do so; he had always liked the boy—he had always longed for a son of his own, and in some measure this little lad would fill the blank.

When the promise was given, John Blantire raised his eyes to the doctor's face, and, for the first time, mentioned his wife.

"I am glad to die," he said. "I have not cared to live since I lost my wife. I loved her with all my heart. She was a gentlewoman, highly connected. She—she—was my patient, when quite a young girl. She—ah, poor child!—she loved me so—and I ran away with her! She died when Laurence was born. She had just one year of perfect happiness. I have been tired of life ever since; but, for the boy's sake, I have struggled on. Now I am worn out. You will take care of my son?"

"I will," answered Stephen Leigh; and, cold, practical, devoid of romance or sentiment, as he believed himself to be, he was greatly touched when father and son bid each other farewell.

Dr. Leigh carried out the dead man's instructions; the small sum of money which he had left was judiciously invested, and served to defray the expenses of the boy's education.

Stephen Leigh had always been one of the leading members of the pretty little sea-side town. He was a widower, with one daughter, a tall, handsome girl, the belle of the neighborhood, who vain as she was handsome, and who, young as she was, possessed no small opinion of her own merits.

To Seafield House, when he had finished his education, Laurence Carr Blantire came home. Dr. Leigh was not a generous man. His heart had been touched when his rival died; but he had not felt at all inclined to be lavish to his rival's son. He had set aside a small sum, barely sufficient for the purpose, to find Laurence in clothes and pocket-money; and it was arranged between them that Laurence should live with him, give him all the assistance in his power; while the doctor should teach him all that he knew, take him out to visit patients, and qualify him for his profession, with the prospect of taking him into partnership.

The poor people of Seafield knew no more pleasant or cheery sight than the young doctor's handsome face; he was welcomed everywhere. More than once, people who dared take the liberty had suggested jestingly to Dr. Leigh that it was not improbable a marriage might take place between his ward and his daughter. But the old man knew better. He understood Marion's character, and had no fear whatever that she would bestow her affections on so insignificant a person as an obscure country practitioner. These two—one a handsome young man, high-spirited, genial, and clever, the other a witty, accomplished, and beautiful girl—had lived together for two years without the smallest attempt at flirtation. The young doctor had never raised admiring eyes to Marion, and she had never deigned to think of him in the light of a possible suitor.

There was to be no nonsense, she had decreed to herself, when he came to live at Seafield House, and there had been no nonsense. Nor was the young student inclined to any. The calm, dark eyes that looked down on him from such a height were powerless to move him. The exquisite coloring of the handsome face, the grace of the tall figure, were alike unheeded by him. They never disagreed; they seldom ever spoke to each other. Marion prided herself on keeping the young man at a distance, and Laurence respected her evident wish that there should be as little as possible in common between them.

CHAPTER II.

Seafield House was beautifully situated. It stood on the summit of a hill that overlooked the sea. Along the front of the house ran a long, wide, old-fashioned veranda, with pillars of twisted iron. There, one morning, stood Laurence Blantire. He was looking over the sea with that longing and passion for change and travel that spring in the heart of youth at the sight of the broad expanse of ocean. And there Dr. Leigh found him, and took his seat in the veranda beside him.

"Laurence," said the doctor, slowly, "we have nothing very important in hand just now—no cases that require particular care and attention?"

"No," replied the young student; "there appears to be very little illness about."

"If there is nothing to prevent my doing so, I thought of going to London for three days," the doctor continued. "I should like to attend a meeting that takes place to-morrow. Do you think you could manage in my absence?"

"I think so, sir," replied Laurence.

"Then I shall go by the next train," Dr. Leigh said; "so that I have not many minutes to spare. By the way, Laurence, I do not interfere much with your pursuits and companions; but I was sorry to see you with Captain Walsh the other day."

"What is wrong with Captain Walsh, sir? He seems to me a good sort of fellow."

"Notwithstanding, if you will take my advice, you will have nothing to do with either Walsh or Squire Redfern; they are not fit associates for you. And I was sorry to hear that you had been seen with both of them."

"It is quite true, sir," returned Laurence, with an uneasy laugh. "I was with them three or four times last week; we played billiards. It is dull at times, and I am glad of a change. Captain Walsh is a droll fellow, and I must say that I enjoy his society."

The doctor looked with something like compassion at the young man beside him.

"Take care what you are doing, Laurence," he said. "Remember, I have warned you."

"I will remember, sir," he answered, his face flushing as he spoke. "They cannot do me any harm."

"I shall be late," the doctor remarked, hurriedly, taking out his watch and looking at it. "I meant to have called at the bank; but I shall not have time. Will you go for me, Laurence?"

"With pleasure, sir," the young man replied; and again the dark-blue eyes wandered to the sunlit sea; perhaps he, too, longed to be going away. The doctor took out a pocket-book.

"I want you to pay this $250 on account," he said. "You need not go to-day, if you are busy or pressed for time; but do not be later than Thursday with it. You will be careful, Laurence?"

"Yes, sir," said Laurence; and then the doctor rose, shook hands with him, and went his way, leaving the young man still standing and looking out over the sunlit waters, his mind filled with a hundred vain longings. By and by, with a sigh, he withdrew his gaze and turned into the house, making his way to the surgery.

Every detail of that day, from the time he spent in the veranda to the hour in which he returned to Seafield House, plunged into the very depths of despair, was vividly impressed upon Laurence Blantire's mind. As he quitted Seafield House, Miss Thornton, a poor relation of the doctor, who lived with him, and was supposed to help in the housekeeping, passed him with a smile.

"A beautiful morning, Mr. Blantire," she said. She had a profound admiration for the handsome young student.

He passed proud Marion Leigh, who stood in the entrance hall with a basket of flowers in her hand. He just glanced at the picture—the exquisite coloring of the handsome face, the morning-dress of primrose blue, the scarlet blooms that filled the pretty basket.

"Good-morning, Mr. Blantire," she said, haughtily. Her father's assistant was less to her than the dust beneath her feet; and she considered the time spent in speaking to him wasted. She hardly allowed her eyes to linger on him.

While he was on his way to St. Margaret's Bay, where one of the fishermen lay ill, he came to a turning where he saw a little pony-carriage, with a pair of cream-colored ponies, whose silver harness glittered in the sun. The carriage was empty, and a groom stood at the heads of the ponies.

Carelessly enough, Laurence wondered whose carriage it was—wondered why it was empty; and then, looking down the green lane, he saw a young girl, a girl slender and dainty, with a face of marvelous beauty and fairness, with hair that seemed to have caught the sunbeams captive, and large, dark, violet eyes. She did not look more than sixteen; and she had left the little pony-carriage for the purpose of gathering some woodbine, the perfume of which filled the air. She wore a dainty, green-and-white dress, and soft white plumes shaded her beautiful face.

She was intent upon gathering the woodbine, she neither saw nor heard him—and he stood still to gaze at her. He had seen nothing like her—and he had not dreamed that there was anything so fair in the world. The next minute she was seated in the little carriage, and had driven out of his sight.

The roll of the carriage wheels had died away, and still Laurence stood there, as if rooted to the spot. The summer morning had brought a new element into his life, his heart was beating as it had never done before. He had, for the first time, an idea of what the words "youth," "beauty" and "love" meant.

He had many patients still to see, and it was six o'clock before he reached Seafield House, tired and worn with a hard day's work. He dined alone; Miss Leigh had gone out. When dinner was over, he felt refreshed; but the house was lonely.

He was restless still; vague, beautiful dreams and possibilities were opening out to him; he wanted some one to whom he could speak; he could not bear solitude. Why should he, when the summer wind and the summer see seemed to woo him? He put aside his book and went out; and, as he strolled along the beach, he met suddenly, walking arm in arm together, Squire Redfern and Captain Walsh.

"We are just going to the Pemberton Arms for a game at billiards," said Squire Redfern. "Come with us, Laurence;" and, while he was thinking what excuse he could make to evade them, Captain Walsh laughed, and the sneer in his laugh annoyed the young fellow.

Captain Walsh did not like the young fellow; he hated him for his high principle and honor, his integrity and good temper; any one of these qualities seemed like a reproach to him, who had none of them. Squire Redfern, on the contrary, appreciated his honest simplicity of character, and always enjoyed an hour or two with him.

"We must not play for high stakes," said the captain, with another sneer, as they gathered round the billiard-table at the Pemberton Arms.

"I will teach him that I am no lad," thought the young student. "I will play, and I will beat him." Then he turned to the squire. "The doctor is from home," he said. "It is dull at Seafield House, being alone, and I shall be very pleased to spend a few hours with you."

The good spirits who watch over the souls of the tempted might have wept over him as he walked away between his two false friends.

Platter Case Settled

Late Monday the Platter damage suit came to a sudden end in the Steuben circuit court by the parties in the litigation getting together thus stopping what would have been a nasty affair.

While in the act of empaneling the jury Attorney John W. Baxter representing the plaintiff and Judge J. H. Rose, the defendant, withdrew and negotiated a settlement to which the parties agreed. By it the plaintiff daughter, Myrtle, backed by her mother, agreed to pay Mr. Platter the sum of $1,000, assume the mortgage of $2,000 and interest on his 80 acre farm in Concord township and take the farm.

This means Mr. Platter will have to deed the farm to the daughter at a consideration of about $3,300. He considers the farm worth about $4,000 but they place a higher value on it so that he is satisfied that he paid practically nothing in the settlement while they look upon the deal as several hundred dollars in their favor.

Be that as it may the matter is adjusted, the parties are satisfied and a very obnoxious stench buried for should the trial have been prosecuted the testimony would have been sensationally racy and extremely undesirable. The parties in the action and all of the witnesses should return thanks over the outcome as well as the community involved.—Dispatch.

Commencement Proceedings.

The second Annual Commencement of the Spencerville High School was held in the Lutheran Church of this place Friday night, May 13. All decorations and arrangements were in honor of the class and in harmony with the class colors, red and white, relieved by green palms. The class motto, "Non Scholae sed vitae," in red and white together with the various class pendants added to the effect. These arrangements made a beautiful setting for the splendid program given by the class assisted by others. Musical numbers were solos by Mrs. Princess Rectenwal, Winfield Pervines and Frank Baltz, with chorus by Grabill male quartett. Piano duet by the Misses Bessie Hart and Opal Miller. Besides the class orations two of the main features of the program were the Hamilton "Holton" Orchestra and address by Supt. Coe. The orchestra alone was worth the price of the evening, the music was splendid and they will be secured again for the eighth grade commencement June 21. All that have heard them will hear them again and those that do not will miss a rare treat. Much credit is due the worthy trustee through whose kindly interest the class of '10 were enabled to render this most splendid commencement program.

High School Banquet

The graduating class were splendidly entertained to a banquet Saturday night, May 14, at the K. of P. hall. The Pythian Sisters served a three course supper.

The table decorations were in honor of the classes, Red and White, Old Rose and Black, Green and Gold. Rev. Byrt of the M. E. Church proved himself a worthy and able Toast Master. Toasts were given by Miss Vera Silberg, Miss Blanch O'Brien, Miss Pearl Pervines, Mr. Robert Beams, Miss Clara Shull, Mr. Alva Place, Mr. Stanley Shutt, Mr. Fred Steward, Miss Bessie Hart and Miss Alda Elson. A program consisting of music by Miss Bessie Hart, solos by Miss Pearl Pervines and George Hart and a reading by Miss Ruth Gratz, was rendered after the first tables. This banquet was the first affair of the sort ever given in Spencerville and we feel that it was a decided success, so much so that it will not be the last. An Alumni organization is contemplated.

NOTES

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. O'Brien of Churubusco were in attendance at the commencement Friday evening.

Miss Emily Cook, of Harlan, was entertained in the home of W. G. Erick Saturday and Sunday.

Queer Things in Law.

A curious sidelight has been thrown upon the deceased wife's sister act by an incident which occurred in Aldrincham, England, the London correspondent of the New York Sun says. A wedding was arranged to take place in a non-conformist chapel in the presence of a civil registrar. When the bridegroom, who was a widower, arrived with the bride-elect, a question was put to him by the officiating minister the answer to which revealed the fact that the bride was the daughter of his deceased wife's sister. He explained that in view of the alteration in the law he had assumed that if marriage with his wife's sister was legal, marriage with his wife's sister's daughter would be equally valid.

Though he had logic on his side, the wedding had to be abandoned, as it was pointed out that, though it was now legal to marry one's deceased wife's sister, the table of affinity still remains unaltered in other respects, and a marriage with a wife's niece is illegal.

Nan—Certainly not. "Love one another" is a general command. If it had been "that ye love each other," I'm not sure, bu—you stop that, right now! —Chicago Tribune.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

WHERE DO "YOU" LIVE?

By Rev. Frank Oliver Hall, D. D.

Think on these things.—Philippians, 4:8.

What things? Things that are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, attractive, virtuous, honorable. Upon these things, says Paul, "let your thoughts dwell."

Thoughts are things as much as brick walls and paved streets. There is such a thing as unsanitary thinking as surely as there is such a thing as unsanitary plumbing. There is mental atmosphere conducive to health as much as sunshine and fresh air, and there is a miasma of the soul which is as deadly as the malaria of the Dismal Swamp. To select a spiritual dwelling place where the atmosphere is heavy with hate and poisonous with passion; to pull up the shutters of despair and exclude the sunshine of hope; to close the windows of the heart and exclude the light of faith and the warmth of love is as deadly as it would be to build one's house in a stagnant marsh or to live in a dark, unventilated cellar.

Notice that Paul writes as if men had the power to select their own intellectual dwelling places. So they have. Physically most men must dwell where circumstance ordains. But the poorest man may have a dwelling place for his mind more desirable than the region in which many a millionaire is content to reside, in an atmosphere of the soul filled with unclean odors. Every man has within himself the power to change his mental dwelling place. The normal man has power to direct his thoughts as he has power to direct his hand. By the exercise of such power he may win success, character, righteousness.

The mind is master of the body. Experiment demonstrates that thought pumps the blood into the head or hands or feet, according as one directs his mind, and that emotions, controllable by the will, may refresh or poison the physical system as they are good or bad.

Paul has given us not only the secret of health, but the secret of happiness. Not the dwelling place of the body, but the dwelling place of the thoughts determines whether one's life shall be filled with joy or with misery. Some of the most miserable people live in mansions, dine sumptuously, dress luxuriously. Some of the happiest people live in very humble circumstances. The difference is entirely mental. One man is miserable in spite of his fine physical circumstances, another is happy in poverty because of his mental dwelling place.

Moreover, Paul indicates here the road to success. More people fail to achieve their worthy ambitions because they cultivate whong mental habits than for any other cause whatever. Life is full of splendid opportunities for the man who will seize them, and all the forces of the universe help on the man whose mind dwells in faith and courage and confidence and indomitable hope; and all the forces of the universe set against the man who dwells in a mental atmosphere of doubt and despondency, suspicion of himself and his fellow men.

Finally, thought means conduct. What you do depends upon what you think. Conduct is first in the mind, afterward in the body. Beware of wrong thinking. Beware of holding evil pictures before the imagination. Do not play with evil even in your thoughts, for what you think will register itself ultimately and inevitably in what you do. On the other hand, one can overcome all the evils with which his inner self is beset by exercising the will in the direction of right thinking. If you would do the things you ought to do and leave undone the things you ought not to do, then look to your thoughts, and in "whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, attractive, virtuous, honorable, there let your thoughts dwell."

THE WITNESS OF THE SPIRIT.

By Rev. J. E. MacGuffin, A. M.

He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself. I. John 5:10.

A Christian experience is a conscious change in our life which brings love, joy and peace. This is a personal matter and comes to us through our conviction of spiritual need and by an unswerving loyalty to the rules of the divine life as revealed in the Bible. If we live in obedience to these rules we will certainly feel the touch of the divine spirit that inspired them.

When we realize that Jesus is the Son of God and is also our Brother and best Friend there comes into the heart an inspiration that transforms our character and gives new meaning to life. The duties of life that were once hard become easy. We have experienced a change of heart. God is Father now. He speaks to us in the beauties of nature as well as in His holy promises. We talk to Him in prayer and the burdens of life are removed. We commune with Him and we feel the touch of His presence. This is Christian experience.

We know things only when we get where they are and use them for the purposes they were designed to accomplish. By adopting the gospel rule of life and by making it a vital force in conduct we come into fellowship with divine inspirations keenly felt and highly prized. The witness of the Spirit as an inner testimony of love, joy, and peace can be easily distinguished from any other influence that comes into our life. This evidence of spiritual conditions comes only to the Christian believer. The Apostle John says: "He that believeth on the Son hath the witness in Himself." Again he says, "Hereby we know that we dwell in Him and He in us because He has given us of His Spirit."

The fruits of the Spirit are manifested first to the person in whom the Spirit dwells, then to his friends and neighbors. Sinners can discern th: Christian Spirit in the people who are blessed of God. Now, if worldly people can see the spirit of Christ in the character of Christians, certainly Christians can feel the Spirit in them that convinces the world that they have been with Christ and learned of Him. The religious nature of man is very sensitive to the Divine touch. We are not only conscious of our thoughts and of what we are doing, but we are also conscious of the kind of influence exercised upon mind and conscience. The definite feeling produced by thinking upon material facts is not more evident in our life than the influence of spiritual impressions that come to us when we contemplate the hopes of the gospel.

By taking notice of these facts we can locate ourselves in our Christian experience as certainly as we can in any other field of thought or work. We have a personal relation to everything we do. Thinking and working are the processes by which we get rewards in all fields of effort, the religious field not excepted.

If we accept the gospel rules of conduct and make them binding upon ourselves in the adjustment of our social conditions we shall have a Christian experience because we are meeting the demands of the promise: "If ye Jo the will of my Father ye shall know of the doctrine." The Christian life is a busy life in faith and good works. We believe the promise; we put our faith into practice and there comes conscious blessing.

Personal faith in Jesus as a divine Saviour never fails of spiritual results. It dispels doubt and opens the door of spiritual joys that are bright and restful in the hopes of immortal life. It is man's inheritance and all should possess it. It is a fearful mistake to lose it. Conviction for sin is the sinner's experience; forgiveness for sin is the Christian's experience. The latter state of life is just as manifest as the former. Sin brings sorrow. Forgiveness brings joy and gladness.

Prayer is a personal matter and it never fails in good results to the one who prays. We may not get what we ask. It might not be best that we should. But the loving spirit in which we pray will be of great spiritual value to us because of the feeling we have that God is pleased with what we have done. Our field of religious work may not be in behalf of institutional charities. There are spiritual needs as well as temporal needs. The evidence of answers to our prayers may be within our hearts and the world may see in us the the results of prayer as manifestly as in any institution whose support may come in answer to prayer. Our character is the great institution through which God reaches the irreligious world. Our personal Christian experience is the strongest argument we can make to win the world to Christ.

HYMNS AND THEIR AUTHORS

THE SOUL'S WARFARE.
By George Heath.

[This hymn atatined a remarkable popularity long before its author was known. George Heath was a Unitarian minister, born and educated in England, who was deprived of his charge on the ground of unfitness. His hymn still is one of the most popular in the meetings of the churches to-day. In the smaller meetings, such as those for prayer, it is seldom that the session passes without the singing of this hymn.]

My soul, be on thy guard,
Ten thousand foes arise;
The hosts of sin are pressing hard
To draw thee from the skies.

O, watch, and fight, and pray!
The battle ne'er give o'er;
Renew it boldly every day,
And help divine implore.

Ne'er think the victory won,
Nor lay thine armor down;
The work of faith will not be done
Till thou obtain thy crown.

Fight on, my soul, till death
Shall bring thee to thy God!
He'll take thee at thy parting breath,
Up to his blest abode.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't forget that a man's faith is his real fortune.

Don't forget that love gives away in order not to lose.

Don't try to irrigate this desert by preaching for tears.

Don't forget that a little sunshiny practice is worth a lot of moonshiny poetry.

Don't fail to observe that the more a man hugs himself the smaller he becomes.

Don't fail to learn that fewer despairing Christians makes fewer doubting people.

Don't expect success when trying to listen to God by turning a deaf ear to men.

Don't fail to observe that the piety that is only skin deep is likely to affect the lungs.

Don't overlook the fact that love lifts up only when it is not aware that it is bending down.

Don't fail to note that any kind of thoughtless charity generally turns into the heartless kind.

Jests from the Jokesmiths

Diagnosis.

"Do you see that man going along with his head in the air, sniffing with his nose?"

"Yes; I know him."

"I suppose he believes in taking in the good, pure ozone."

"No; he's hunting for a motor garage, I believe."—Tit-Bits.

His Reason.

"How did you come to leave your wife in Paris?"

"She couldn't decide whether she wanted three yards and a half or four yards, and I got tired of waiting."—Cleveland Leader.

A Practical Curriculum.

"I believe that girl is in earnest about going in for dramatic work."

"Studying Shakespeare, is she?"

Decree Pending.

Census Taker—Have you a husband, madam?

The Lady of the House—That is a matter the court hasn't decided yet.

Beyond the Limit.

"Well," moralized Mr. Stoplate, "we are here to-day and gone to-morrow."

"Yes," answered Miss Boarde, glancing at the clock, "I've noticed that about you."—Exchange.

Poor Work.

"I went into politics poor and I came out as poor as I went in."

"Poor work from beginning to end, old chap."—Toledo Blade.

A Sense of Security.

"Aren't you afraid the comet will hit the earth?" asked the timid man.

"No," replied Mr. Sirius Barker. "After experimenting with a golf ball I've come to the conclusion that a little spherical object like the earth is perfectly safe. Even if the comet tried to hit it it would probably toozle."—Washington Star.

High Finance.

"Why do you keep asking people for change for a dollar, and then asking other people to give you a dollar for your change?"

"Well, somebody may make a mistake in change, some time. And, believe me, it won't be me."—Cleveland Leader.

The Reason.

Guest at a Restaurant—Excuse me, sir, can you let me come to the telephone? You have been there twenty minutes without saying a word.

"Sorry, sir, but I'm talking to my wife."—Pele Mele.

Bachelors, Take Warning.

Hobbs—Alienists say that single men are much more liable to insanity than married.

Dobbs—Sure they are! Single men are always in danger of going crazy over some woman.—Boston Transcript.

A Salvage Enterprise.

The Rooster—What are you ladies trying to do, drink the trough dry?

At the Servants' Ball.

"And your mistress is sitting up till you get home?"

"She must. My dress fastens down the back."—Meggendorfer Blaetter.

Hard Luck.

Joe—How's things, Bill?

Bill—Rotten! Lost three dogs an' the old woman; an' one of them was worth $5.—Kansas City Journal.

What He Received.

Jack—So your efforts to win the rich heiress were fruitless, eh?"

Tom—Fruitless! Oh, no! I got the lemon.—Boston Transcript.

The Evil.

Griggs—You talk a lot, Briggs; now what have you got against married life?

Briggs—What have I got against it? Why, man, take this terrible divorce evil; it flourishes among married people exclusively.—Boston Transcript.

How He Handled Them.

A man, too busy with coughing and blowing and sneezing to answer any questions, hung a card over his desk on which was printed the following information:

"Yes; I've got an awful cold."
"I don't know how I got it.
"No, I didn't take them off.
"I didn't sit by an open window.
"I didn't leave off my overcoat.
"I haven't had a doctor yet.
"No; it's not the grip; it's just a plain cold.
"I've taken everything under the sun.
"Yes; I'm willing to try it if it helped you.
"Yes, indeed. I hope so too.
"Oh, I'll be careful.
"Good-by."—Boston Herald.

The Other Way.

"You may pay me $100 down and $25 a week," said the physician, offhand.

"Sounds as if I were buying an automobile," the patient said.

"No," said the doctor, thoughtlessly, "I am."—Buffalo Express.

Warped.

Mary Jane (to gentleman with the bow legs, who has called to see her master)—For 'eving's sake, sir, do stand back from the fire; your legs is warping most 'orrible.—Exchange.

Such a Difference.

"Your daughter plays very sweetly on the piano."

"That's my wife playing."

"I know it."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Sure Thing.

"How can these rich girls allow themselves to be won by men who are only after their money?"

"How is a girl to know? A man can put considerable fervor into his wooing when it's a case of marriage or work."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Something New.

"Post committed suicide because he was overworked."

"Pooh! He couldn't have been so very busy or he wouldn't have found time to do it in."—Life.

Just Practicing.

"Wot yer fishin' dere fer?"

"Jest fer practice, Willie; jest fer practice."

Shop Talk.

Barber (about to cut customer's hair)—Do you want much off, sir?

Mr. Einstein (absently)—Vot discoundt vill you make for cash?—Puck.

Good Jumper.

She—I'm such a timid little thing you know; I jump at the slightest thing.

He—Yes; you'd jump at a proposal, wouldn't you?

Sufficient Responsibility.

"So you don't want to vote?" said the suffragette.

"Gracious, no!" replied Mrs. McGudley. "It's bad enough to have your husband blaming you for everything that goes wrong about the house without being held responsible for politics."—Washington Star.

Same Old Story.

"How shall I break the news to my parents that I have failed in my exams?"

"Merely telegraph them: "Examination over. Nothing new!"—Fliegende Blaetter.

Her Reason.

He—Would you rather be beautiful or clever?

She—Beautiful, I think. You see, there are lots of stupid men, but only a few blind ones.—Boston Transcript.

Light Weight.

The Music Teacher—Your boy is improving, but when he runs the scales I have to watch him pretty closely.

Mrs. Shortweight—Just like his father. He used to be in the grocery business.

How He Figured.

"Here you are trying to tell me that you're half finished with that new artesian well and you just started on it this morning."

"That's all right. I'm going on the theory that well begun is half done."—St. Louis Star.

A Question.

"Say, maw."

"Yes, son."

"Where do the mumps and measles go when I haven't got 'em?"—Kansas City Journal.

You Like Pictures.

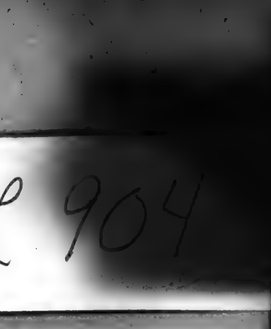
One of the most marvelous inventions is that of reproducing in the actual colors the masterpieces of the greatest artists of all time. Another of the greatest inventions of the past half century is Easy Task soap, the soap that cuts laundry labor in half and does the washing better than any other. Twenty-five Easy Task soap wrappers and a two-cent stamp will bring to you from the manufacturers a beautiful picture, free, ready for framing.

Love and Finance.

Omaha folks are telling of the ardent wooing of a belle of that town by an Italian count, whom the young lady met last year while touring the continent with her mother. The count hastened to America soon after the arrival home of the object of his attention and, presenting himself at the Omaha office of the father, unburdened himself of his sentiments.

"I lofe her! I lofe her!" he exclaimed dramatically. "I desire ver' mucha to marry her!"

The old man eyed the titled person narrowly. "Well, count," he finally asked in a resigned way, "what are your lowest terms?"—St. Paul Pioneer-Press.



WESTERN CANADA

What Prof. Shaw, the Well-Known Agriculturist, Says About It:

"I would sooner raise cattle in Western Canada than in the corn belt of the United States. Feed is cheaper and climate better for the purpose. Your market will improve faster than your farmers will produce the supplies. Wheat can be grown up to the 60th parallel 160 miles north of the International boundary. Your vacant land will be taken at a rate beyond present conception. We have enough people in the United States alone who want homes to take up this land." Nearly

70,000 Americans

will enter and make their homes in Western Canada this year. 1909 produced another large crop of wheat, oats and barley, in addition to which the cattle exports was an important item. Cattle raising, dairying, mixed farming and grain growing in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Free homestead and pre-emption areas, as well as lands held by railway and land companies, will provide homes for millions.

Browning.

Browning lent Lord Coleridge one of his works to read, and afterward, meeting the poet, the lord chief justice said to him: "What I could understand I heartily admired, and parts ought to be immortal. But as to much of it I really could not tell whether I admired it or not, because for the life of me I could not understand it."

Browning replied: "If a reader of your caliber understands 10 per cent of what I write I think I ought to be content."

WOMEN'S ILLS.

Many women who suffer with backache, bearing-down pain, headaches and nervousness do not know that these ailments are usually due to trouble with the kidneys. Doan's Kidney Pills remove the cause.

Mrs. M. McFadden, Iowa City, Iowa, says: "I would have died had it not been for Doan's Kidney Pills. For years I suffered from terrible backaches. I gradually grew worse until I had to take to my bed, where I lay unconscious. I began using Doan's Kidney Pills after the doctors had failed to help me and was completely cured."

Women Wear Nightcaps.

Hush-h-h! It is quite possible you know it already, but it is a secret just the same, and it never would do to have it talked about; but the fact is that all we girls are going back to the fashion of our grandmothers and—yes, wearing nightcaps. But the nightcap of to-day is a very different affair from those that were worn fifty or sixty years ago. Those were frankly ugly, usually made of some coarse and heavy material, which covered the head completely, extending over the ears and under the chin. They were worn for warmth, for there was no steam heat at that date, and bedrooms often were chilly. The nightcaps of to-day are beautiful affairs of laces and silks and all kinds of dainty weaves, the New York Press says, and, though the man who buys one might be inclined to doubt it, they have the reason of their existence in the motives of strict economy. With the elaborate styles of coiffure that now are in fashion women find they can fritter away a most unwelcome proportion of their pin money on their hairdressers, and they have taken to nightcaps so that after their hair has been fixed up for a dinner or theater party in the evening they can save it from being mussed up at night and preserve the effect of a single visit to the hairdresser for at least two or three days.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Several thousand rainbow and brook trout have been sent to St. Paul from the hatcheries in Michigan and were turned loose in Mill creek. The fish will be large enough in another year to enter larger streams.

Wm. Geake 33, of Fort Wayne, has received notice that he has been elected member of the Supreme Council of Masons of Italy, effective since March 22. Geake is the head of the Scottish Rite Masons in Indiana.

A conscience letter has just been received by Charles C. Evans, living northeast of Tipton. It is from some person who does not sign his name, but who says he was a schoolmate of Mr. Evans years ago, and that he had stolen a slate pencil from him. The writer inclosed two two-cent stamps to pay for the pencil.

While sinking an air shaft for the Atherton mine, south of Clinton, workmen came on a tree imbedded at 108 feet below the surface. The tree appeared to be a beech and was apparently well preserved, but when cut in two had almost the consistency of soap stone. Yet the bark and the fibers of wood showed plainly.

Jackson Younger, a prominent farmer living east of Bedford, has an eight-year-old brood mare that gave birth to twin mule colts a few days ago. The incident is an unusual one, and Mr. Younger says that to his knowledge this has has occurred but once before in Lawrence county. The twin mules are large and healthy and doing well.

A year ago Edward Ruszel was engaged in baling hay on the Garrison farm, near Greensburg, and lost his coat. Dr. S. B. Hitt purchased a bale of hay last week from a Greensburg merchant and upon cutting it open found a coat, with pipe, tobacco and matches in the pockets. It was identified as the coat lost by Ruszel twelve months ago.

Probably no other American girl was ever accorded a more patriotic welcome that that given Miss Edna Schwarts, of Fort Wayne, as she appeared over the side of the battle ship Virginia at Norfolk, Va., and was later joined in wedlock with Julian G. Wiggenton, a petty officer on the ship. The wedding was performed in the quarter deck of the battle ship under a huge wedding bell made of flags and smilax.

William Swalley, aged 60, an inmate of the Kosciusko County Infirmary, is dead. Swalley had been teasing a bull and caused it to become enraged. With lowered head the animal struck the man in the chest and knocked him to the ground, where it continued to gore him. Other inmates hurried to the scene and drove the bull away, but not before Swalley was fatally hurt. He died of his injuries. Swalley came to the infirmary six years ago.

The Common Council of Columbus has decided that that city will have a safe and sane Fourth of July this year. A city ordinance adopted in 1869, which provides that it shall be unlawful to discharge any kind of fireworks or explosives in any street, alley or any other public place, has been dug up and the police have already received instructions to enforce the ordinance. Dealers have been advised not to lay in a supply of fireworks and explosives.

Carl Cotton, the five-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Cotton, of Terre Haute, who suffered a fracture of the skull when his grandmother, Mrs. Emma Deitzen, of Anderson, accidentally dropped a chair on his head, has regained consciousness. The child and his mother are visiting Mrs. Emma Deitzen, who preparatory to house cleaning, decided to discard an old chair. She threw it from the second story window just below which the child was playing.

The Northern Indiana Fraternal Congress of the Tribe of Ben-Hur, in session at Fort Wayne, elected officers for next year as follows: Past chief, John Rohiman, of Fort Wayne; chief, C. F. Laflare, of Garrett; judge, Lillie Stevens, of Tipton; teacher, Addie M. Snyder, of Columbia City; scribe, C. M. Hunt, of Kokomo; captain, John R. Orr, of Fort Wayne; guide, A. R. Smith, of Marion; keeper of inner gate, U. S. Kress, of Decatur; keeper of outer gate, J. N. Schwartz, of Elkhart, and pianist, Belle Roos, of Avilla.

Mrs. Laura Myers has on her farm, near Cambridge City, a Barred Plymouth Rock hen and a Poland China sow, both occupying the same quarters. The hen made her nest in the pen and prepared to set, but after a day or so the sow beat her by showing a litter of eight little pigs. The hen then adopted the pigs. She roosts near them at night and scratches for them in the day time. No mother hen could be more proud or attentive to a brood of little chicks. The sow pays but little attention to the hen and all live as one happy family.

Clark Wallace, aged 35 years, who has been Vincennes agent for a sewing machine company, committed suicide by taking carbolic acid. Dan Frederick, aged 50, committed suicide there in the same way.

John McCrea, a mail carrier on rural route No. 1 out of New Richmond, has a black Minorca rooster that has four legs, the two extra legs extending from behind. They are five inches long. The rooster is now more than a year old.

Realizing that he was gradually losing his sight, George Eigenbrodt, aged 50, committed suicide at Evansville by hanging himself.

Mrs. James Dullinger, aged 50 years, alone in a farm house near Warsaw, was burned to death a few days ago. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Mrs. A. V. Graves, of Ninevah, sold fifty hens to a huckster for over $1.00 each. During the present spring she has sold $210.75 worth of poultry. She raises Plymouth Rocks.

West Connersville is the name that P. L. Heeb has given to a 20-acre tract which has been added to the city of Connersville. Building in the new suburb has already begun.

A golden eagle, measuring seven feet from tip to tip, was shot and killed on the farm of Dr. Misher, near Mechanicsburg. The bird has been turned over to a taxidermist.

The Postal Telegraph Company has a representative in Newcastle seeking a location for an office and it is announced the company will soon build into the city and compete with the Western Union.

William Brooking, for ten years sexton at Green Mill Cemetery in Bedford, has tendered his resignation to become effective June 1. During these years of service he has buried eight hundred residents of that vicinity.

Presence of mind saved Mrs. Charles Chandler from being burned to death while she was attempting to fill the tank of a gasoline stove at her home in Newcastle. The woman's clothing caught fire and she snatched a heavy rug from the floor, wrapped it about her head and upper portions of her body and then rolled on the floor, extinguishing the flames.

A company of Indianapolis men have purchased the 103 acres, comprising Spring Lake Park, five miles west of Greenfield, on the traction line, and propose to erect summer cottages and expend considerable money in beautifying the place. The lake, at present, occupies three acres. The farm was purchased from C. E. Mathew, of St. Petersburg, Fla., formerly of Indianapolis.

A strange member of the bird kingdom is on exhibition in Owensville. The bird was picked up a few minutes after it bumped into a telephone wire and fell to the ground. In size the bird resembles a pigeon. It is slate colored and the feathers are darkest on head and neck. The forehead and and front are brilliant red. The legs are long. The bill is long and needle-like. The bird's wings are unusually long. As yet the bird has refused to fly and apparently has lost control of its legs.

Contracts for twenty-five bridges have been let by the Gibson county commissioners, fifteen to be of concrete arches and ten of steel, at a total cost of $17,026.36. The A. E. & W. Construction Company, of Evansville, obtained seven of the concrete bridges on its bid of $3,973; Frank Duncan, of Princeton, got eight concrete and five steel bridges for $9,500.36 and the Vincennes Bridge Company got contracts on five steel bridges at $3,563. Other bids were submitted by the Attica Bridge Company, and George M. Chenley, of Indianapolis.

Christopher Brummett, a farmer living south of Nashville, caught a nine-pound catfish a few nights ago in a peculiar way. He says that he was fishing with two bamboo poles, one of them being set about twenty feet form where he was standing. He got bites on both hooks at the same time and pulled up the one nearest him. After having the fish out of the water the other pole was being pulled into the creek. He hurried to it and caught a catfish weighing two pounds. He had left a catfish ten inches long on the other hook, and when he returned to it there was a nine-pounder on it. The larger fish had swallowed the smaller and was caught on the horns of the ten inch catfish. Mr. Brummett says the hook was not caught in the large fish.

Mrs. Z. H. Hauser, of Columbus, has presented the city with a portrait of Smith Jones, first mayor of the city of Columbus, and in accepting the portrait the City Council has started a movement to collect the pictures of all the former mayors of that place. Mr. Jones, in addition to being the first mayor of Columbus after it was incorporated as a city, was a delegate to the State convention that resulted in the "new Constitution of 1852." During the Civil War he was selected by the County Commissioners to handle and distribute the bounty money in Bartholomew County and such was his probity that he was not required to give bond, although he handled $130,546. Following the Civil War he was appointed collector of internal revenue for his district. He died in 1878, aged 65 years.

Mr. and Mrs. David Hockman, of Deer Creek Township, Miami County, have been married for more than seventy years. Mr. Hockman is 93 years old and his wife is three years his senior.

Charles Smith, a salesman of Cambridge City, was painfully hurt when an automobile he was driving collided with a Pennsylvania construction train. The accident occurred at a grade crossing six miles east of Cambridge City.

BLAZING WOODS PERIL FARMS AND VILLAGES

Grand Marais, Minn., Reported by Wireless to Be Doomed by Flames.

WIND SHIFT AIDS ALSTON, MICH.

Farmers in Wisconsin and Michigan Battle Blazes to Save Their Homes.

A wireless message from Grand Marais, Minn., received at Duluth, said that forest fires were bearing down on the village and that it seemed doomed. The operator said it was his last message, as the fire was getting so close that he would have to abandon his tower and seek safety. Grand Marais is on the north shore of Lake Superior and is an old trading post. So far as is known, no lives have been lost. Wild animals are being driven to the lake shore by the fires. Reports received indicate that the entire northeastern part of Minnesota is smoldering, that hundreds of men are out fighting the fires, and that many villages are threatened with destruction.

A desperate battle is being waged by farmers and miners against forest fires in four different districts within a fifty mile radius of Houghton, Mich. They are trying to save a number of small settlements from destruction by the fast spreading flames.

The woods are dry and a brisk wind is carrying the fire from tree to tree with alarming rapidity. A change in the direction of the wind saved the town of Alston, which had been threatened. At L'Anse village several hundred residents quit labor and business and by means of trenches and back fires worked to arrest the progress of the fire toward the town. The Baraga County infirmatory, a few miles from L'Anse, was threatened by the fire, and only valiant fire fighting saved the place from destruction. The inmates were taken to private residences. Fires are raging in Ontonagon and Keweenaw Counties, and also near Alloues, Ahmeek, and Gay. The loss of ties, poles, and other cut timber is great, while much standing timber is fire swept. Fires are reported between Laurium and Torch Lake.

The entire country to the west of Washburn, Wis., is being swept by forest fires and damage running up into thousands of dollars is reported from the stricken district. The great blueberry fields west of that city have been destroyed. Hundreds of miles of country is fire swept. The smoke is so thick that the view of the sun has been shut out for days. Forest fires have leveled the south half of the town of Mosinee, Marathon County. Just before wire communication was cut off word came that a number of buildings had been destroyed, including ten residences, four stores, two saloons, postoffice and a sawmill.

THREE LEGISLATORS INDICTED.

Browne, Wilson and Link Hit by Bribery Probe in Illinois.

Indictments against three members of the Illinois General Assembly—one charging bribery and two charging perjury—were voted the other day, by the special grand jury, in Chicago, which has been delving into the legislative bribery scandal.

The three true bills, which cover both phases of the confessions of Representative Charles A. White of O'Fallon, and H. J. C. Beckemeyer of Carlyle, that they received $1,000 each for voting for William Lorimer for United States Senator and that later they shared in a legislative "jack-pot" that was split up in St. Louis, were returned against the following:

Representative Lee O'Neil Browne of Ottawa, minority leader of the House, indicted for bribery on fifteen counts setting up that he paid to Representative Charles A. White $350 in Chicago as part of a $1,000 bribe for voting for Senator Lorimer. Bond fixed at $15,000.

Representative Robert E. Wilson of Chicago, indicted for willful and corrupt perjury for swearing before the grand jury that he did not hand any money to anybody in St. Louis July 15, 1909, the day it is alleged the "jack pot" was divided. Bail fixed at $15,000.

Representative Michael S. Link of Mitchell, indicted for perjury for swearing before the grand jury that he was not in St. Louis July 15, 1909, and did not meet Robert E. Wilson in that city on that day. Bail fixed at $5,000.

The true bills were returned to Judge Kersten by the grand jurors and capiases were at once issued for the three legislators.

A fourth indictment, having no connection with the charges concerning Senator Lorimer's election and the "jackpot" distribution, was returned against William J. Henley, former president, and at one time vice president and general manager of the Chicago and Western Indiana Railroad, charging him with embezzling and converting to his own use $28,000 of the road's money.

New Court Open June 7.

The Court of Customs Appeals in Washington has set June 7 as the day for beginning the hearing of cases on its docket, of which there are already between forty and fifty. The jurisdiction of the tribunal covers appeals from the board of general appraisers.

Her Scalp Itched Intolerably.

"Just about two years ago, some form of humor appeared on my scalp. The beginning was a slight itching but it grew steadily worse until, when I combed my hair, the scalp became raw and the ends of the comb-teeth would be wet with blood. Most of the time there was an intolerable itching, in a painful, burning way, very much as a bad, raw burn, if deep, will itch and smart when first beginning to heal. Combing my hair was positive torture. My hair was long and tangled terribly because of the blood and scabs. This continued growing worse and over half my hair fell out. I was in despair, really afraid of becoming totally bald.

"Sometimes the pain was so great that, when partially awake, I would scratch the worst places so that my finger-tips would be bloody. I could not sleep well and, after being asleep a short time, that awful stinging pain would commence and then I would wake up nearly wild with the torture. A neighbor said it must be salt rheum. Having used Cuticura Soap merely as a toilet soap before, I now decided to order a set of the Cuticura Remedies—Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills. I used them according to directions for perhaps six weeks, then left off, as the disease seemed to be eradicated, but toward spring, eighteen months ago, there was a slight return of the scalp humor. I commenced the Cuticura treatment at once, so had very little trouble. On my scalp I used about one-half a cake of Cuticura Soap and half a box of Cuticura Ointment in all. The first time I took six or seven bottles of Cuticura Pills and the last time three bottles—neither an expensive or tedious treatment. Since then I have had no scalp trouble of any kind. Standing up, with my hair unbound, it comes to my knees and had it not been for Cuticura I should doubtless be wholly bald.

"This is a voluntary, unsolicited testimonial and I take pleasure in writing it, hoping my experience may help someone else. Miss Lillian Brown, R. F. D. 1, Liberty, Me., Oct. 29, 1909."

"Worn to a Frazzle."

When President Roosevelt popularized the word "frazzle" he reminded lots of women of the only expression that tells how they feel after the work of washday or housecleaning with common old yellow laundry soap. Easy Task laundry soap—the hard, white, pure, quick-action soap—cuts the work square in two and keeps women from getting frazzled out.

Not Sisters

Now and again you see two women passing down the street who look like sisters. You are astonished to learn that they are mother and daughter, and you realize that a woman at forty or forty-five ought to be at her finest and fairest. Why isn't it so?

The general health of woman is so intimately associated with the local health of the essentially feminine organs that there can be no red cheeks and round form where there is female weakness.

Women who have suffered from this trouble have found prompt relief and cure in the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It gives vigor and vitality to the organs of womanhood. It clears the complexion, brightens the eyes and reddens the cheeks.

No alcohol, or habit-forming drugs is contained in "Favorite Prescription." Any sick woman may consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free. Every letter is held as secredly confidential, and answered in a plain envelope. Address: World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N. Y.

Brown replies

MR EDITOR:— I noticed an article in your last week's issue copied from the Lutheran Observer, purported to be a report of a debate recently held at Harlan, Ind., between Mr. Mohler and myself, the article was signed by Prof. F J. Smith, Superintendent of the Harlan Public Schools. If the report had been simply a biased report I should have given it no attention, knowing that people are sometimes so blinded by prejudice that they see only with a distorted vision, but the report was not only biased, but absolutely false and Prof. Smith either knew it was false or did not know the facts in the case. In either case he is responsible.

He is the same Prof. Smith that was Mr. Mohlers moderator and who is so well informed upon the railroad subject, that he knew too much for one man and not quite enough for two and it got him into very serious trouble and if you want to know how he settled the matter ask me personally and I will tell you, but I will venture that the Prof. will not ask. He is therefore capable of writing such a report. He seems to be like Mrs. Partington "Whenever he opens his mouth he gets his foot in it."

His statement, that Mr. Mohler was repeatedly challenged is false and the correspondence recently published by Mr. Mohler himself shows it tobe so, and that Mr. Mohler announced the debate before any agreement was determined and signed upon the proposition, or time of discussion, or rules and regulations agreed upon. As to being short on argument, I will politely inform the gentleman that I am only responsible for the argument presented and not for the brains on his part to comprehend the argument but he knows I proposed to Mr. Mohler that we continue the discussion another week. As to the points in discussion that were established I will let the brethern speak as follows:

The Brown-Mohler Debate

on Baptism. A report of three persons who heard every speech.

We desire to give the report as the points discussed.

Browns first affirmation that the great commission given by Christ was expressed in specific terms and could be expressed only in the English by dip, plunge or immerce and could not be expressed by sprinkle or pour and called for any Greek lexicon giving sprinkle or pour as any part of the meaning of baptizo. Mr. Mohler declared that no definite meaning could be attached to Christ's language in the great commission but failed to give any lexicon giving sprinkle or pour as any part of the definition.

Brown's second affirmation was that the practice of immersion was universal until about the year 251 A. D. when pouring was used in the case of novation which was the first deviation and could not be scriptural because it was introduced too late citing eight historians and scholars. This argument Mr. Mohler did not attempt to rebut.

Brown's third affirmation was that Christ spoke of baptism as a birth of water and that Christ himself was buried in baptism. Citing John 3-5, Rom. 6 4, Col. 2 12, to which Mohler replied that when Christ spoke of a birth of water he did not mean water but refered to the natural birth of children.

Brown's fourth affirmation was that baptism was a burial and a resurrection. Citing again Rom. 6 4, Col. 2-12, to which Mohler did not attempt a reply.

Brown's fifth affirmation was that immersion was accepted by all church historians, scholars and lexicons as valid baptism and that all leading men were immerced, to which Mohler did not attempt a reply, except he asserted that Luther was not immersed.

In the closing session Mr. Brown stated that parliamentary usage did not permit the introduction of new argument in the closing speeches and proceeded to sum up the points as above stated and was perfectly fair in every respect. Mr. Mohler in his closing said he did not know anything about parliamentary rules nor debating and proceeded to introduce new argument and use scripture that had not been referred to before. Mr. Brown appealed to moderators to hold him in his place but the moderators failed to do so and Mr. Brown asserting his rights under parliamentary usages answered his argument as given. Mr. Mohler lost his temper and Quit.

Wm. W. SPINDLER.

Mohler utterly failed to establish a single point in favor of sprinkling.

If Prof. Smith wishes to continue his discussion of his report well and good. Respectfully,

J. A. BROWN.

Cemetery Improvements.

A few weeks ago it was announced through the columns of THE NEWS that St. Joe Lodge No. 400 K. of P., had procured control of the Riverside Cemetery and that they had also bought about three acres more land adjoining and that the whole of this plot of ground was to be made into an ideal burying place. Although there has been but little said since in a public way, yet the K. of P. lodge has not been idle, and they now have the ground all platted, driveways and walks marked out, also monument and ornamental places laid out. The lodge elected two more trustees to act in conjunction with the three regular trustees of the order. These five trustees will have charge of the cemetery and supervision of the work and will also look after the selling of the lots. The trustees have carefully gone over the plat and have priced each lot according to its location thus giving to every person that purchases a lot an equal showing. It is the aim of this organization to put the cemetery on such basis that it will be perpetually maintained, that is, that each lot will be kept mowed and all ornamentations, walks, driveways, etc will be kept in constant repair. In order to do this it is necessary to create a fund, the income of which will pay all these necessary expenses. The trustees have decided to set aside one-half of all the moneys received from the sale of lots for this purpose, thus assuring to every purchaser of a lot the perpetual keeping up of it. The organization has also decided to place the lots on sale on an installment basis, to those that so desire, so that no one will be barred from owning a lot in this beautiful cemetery. The K. of P's, as a lodge deserve some credit for this public spirited enterprise, as under the plans decided on they will reap but little of the profits, excepting a remuneration for the money expended in purchase and improvement. If you desire to see that where your loved ones are laid in their last resting places, kept beautiful, your cooperation is asked to the extent that you buy a lot at once and so secure for yourself and friends the perpetual keeping up and markings of our last resting place.

Lion Fondles a Child.

In Pittsburg a savage lion fondled the hand that a child thrust into his cage. Danger to a child is sometimes great when least regarded. Often it comes through Colds, Croup, and Whooping Cough. They slay thousands that Dr. King's New Discovery could have saved. "A few doses cured our baby of a very bad case of Croup," writes Mrs. George B. Davis, of Flat Rock, N. C., "We always give it to him when he takes cold. Its a wonderful medicine for babies." Best for Coughs, Colds, LaGrippe, Asthma, Hemorrhages, Weak Lungs. 50c. $1.00. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by H. L. Dunkle.

Byron Hadsell

Byron Hadsell was born in DeKalb County, Indiana, November 18, 1836, and died at Hicksville, Ohio, May 12, 1910, aged 73 years 5 months and 24 days. He was the second white boy born in DeKalb County. He was the second son and the oldest surviving child in a family of eight children. His father, Elder James Hadsell, was quite a prominent preacher of the Church of Christ, and was much away from home engaged in evangelistic work. This threw a large responsibility upon the deceased and developed in him a habit of marked attention to business and a sturdy self-reliance characteristics of his whole after life.

On October 8, 1862 he was married to Cornelia Streator, daughter of Elder M. J. Streator, also a well known preacher of his day. To them were born six sons, two of whom died in early boyhood.

He is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Dr. Sheffer of St. Joe, Indiana and Mrs. Maria Shull of Michigan; two brothers, C. H. of Hicksville and M. D. of Missouri; his wife and four sons, I. S. and M. J. of Peru Indiana, C. Z. of Hicksville, Ohio and S. P. of Coburn's Corners, Indiana.

In his early manhood he became a Christian uniting with the Church of Christ at Coburn's Corners, the oldest church of any faith in De Kalb County, and of this congregation he remained a member until death.

The funeral services were held in the church at Coburn's Corners on Sunday afternoon and were very largely attended. The services were conducted by ministers Lake of Hicksville and Brown of St. Joe. Interment at Coburntown cemetery. Elza Kinsey funeral director.

Where is Ackley?

Since Sunday Gurth Ackley has been missing. He was a barber at the Cook barber shop but took a leave of absence that night without permission from either his employer or his lady friend with whom he spent his last hours in our city.

The barber's sudden going would not cause so much sorrow had he not left a half dozen or more fellows holding the sack. He was here only about two months but slipped it over a number of fellows to the extent of nearly $100.—Dispatch. Gurth is well known in St. Joe, having worked here for some time. Plow Plant for Canada.

Negotiations have been completed by the Olivers, of South Bend, Ind., for the construction of a mammoth plow and agricultural machinery manufacturing plant at Hamilton, Ont. The new plant will cost $1,500,000 and employ two thousand persons. It has been announced that the company will immediately begin the work of construction. The plant will supply the demands of the company's Canadian and foreign trade. The general arrangement of the plant, together with equipment and operation, is in charge of R. A. Smart, works manager of the South Bend factory. The South Bend plant is being enlarged. It has been announced that more than $1,000,000 will be used on the buildings under construction in that city.

No Lives Lost in Arizona Hotel Fire.

No authentic information upon which to ground a belief that there was any loss of life in the Hotel Adams fire at Phoenix, Ariz., having reached the city officials after twenty-four hours, it is their conviction that all guests escaped. Search of the ruins has failed to reveal any bodies. No one has reported friends or relatives missing. Fireman Peter Sullivan, who made the rounds of the rooms of the hotel after the fire started, was rewarded by the City Council for having risked his life in the search for unconscious sleepers. The position of Fire Chief was created and Sullivan was given the position.

Boy Hero Rescues Babe from Flames.

Dudley Lappin, 13 years old, made a hero of himself in Detroit, Mich., by rescuing his 2-year-old baby brother from their burning home after the children's mother and a neighbor had been driven back by the flames and given the child up for lost. The little boy had the presence of mind to throw his coat over his head. With this protection he groped his way through the smoke and fire to the baby's bed, presently staggering out with the little one safe in his arms. The bed clothing had protected the infant from being burned and the boy rescuer escaped with painful, though not serious burns.

Mystic Shrine Temple Dedicated.

Most of the imperial officers and 2,000 visiting members of the Mystic Shrine assembled for the dedication of the new temple of the Shriners of Indianapolis, Ind., which is said to be the first edifice of its nature in the country. The ceremony was conducted by the imperial potentate, Fred A. Hines, of Los Angeles. William S. Brown, imperial secretary, of Pittsburg and J. S. McCandless, of the temple at Honolulu, were among the guests.

Boy Protects Mother.

Thomas F. Manley, proprietor of a cigar store in Lafayette, Ind., was shot twice in the left leg near the hip by Francis Seeger, his stepson, who was defending his mother. Manley, it is said, came home intoxicated and made an assault upon his wife, whereupon the boy seized a 32-calibre pistol and fired three times, two of the shots taking effect. Manley will recover.

Typhoid Epidemic at Reform School.

Fred Isaigrigg, aged 15, of Lafayette, died of typhoid fever at the Indiana Boys' School in Plainfield. This is the first death due to the typhoid fever epidemic at the institution. There are between seventy and eighty cases of typhoid and malaria at the school, and a few patients are in a serious condition.

DR. HYDE CONVICTED; LIFE TERM IS HIS FATE

Jury at Kansas City Finds Physician Guilty of Murder of Col. T. H. Swope.

DELIBERATES FOR SIXTY HOURS

Verdict Comes When Hope of Agreement Had Been Abandoned—Fight for New Trial Next.

Dr. B. C. Hyde was found guilty in Kansas City of murder in first degree and his punishment was fixed at life imprisonment. That he poisoned his wife's uncle, Col. Thomas H. Swope, the Kansas City millionaire, was the verdict reached by the jury after three nights and two days of deliberation.

"I will file a motion for a new trial and then take an appeal in the case," said Frank P. Walsh, chief counsel for Dr. Hyde. The verdict came unexpectedly. Every attorney in the case had given up hope that the jury, which had been out for sixty hours, would come to an agreement.

There was a gasp from the crowd in the court room when the word "guilty" fell from the lips of the foreman of the jury, and Dr. Hyde, with clenched fists, and his lips tightly pressed against each other and his eyes staring widly, rose from his seat. His wife broke down instantly and sobbed.

Dr. Hyde's attorneys gathered around him and comforted his wife while he stood looking straight before him with an utterly hopeless expression. He turned to his wife, and seeing her face buried in her arms, her body shaken with sobs, he shook his sadly and whispered mechanically: "Life imprisonment."

The history of the case is summarized as follows: Colonel Thos. Swope, an Independence, Mo., millionaire, died Oct. 3, 1909; Colonel Moss Hunton, his manager, had died Oct. 1, 1909. Hyde was arrested Feb. 10, 1910, and released on $50,000 bonds. Several members of the Swope family were ill in November from typhoid. They were attended by Dr. B. Clark Hyde. Christman Swope died in December, 1909. He was a brother of Mrs. Hyde.

Dr. B. Clark Hyde was placed on trial April 11 and ordered into custody without bail. The supposed motive of the crime was to prevent Col. Thomas Swope from giving $1,000,000 of his fortune, as he planned, to a hospital, Mrs. Hyde being one of his heirs.

RIVER STEAMER GOES DOWN.

Thirteen Persons Dead in Wreck of Saltillo Below St. Louis.

Thirteen persons were drowned in the Mississippi River when the packet City of Saltillo struck a rock and foundered in reach of shore at Glen Park, twenty-four miles south of St. Louis, in the night. With the sound of rending timbers and the shrieks of women and children, the cries of the crew and the bellowing of the cattle, the vessel sank almost in reach of land, at a point where the water was twenty feet deep. Passengers and members of the crew clung to the timbers, while those more fortunate lent their aid immediately to the rescue of the helpless. The majority of the passengers were in the cabins and the collision came so suddenly that they were plunged into the water before they knew what had happened. The City of Saltillo is owned by the St. Louis and Tennessee River Packet Company. The boat was built at Jeffersonville, Ind., in 1892, and is 200 feet long and 37 feet wide, and drew 6.6 feet. The vessel was bound for Waterloo, Ala., in the Tennessee River, with stops scheduled at the leading river cities.

COLUMBIA MOURNS WITH BRITANNIA.

SIX SENTENCED IN PITTSBURG.

Former Councilmen Given Heavy Penalties for Grafting.

Ten prominent men of Pittsburg, including bankers, physicians and politicians, faced Judge Robert S. Frazer the other day to receive their sentences on various charges of bribery and conspiracy in connection with councilmanic corruption. Six were sentenced, and the sentencing of four was delayed by Judge Frazer. Of the ten men appearing in court all except one have already pleaded no defense to indictments alleging the giving and receiving of bribe money.

As rapidly as their names could be called and their appearance be made six former select and common council men were sentenced by Judge Frazer, as follows:

A. A. Vilsack, former cashier of German National Bank, eight months in the county jail and a fine of $5,000.

Charles Stewart, former select Councilman, eight months in the county jail and a fine of $500.

Hugh Ferguson, former common Councilman, eight months in the county jail and a fine of $500.

Dr. W. H. Weber, former select Councilman, six months in the county jail and a fine of $500.

P. B. Kearns, former select Councilman, four months in the county jail and a fine of $350.

Morris Einstein, former select Councilman, six months in jail and a fine of $2,500.

Because of illness in their families the sentencing of E. H. Jennings, president of the Columbia National Bank, and F. A. Griffen, former vice president of the same institution, was postponed on consent of the District Attorney until the next week. The sentencing of G. W. Friend, vice president of the Clinton Steel and Iron Company, son of the late James W. Friend, the multimillionaire, and M. L. Swift Jr., former common councilman, also were postponed.

Five Hurt in $250,000 Fire.

Fire which destroyed the furniture store of Koch Henke, in Cleveland, caused a loss of $250,000 and injuries to five persons. The injured are Charles Spaden and Robert Behlke, who jumped from the third floor; Lieutenant Herman Schlee, fireman; William Dempsy, engineer of a fire tug and Frank Hill.

APPLE CROP PROMISING.

Outlook Said to Be Better than for Three Years.

Reports from market centers in relation to the apple situation in the United States subsequent to the recent frosts and up to May 1, lead the dealers to the conclusion that the outlook is better than they expected. Their advices are that for the United States as an entirety there is promise for a larger crop than for three years, notwithstanding the frost damage in Indiana, Ohio and west to Nebraska and Kansas. In Canada the prospects are excellent, as the trees were not in bloom when the late frosts were experienced in the United States. The middle west, known to the trade as the Ben Davis group, has suffered more than any other section excepting perhaps Wisconsin. Southern Indiana reports are more favorable than they were a few days ago. In the southern apple states, the Virginias, Maryland, Kentucky, Tennessee, etc., little damage has been done, while the Pacific group, particularly Oregon and Washington, promises the largest crop in history, with favorable prospects also further south in California.

ROCK THE BOAT; EIGHT DROWN

School Children Die in Mill Pond—Boys Try to Save Girls.

Rocking a boat caused the drowning of six girls and two boys out of a party of twelve on an old mill pond at Huntington Mills, Pa. The four boys who escaped made vain efforts to save the girls. All of the party were members of the graduating or junior classes of the high school. The dead are; Maud Sutliff, 17; Caroline Koons, 18; Ruth Bonham, 17; Iris Davenport, 17; Kathleen Good, 16; Rachel Thompson, 17; Robert Minnick, 18, and Ray Dodson, 17.

GET $2,000 IN CAR HOLD-UP.

Three Bandits in Rich Haul on Seattle Traction Line.

Three highwaymen held up a "pay-as-you-enter" street car on the South Park line of the Seattle (Wash.) Electric Company after 1 o'clock the other morning and escaped with money and other valuables estimated at $2,000. The hold-up occurred at the Spokane avenue trestle on 1st avenue, south. Twenty passengers, all men, were on the car, which the three bandits boarded just after it left the business section. They remained quietly in their seats until the car reached Spokane avenue. There they held up the conductor and signaled the motorman to stop the car. The passengers and crew were lined up in a row, and while two of the men covered them with their revolvers, the third stood to one side and relieved each man of his valuables as he was ordered to march out of line and marched down the aisle. When the robbers had completed their work, one of them entered the motorman's compartment and ran the car to Edmonds, a small station north of Georgetown, where the robbers got off and entered the Northern Pacific freight yards.

BOYS HOLD UP A TRAIN.

Taken by Posse When They Halt an Auto and Demand Water.

It was two boys, still in their teens, who held up a train a mile from Phoenix, Ariz., the other evening, and who, after a chase across the desert, were captured. The boys gave their names as Ernest Woodson, 13 years old, and Oscar Woodson, 17, and say they were raised in Oklahoma City, Okla., and have been in Arizona only a short time. The capture of the boys was accomplished without any shooting, probably due to the fact that part of the pursuing posse used an automobile. The boys were preparing to make camp five miles south of Casa Grande, when the automobile came along. The younger boy, thinking the car contained tourists, stepped out and, halting the machine, asked for water. The arrest of both boys followed.

Child Nurse Poisons Baby.

Poisoned by a 10-year-old negro girl employed as a nurse, the 3-months-old daughter of Davis Collins, a wealthy planter, died in Demopolis, Ala., and a second child of Collins, 2 years old, is in a serious condition. The negro girl says she poisoned the children because their mother refused to allow her to go on an excursion to Birmingham.

Kansas Town "Shot Up.

Crazed by liquor, it is believed, three unidentified men began an attack on citizens of Clay Center, Kan., the other night that culminated in a pitched battle in which Ray Johnson, a citizen, was shot and seriously wounded and one of the strangers received a bullet in the shoulder. The strangers were captured only after their ammunition was exhausted.

Overstudy Kills College Boy.

Nervous exhaustion caused by overstudy is given as the cause of death of Harold L. Clark, a graduate of Oberlin College, at the home of his grandparents at Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio. After leaving Oberlin, Clark went to Chicago to complete his law course, and while there suffered a breakdown.

The value of the rubbish collected in New York City last year was $234,000, according to the figures of the State Department of Health.

The Week in Congress

In a personal explanation to the Senate Wednesday Senator Piles of Washington disavowed any responsibility for the appointment of Richard A. Ballinger as commissioner of the general land office or later as Secretary of the Interior. This action resulted from intimations in the Ballinger-Pinchot investigation that Mr. Piles had influenced the appointment in the interest of the Cunningham coal claimants. Senator Simmons of North Carolina spoke in favor of the Dixon long and short haul clause, after which the railroad bill was laid aside. The theory that the President may withdraw from entry the public lands without authority of Congress was combated by Senator Borah in an extended argument. In the House the entire session was taken up by the consideration of bills affecting Indian lands.

The Senate Thursday reached an agreement to begin voting at 4 o'clock Friday on the long and short haul amendments to the railroad bill, and to meet daily at 11 o'clock, beginning Monday. The voting agreement for Friday provides that all amendments relating to the long and short haul shall be disposed of before the end of the legislative day, but the understanding does not preclude the taking of a recess from one day to another in case the amendments should require more time than can be given them Friday. All of the speeches were in support of the Dixon long and short haul amendment. They were made by Senators Clapp, Smoot and Nixon. The Senate passed the House omnibus lighthouse bill, which, after receiving the consideration of a conference committee, will go to the President for his signature. In the House Representative Payne of New York delivered an extended defense of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, arguing that the recent advance in the cost of living was not due to that legislation. Representative Cox of Ohio spoke, denouncing conditions in national military homes.

The modified long and short haul amendment introduced by Senator Dixon as a substitute for the Heyburn amendment to the railroad bill was adopted by the Senate Friday after it had been perfected by incorporating in it a portion of the Paynter amendment, favored by the Democrats. The vote on the substitute was 56 yeas, 10 nays. The House discussed the sundry civil bill.

The feature of the consideration of the administration railroad bill in the Senate Monday was the vote taken on an amendment by Senator Cummins to strike out the sections of the bill to provide for the establishment of a commerce court. This was defeated by a vote of 28 to 37. The affirmative vote was cast chiefly by Democrats and "insurgent" Republicans. A number of other amendments were offered to the sections, but all of them were defeated. Notice of other amendments was given. This being unanimous consent and suspension day in the House, a large number of bills were passed. Among the more important measures passed was a Senate bill providing for a system of parole for United States prisoners sentenced for more than one year and who have served at least one-third of their terms. A resolution, introduced by Mr. Henry of Texas, to change the date of inauguration of the President from March 4 until the last Thursday in April was defeated. Only one vote was lacking of the two-thirds of the House necessary to provide for the submission of a constitutional amendment for that purpose to the several States of the Union.

The provision of the railroad bill for an extra allowance of $3,000 a year to members of the proposed court of commerce over the allowances of Circuit Court judges was stricken out by the Senate Tuesday. The greater part of the session was devoted to a discussion of the Cummins amendment making the interstate commerce commission the defendant in all cases in the courts growing out of orders of that commission, but no action was taken. General debate on the sundry civil bill in the House gave an opportunity for several speeches. Mr. Campbell of Kansas denounced Democratic tariff revision which, he said, was shown by experiences of the country to be disastrous. Mr. Underwood of Alabama criticised the President and the Republican majority of the House for failure to give publicity to facts gathered in connection with the corporation tax. Mr. Keifer of Ohio advocated his plan for an international agreement for preserving neutrality of the Panama Canal. Mr. Barnhart of Indiana denounced machine politics in general and the Republican party in particular. Mr. Sisson spoke in favor of legislation abolishing gambling in cotton futures.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of Chicago trade says:

"While improvement appears in some directions, the general state of trade is still marked by cross currents. A relatively better exhibit appears in the volume of solvent payments through the banks, but money does not loosen, and another high record of trading defaults distorts the opposition in credits. Movements of grain, flour, live stock, hides and wool have decreased, and new demands in leading industries add little to the period of assured forward activity.

"More satisfactory features are noted in transportation of iron and steel outputs, finished products and general merchandise. The weather conditions turned more encouraging for agriculture and imparted stimulus to outdoor construction and seasonable retail lines. Higher temperatures are necessary to effect adequate distribution of lightweight apparel, the stocks here and at the interior being large, although not causing anxiety.

"New contracts entered testify to sustained demand in electric appliances, heavy hardware, machinery, furniture, automobiles and brass work. Planing mills have much work for local and outside needs, and the absorption is still remarkably extended in building materials of all kinds. Operations in wholesale dry goods, millinery, footwear, sporting goods and food products compare favorably with the business at this time last year.

"Bank clearings, $276,985,593, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1909 by 4.6 per cent and compare with $224,095,342 in 1908. Failures reported in the Chicago district number 36, against 18 last week, 36 in 1909 and 24 in 1908. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 16, as against 8 last week, 4 in 1909 and 7 in 1908."

NEW YORK.

Trade is quiet as a whole, unfavorable weather, the indefinite crop outlook and uncertainty as to prices of merchandise all tending to retard distributive demand, both wholesale and retail. Trade reports from the West note a quiet to fair retail trade, while jobbing business has been largely confined to fill-in orders, and fall trade is reported backward, though perhaps equal to a year ago. Retail trade in the East is only fair, and wholesale trade is disappointing. Collections reflect the influences of retarded spring trade in reports of only fair to slow payments.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending May 12 were 216, as against 191 last week, 224 in the like week of 1909, 281 in 1908, 184 in 1907 and 161 in 1906. Business failures in Canada for the week numbered 27, which compares with 18 last week and 30 in the same week a year ago.—Bradstreet's.

"ARBITRATE OR FIGHT."

Slogan of Shippers Who Oppose Raising of Freight Rates.

Shippers from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic seaboard, representing an annual tonnage valued at more than a billion dollars, met in conference at the Congress Hotel in Chicago, and issued a challenge to the railroads of the country to prove that there exists the necessity for increasing revenues by increasing freight rates—challenged them to prove it to the interstate commerce commission sitting as a board of arbitration.

Having expressed the conviction that the railroads will be unable to maintain their position and justify the horizontal increases in the class rates and in the commodity rates in Eastern territory the mass meeting, which was called by the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, perfected a permanent organization with a guaranteed fund of more than $50,000 to pay for the battle to be waged against what was termed the injustice and greed of the railroads. Here is what the shippers decided to do:

Offer the railroads arbitration through the interstate commerce commission upon the question of whether or not they are entitled to increase freight rates in order to increase their revenues.

The arbitration must be coupled with the agreement that pending it the present rates shall pertain, all increases being held in abeyance.

Should conciliatory measures fail, the shippers are pledged to take immediate action either before the interstate commerce commission or the federal courts.

Should the commission be appealed to, that body will be asked to declare the rates when put into effect to be unreasonable and unjust.

Should the courts be appealed to, they will be asked to issue an injunction restraining the railroads from putting the proposed increases in rates into effect until the commission shall have the opportunity to examine and pronounce upon their reasonableness.

Organize a permanent body to carry on the fight, if a fight should become necessary.

Create a conference committee of fifteen members whose duty it shall be to have charge of the campaign and place the arbitration plan before the railroads.

Tax every member of every organization present 50 cents with a view to raising a fund to begin and carry on the battle, the initial fund being about $50,000.

OHIO INSURGENTS LOSE.

Six of Seven Standpatters Are Renominated After Bitter Contests.

Seven of Ohio's present Republican Congressmen fought bitter battles for renomination against "insurgent rivals" at the primaries the other day, and of the seven all but one were victorious. The issue in each instance was the Aldrich-Payne bill, the campaign against each of the seven men being largely based upon his vote against the Tawney amendment placing lumber on the free list.

The six Republican Congressmen who won as "regulars" were Herman P. Goebel, Cincinnati; Ralph D. Cole, Findlay; Albert Douglass, Chillicothe; Edward L. Taylor, Columbus; James Kennedy, Youngstown, and W. Aubrey Thomas, Niles.

The nominations by districts.

Third District—George R. Young (Rep.); James M. Cox (Dem.), incumbent.

Tenth District—A. R. Johnson (Rep.), incumbent; Edmund Willis (Dem.).

Thirteenth District—J. D. McLaughlin (Rep.); C. C. Anderson (Dem.), incumbent.

Seventeenth District—Ammon B. Critchfield (Rep.); William A. Ashbrook (Dem.), incumbent.

Twentieth District—Paul Howland (Rep.), incumbent; William Gordon (Dem.).

Twenty-first District—James H. Cassidy, Republican renomination; R. J. Buckley, Democrat, defeated F. F. Gentsch.

Eleventh District—Albert Douglass (Rep.), incumbent; H. C. Claypool Ross County (Dem.).

Twelfth District—E. L. Taylor (Rep.) incumbent; Francis S. Monnett (Dem.).

Seventh District—J. Warren Keifer (Rep.); J. R. Post (Dem.).

Eighth District—Frank B. Willis (Rep.); T. C. Mahon (Dem.).

Senator Charles Dick of Akron, whose term expires in March, 1911, appeared alone upon the primary ballot as a candidate for indorsement for the United States Senate.

MANY KILLED IN EXPLOSION.

Seven Boilers Blow Up Wrecking the Sheet and Tin Plate Works.

Quick death came to thirteen men, serious injury to thirty more employes of the plant and damage to the building amounting to many thousands of dollars are the results of the explosion of a battery of seven boilers at the American Sheet and Tin Plate Company plant in Canton, Ohio. The cause of the explosion is at present unknown. The fireman and engineer, who were in the boiler-room, are dead. No one else about the plant who survived the accident can give an explanation. One workman says that he heard three distinct explosions in quick succession. The force of the concussion was terrific. The big plant is in such a state of ruin as to be practically a total loss. Identification of the men was difficult because many of them were so mutilated that even the most intimate friends of the dead could not recognise the features.

A Fatal Temptation

CHAPTER III.

Five hours later Laurence was standing under the light of the stars, like one bewildered. Until that moment he had not realized what he had done. He had spent the doctor's money, and had no possible means of replacing it—the bare fact in all its horror was before him now. He who had never in his whole life wronged any one, who had never touched one penny piece that was not his own, had stolen $250! He had been so excited, so carried away, so desperate, so reckless, that he had forgotten everything; and now he stood there under the light of the stars, branded "thief."

He never knew how he reached home; he remembered that, as he went up the broad staircase, he met Miss Thornton, who looked up in wonder at his wild, white face.

"You are ill, Mr. Blantire!" she said.

"No," he replied, "I am only tired;" but the voice that spoke was not like his own, it sounded like nothing human; and he passed on to the terrible solitude of his own room.

No sleep came that night to the weary eyes of Laurence Blantire. Now that the mad excitement was ended, and the ugly, horrible truth lay before him, he was at a loss how to proceed. If, when the doctor had placed that $250 in his hands, any one had even hinted that he could misapply or use for his own purpose one penny of it, he would have been most indignant; he could with difficulty realize even now how it happened that he had yielded so suddenly to this most terrible temptation. It seemed to him like some fearful dream.

"Mr. Blantire is ill, I am sure, Miss Thornton observed, the next morning, to Marion, with some anxiety. "His face looks quite haggard."

"Being a doctor," Miss Leigh replied, coolly, "he must know quite well what to prescribe for himself." What mattered the health or the look of her father's assistant to her?

As the hours of the long, terrible day wore on, wild thoughts came to Laurence Blantire. Death in any shape would be easier than to face disgrace and ruin.

He was crossing the road that led to the beach when he heard the clock strike four; the sound of each stroke smote upon his heart like a deathknell. The bank closed at four, and to-morrow Dr. Leigh would be home again.

"Marion," said Miss Thornton, the same evening, "have you noticed anything strange in Mr. Blantire?"

"I am not in the habit of taking any interest in my father's assistant," was the haughty reply.

"I feel quite concerned about him," continued Miss Thornton, meditatively. "He has the appearance of one who is suffering deeply from some cause, mental or physical, and I am inclined think the latter. I do not think he went to bed at all last night, for I awoke several times, and heard him pacing his room restlessly."

In his terrible despair Laurence had made up his mind to destroy himself, and he sat silently meditating in what manner he should accomplish his object. It would be easy enough to take a small dose of prussic acid, and he would be dead in a few seconds; yet he turned with a faint shudder from that picture. He would not be poisoned like a rat in a hole; he would die where the fresh breezes blew upon him.

He took up a revolver—one the doctor always kept loaded in the house—and scanned it curiously. Yes; he would walk far out to the sands, where the rocks raised their jagged heads at low tide; he would use the revolver there, and the waves would carry his body out to sea. A thousand times better this than he should sleep in a dishonored grave. His letter to the doctor lay upon the table; he put the revolver in his pocket, and, without one backward look, opened the door of his room and passed out.

CHAPTER IV.

Marion Leigh, while trying to forget Miss Thornton's words and give her undivided attention to her book, was startled by hearing some one descend the staircase—some one who evidently did not wish to be heard, for the steps were slow and hushed. Glancing at the clock on the mantelpiece, she saw that the hands pointed to eleven, and wondered a little who could be going out at this hour, unless indeed some one were ill, and the young doctor had been summoned. She hastily laid down her book, and went into the hall. There she encountered Laurence Blantire, and was at once struck by the ghastly pallor of his face and the wild despair in his eyes.

"What is the matter?" she cried, involuntarily.

He tried to pass her with a bow, for he dared not trust himself to speak.

Marion, feeling vaguely alarmed at his wild appearance, and recollecting, perhaps, Miss Thornton's words, hastily interposed between him and the door, thus forming a barrier to his egress. Then, for the first time in her life, Marion Leigh laid her hand on Laurence's arm, and looked with anxious, kindly eyes into his face.

"Trust me," she said gently. "I see there is something wrong. Where are you going, Mr. Blantire?"

"I am going," he returned, slowly, "to put an end to my wretched existence."

If she felt any fear, she did not show it; at that moment she rose superior to herself.

"No man should take his life; it is not his own to do as he pleases with," she said, earnestly.

"Mine is utterly valueless!" he cried, despairingly.

"Come with me," she urged. "I will not keep you long."

He did not try to resist her, but allowed her to lead him back to the drawing-room where she had been sitting. Mechanically he took the chair she pushed toward him.

"Now, will you tell me what your trouble is?" Miss Leigh asked, gently. "I am sorry for you. I want to help you, and will help you if I can."

And then he told her his story in a low, shamed voice—told her of the doctor's warning, of his neglect of that warning, of his temptation, and his fall.

"You have committed a great wrong," she said, when he ceased speaking; "but it was not like a premeditated evil. I can quite understand the suddenness of the temptation, and you yielded to it in a reckless moment." She was silent for some minutes, her gaze bent pityingly on the handsome head bent in abject sorrow and shame; then she went on, "After all, I see no reason for despair. I think you may retrieve the past—live it down. In your place, I should try to do so."

"I cannot retrieve the past," he said. "I cannot replace the money; the doctor cannot be kept in ignorance of my conduct, and you understand him well enough to know that he will have no pity on me."

"It seems to me a sad thing for a life like yours to be wrecked for the sake of a paltry $250, and I think I see my way to getting it for you. I have saved $200 of my own out of what my father allows me for myself, and I can borrow $50 from Miss Thornton, which will make up the sum you require."

"But how—how," he stammered, "shall I repay you?"

"You will earn money some of these days," she replied; "you can pay me then."

"You have saved me!" he cried, with a sudden burst of relief and gratitude, "you have saved me from death. Henceforth my life is yours, to do with as you will."

"Let us hope I shall never put your gratitude to so severe a test," she returned lightly; "but, if ever I need your help, I shall ask it. And now," she added, "go to your room, and try to sleep. You shall have the money in the morning; and promise me that you will let this be a lesson to you."

CHAPTER V.

Laurence Blantire looked very much ashamed, and his manner was nervous and constrained when he met Miss Leigh on the following morning. She, on the controry, was as calm as though nothing unusual had passed between them. As a proof of her sympathy and friendliness, however, she held out her hand to him—an unusual circumstance with her.

"We must proceed in a business-like fashion," she said then. "I have the money—$200 of it is my own, and with the $50 borrowed from Miss Thornton, will make up the sum you require. I should advise you to pay it into the bank at once, before my father comes home. There is no need to thank me, I am pleased to help you; but, to show that I consider it a business transaction, I shall ask you to sign this receipt for the $250."

Perhaps, if he could have foreseen the uses to which this document would be put, he would have hesitated to do as Marion requested; as it was, no thought of the future entered his mind. He signed the receipt and then took up the bank-notes she held out.

He would have expressed his gratitude then; but Miss Leigh cut short his broken sentences by reminding him that there was no time to lose; so he was fain to take his departure. He hurried at once to the bank, and if the kindly manager wondered why the young doctor looked so pale, and his manner was so strange, he made no remark upon it.

Laurence soon told his errand, and paid in the $250 to the doctor's account. Then he walked slowly home, his heart filled with sincere repentance and the resolution to do better. He did not forget, for one moment, the shame of his crime; the remembrance of it would go with him to the grave; but he was freed from a great peril, and for the time he thought most of his freedom.

When Dr. Leigh returned and found all things well, he was pleased with Laurence's attention to the patients, his industry, and skill; he praised him as the grim old doctor seldom praised any one.

"I shall not hesitate about taking a week's holiday now," he said.

The young man's heart beat high with gratitude. If it had not been for Marion, how different and how terrible this meeting would have been!

The same evening the doctor inquired whether Laurence had paid the money he had left him into the bank, as he had directed him to do. The young man answered in the affirmative, and then the subject was dropped.

One thing struck Dr. Leigh after his return trip to London, and that was that Laurence Blantire seemed suddenly to have become quite devoted to him. He slaved rather than worked; he saved the doctor all possible trouble. No son of his own could have studied his interests more. Dr. Leigh augured well from it. The young man would rise in his profession some day, he thought, and do credit to his teaching. He was pleased, too, that Laurence had given up his former companions.

Just one week after that fatal game which had cost Laurence so dearly, he had met Captain Walsh, who hailed him with glee.

"Come to my place," he urged, "and try your luck again." But Laurence shook his head.

"A burned child dreads the fire," he replied.

"You don't say you were scorched!" rejoined the captain.

"So effectually as to cured for the remainder of my days," Laurence said; and without any further words, passed on.

"I might possibly have made a few dollars more out of him," soliloquized the captain. "It is strange that he should suddenly evince such a dislike for play. I'm afraid we frightened him last time."

Laurence Blantire set himself to work with renewed energy. Every penny he was able to save was always scrupulously handed over to Miss Leigh. He determined to deny himself every luxury and pleasure until he had paid this just and urgent debt.

One morning Dr. Leigh sat in the breakfast-room, with a newspaper unfolded before him. Marion still lingered behind the urn, while Laurence, who had finished breakfast, was looking over some notes for the doctor.

Suddenly Dr. Leigh raised his head with a start.

"This must refer to you, Laurence," he said. "Listen:

"'Two hundred and fifty dollars reward offered to any one who can give reliable information as to the marriage of Sylvia Burton Carr with the late John Blantire, surgeon. Letters to be addressed to Messrs. North & Son, Solicitors,'" and an address followed.

"Yes, it must refer to me, or, to speak more correctly, to my parents," Laurence replied. "My mother's name was Sylvia Burton Carr."

Marion looked up, keenly interested, and the doctor cried:

"I thought so. You should write to those lawyers at once, Laurence. Rely upon it, the advertisement has something to do with you personally."

GOES BEFORE THE KING.

Big Policeman Rides a Big Horse and Delights the Populace.

British crowds delight in processions of public shows of any kind. They invest prominent figures in such street ceremonies with a glory all their own. Thus Wright, the lord mayor's fat coachman, and Police Sergeant A 1, who rides immediately before the king's carriage, are among the most popular men in London, an exchange says.

Wright pleases the multitude because he is fat, for the ill-fed millions of London always hail with delight the man of portly frame and rubicund visage. Such a man represents a whole year's array of Mansion house banquets to the onlookers on the sidewalk.

Police Sergeant A 1 is less a laughing matter. His presence inspires awe among a people saturated with class differences and the majesty of an unapproachable court.

To ride, as this police sergeant does, jauntily before the entire royal family, is a unique privilege. The sergeant carries it off lightly, too, and, ever on the watch, he proceeds ahead of his ruler, clearing the path, directing the route to be taken, indicating to the street police weak points in the line of protection, detected by his keen, experienced eye.

He is a first-class officer, as one can judge by his badge of A 1, which by a curious coincidence, represents the divisional police district to which he is attached and the number assigned to him on the roll there.

Nearly all the royalties of Europe have been piloted through the London streets by Police Sergeant A 1, and in no city of Europe has there been such complete immunity from attacks by anarchists or other foes of crowned heads.

It is not a wise thing for anybody to attempt to cross the path of Police Sergeant A 1 and try to reach the king's carriage. With a bound the well-trained mount of the soldier-policeman is alongside the venturesome pedestrian and the rider has him in a grasp of iron. In a trice the unwary one is handcuffed and forced into a trot. He becomes what is known as a stirrup-prisoner, an undignified figure for holiday crowds to laugh at. The experience of such a luckless person is a sorry one.

Within call of Police Sergeant A 1 are hidden groups of police, mounted and on foot, on all public occasions. England, by reason of the freedom of opinion enjoyed within its borders, is free from street scuffles on the occasion of royal processions, but precautionary measures are always taken. From his lofty seat the stalwart officer scans the crowd as he moves along. An expert in judging the situation, he knows just where to have the crowd pushed back a bit more and where all is well. Many times King Edward has complimented him on the zealous way he has discharged his responsible duties as "the man who goes before the king."

Lenity is a part of justice; but she must not speak too loud for fear of waking justice.—Lee.

The Pianofoote.

Little Elsie, whose mother was visiting her neighbor, was doing the five-finger exercises.

Thump! Rattle! Bang, bang! Rattle! Thump!

"Great Heavens!" cried the neighbor, starting up. "What on earth is your daughter trying to play now?"

"It's an exercise," said little Elsie's mother, beaming with maternal pride, "from 'First Steps in Music.'"

"'First Steps in Music'?" repeated the harassed neighbor. "Well, dear, is there nothing she can play with her hands?"—Answers.

SCREAMED WITH PAIN.

A Terrible Tale of Kidney Suffering.

Charles Easter, East Locust St., Watseka, Ill., says: "I suffered such severe pain in my back that I actually screamed and for six months was unable to sit in a chair. I lost 40 pounds and was so lame I could not wash my face. The kidney secretions were of a whitish color and often suppressed. After doctoring and using different remedies, I began with Doan's Kidney Pills. I gained gradually and was soon cured. The cure is permanent."

Clearly Shown.

A story is told of a simple and devout Methodist minister who was not sufficiently eloquent or businesslike to be approved by the presiding elder.

Through the influence of the elder he felt sure he was appointed to a small and widely scattered settlement, where there was much hard work, and the results were necessarily meager.

One day he was commenting sadly on the narrowness of his opportunities to a friend, who said gravely that he ought to pray for light that he might see the hand of the Lord in his appointment.

"I have, brother," he answered, "again and again. But so far," he added, with a whimsical smile, "I've only had light enough to see the interfering hand of Elder Brown."

Making It Simple.

The scholarly-looking man with the big eyeglasses had been invited to address the Sunday school and was making a few remarks concerning the lesson.

"I see the word 'line' occurs here," he said. "Will some one give me a definition of 'line?'"

Nobody answered.

"It is very easy," he proceeded, encouragingly, "though you may find it a little perplexing to convey the idea in simple terms. Try again. Well, the ordinary signification of the word is longitudinal extension, but here it denotes a predetermined boundary. I am sure, my young friends, you can remember that."

One Dose for Coughs

Children cough at night? Give them Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Often a single dose at bedtime will completely control the cough. Good for any one with a cold or cough. Good for easy cases, hard cases; good for acute cases, chronic cases. Ask your doctor to tell you, honestly and frankly, just what he thinks of this old standard remedy. No alcohol in this cough medicine. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Thursday evening a B. & O. gravel train was compelled to stay here for several hours. A hotbox was the cause of the trouble. As it passed through town it was noticed by several. When it reached the car house the journal gave away and the car dropped. The track and ties were damaged for about 300 feet before the train stopped. The Garrett wrecker was wired for immediately and by 9 o'clock the car was put in running order. The train was hauling a few loads and this car contained hard coal, making it necessary to call the wrecker to the scene, the Concord and St. Joe sections were soon upon the scene of action to repair the track, it being necessary to remove the ties entirely and replace them with new ones. Carelessness on the part of the trainmen causes considerable expense, loss of time and delay of other trains.

H. W. Mountz Nominated.

Hon. H. W. Mountz, of Garrett was nominated as the republican candidate for circuit judge, at the Republican judicial convention of the 35 judicial circuit which convened in Waterloo Friday. There had been two other canditates in the field Messrs Pomeroy and Huffman of Auburn, but these men withdrew from the race before the meeting was called and as a result the Garrett man was nominated by acclamation. Herbert Hartman was nominated as the candidate for re election to the office of prosecuting attorney.

The 35th district has a normal republican majority of about 800. Every delegate was present and the meeting was a very peaceable one. C. C. Carlin of Angola was made temporary chairman and Judge Joseph A. Woodhull was made permanent chairman during the opening of the meeting. Clyde Willis of the Waterloo Press was made secretary assisted by the editors of the Republican press of the district.

Dodder In Relation to Farm Crops.

Dodder as an Impurity in Seeds.—So injurious is dodder to clovers and alfalfa that the presence of dodder in these crops or in the seed of them, even in small quantities, should be a matter of much concern. That it occurs in seed sold in Indiana is certain.

Of the Red Clover seed examined to date in the seed laboratory of this Station, 5.6 per cent of the samples contained dodder, of the Alfalfa, 61.5 per cent contained dodder. It is not usual to find dodder in American-grown White Clover or Alsike Clover. None was found in the samples analyzed here. As might be expected from the results of analysis made, dodder is positively known to exist as a pest in a number of Indiana clover and alfalfa fields. The character of dodder seed is such, that where the pest exists in the fields and is allowed to mature, the seed of it is sure to be in the clover seed crop, if the clover should be so fortunate as to survive the effects of the dodder living upon it. The existence of dodder in clover and alfalfa seed and of the dodder plants in the fields, will prove, if unchecked, a gradually increasing menace to clover and alfalfa growing in the state. Farmers will have themselves to blame to a considerable extent if dodder becomes a crop reducing pest like buckhorn and wild onion now are.

Development of Dodder from Seed to Seed.—Dodder seed matures about the same time as clover seed. Much of it reaches the ground. The seed germinates, at first getting nourishment from a supply stored up in the seed. A slender, delicate shoot appears. This little stem sways about looking for a support, or a host as it is often called, for its habit is to twine and climb about other plants, especially clover or alfalfa. When it reaches a clover or alfalfa plant it sends out little suckers which enter the host wherever the dodder touches stem or branches, and extracts therefrom ready-made food materials. Here is where the damage from dodder comes in. The dodder once attached to a suitable host, branches extensively, thus sending suckers in large numbers into the juice-conveying tissues of the clover or alfalfa. As soon as the food stored in the seed is exhausted, the dodder plant becomes a complete parasite, living wholly on the host plant. It dies at the ground, thus cutting off all connection with the latter. The trouble begins in circular "spots" which gradually spread out. Examine a "spot" and there will be seen in, around and among the clover or alfalfa a much branched, tangled mass of lemon yellow, orange, or pink threads attached to the clover at many points by suckers, much as ivy is attached to the wall, only the suckers of dodder not only cling, but extract the juices, and hence the vitality from the clover or alfalfa. Dodder is wholly destitute of leaves and is incapable of manufacturing food for itself. Hence it is a plant parasite. The flowers are usually many, and crowded in dense bunches. As a rule dodders are heavy seed producers. As the season advances these "spots" extend and the clovers and alfalfas die little by little Kinds of dodder and methods of eradication will be discussed in a future bulletin.

THE NEWS is in receipt of a program of the Twentieth Annual Convention of the Kentucky Societies of Christian Endeavor, to be held at Louisville, Ky., May 13, 14, 15, also a paper called, "The Kentucky Endeavorer," which contains the following clipping in regard to Prof. J. E. Sturgis, who has been secured as musical director of the convention: "In securing the services of Prof. J. E. Sturgis as Musical Director during the Convention, the committee has acted wisely, and his presence will insure success as far as the music of the convention is concerned. Aside from being a most capable Director, he is a singer of remarkable ability. He also uses the violin in a masterly way, and we are fortunate indeed in securing the services of such a talented man."

POOR ENGINEERS.

Colleges Accused of Turning Out Careless Graduates.

American colleges and universities are turning out slovenly students in civil and electrical engineering. They are careless, show lack of close training, and are unpopular with American manufacturers. They cannot compete with the young men who come here from the foreign universities and technical schools.

These are the charges made by Frederick W. Taylor, of the Society for the Promotion of Education, and backed by A. L. Dabney and other prominent members of the American Society of Civil Engineers. There is not the shadow of a doubt, says Taylor, that the overwhelming majority of employers want nothing to do with the engineer graduates, if it is possible to get along without them, until they have been out of college for a year or two at least.

"Is it necessary," Prof. Taylor asks, "that the young graduate should leave college with an education which is of no value in the eyes of the average employer, and that he should be unhappy and discontented for a period of one or two years after graduation? There are two particular faults which are responsible for this condition of affairs, and both of them are remediable. In the first place the students are under too loose discipline at college. They are allowed a greater freedom than they have ever had before or will ever have again. They absent themselves from lectures. They work as they please, and as much as they please, the only restriction being that they have to pass certain examinations. Their habits are left almost entirely to themselves. But, when they begin commercial life, those habits are regulated and rigidly prescribed by some one else; and the process of readjustment is a painful one.

"The second fault is due to the radical difference in the treatment the young men get in and out of college. The work of the student is absorbing ideas and knowledge for his own use. Until he graduates he is served by some one else. When he gets out of college he begins serving others. The entire emphasis of the college life is an intellectual training, but for success in life intellectual training is not so important as either character or good sense. The graduate needs to realize that almost nine-tenths of the work that every man has to do is monotonous, tiresome, uninteresting."

Taylor recommends a year in the engineering shop at the close of the freshman year, after which the college education can be resumed and completed. In college the student deals with materials. In the shop he deals with men. In college the student gets only individual training. The whole trend of modern shop work is toward co-operation. The post-graduate courses, he says, do not meet the wants of engineering students.

Vain Sacrifice.

Apropos of examinations and their terrors, A. E. Palmer, secretary of the department of education of New York, told at a recent dinner an odd story of a young African prince.

"This prince," said Mr. Palmer, "entered Yale or Harvard—I forget which—and amused himself with motor cars and bulldogs till examination time drew near. Examination time frightened the young prince horribly. He began to study, and he cabled home to the King, his father:

"'Examination next week. Most difficult. Implore aid of gods in my behalf.'

"A few days later this reply came back from the barbarous West Coast monarch:

"'Rites performed. Fourteen picked youths, all sons of nobles, have been sacrificed. Omens propitious.'

"Yet would you believe it?" Mr. Palmer concluded, "the young prince flunked."

Poor Food in Canada.

According to the bulletins of the inland revenue department of Canada, that country appears to have become a dumping ground for the adulterated foods which were driven out of the United States by the pure food laws. Ground pepper is the most badly adulterated article found there. While it is true that the percentage of adulteration is less than formerly, the adulteration is still there. Out of 145 samples of ground cloves collected in various parts of the country only seventy-four were genuine. Chicory and roasted grain are frequently found in coffee. Native wines are sold as foreign brands.

To some extent the government itself is to blame for the prevalence of adulteration. The average citizen is more likely, says the Buffalo Express, to take his chance on having his food adulterated if he has to pay for an examination himself. Many samples of adulterated food have been sent to Ottawa for examination, but the government refuses to make the desired examination unless the person sending the sample is willing to pay $7. The department will have as assume a different attitude if it hopes to drive out adulterated foods.

School Closed

Friday, May 13th, brought to a close one of the most successful years in the history of the Spencerville high school From start to finish the school work has been one of profit as well as pleasure to all concerned and everything has seemed to sail smoothly on, without a ripple to break o r mar its onward course.

Too much credit cannot be given the principal, Miss O'Brien, who has spared neither time nor self to make the work just what each and every pupil most needed, and who has by her patient, gentle, winning ways, won the appreaciation and esteem of both pupils and patrons. To an observer it would seem that both teacher and scholars have worked hand in hand in hearty co-operation with each other, and that in years to come all can look back with most plesant memories to the school work of 1910. The class of five who have finished the work will doubtless be in school elsewhere next year, but at least thirteen pupils from the grades are ready to take up the high school work making a full school.

The parting was a pleasant one, inas-much as the pupils look forward to another pleasant year's work with their dear friend and teacher. May the coming year far surpass the last is the sincere wish of the patrons.

MORMON FARMERS.

A Thrifty Class Among Whom Failure Is Practically Unknown.

Minerals are not the only products of Utah. They are only one source of wealth. Mormon husbandmen are remarkably successful. They plowed the first furrow between the Mississippi River and the Sierra Nevada mountains; they dug the first irrigation ditch ever used by white men in America; they planted the first fruit trees in the Rocky mountains, and made the valleys of Zion to flow with milk and honey. Their patient industry, their intelligence and care, their economy and thrift seem to be greater than is found among the gentile farmers, and also their prosperity. This is apparent throughout this entire section. Many gentile farmers fail, but few Mormons. The paternal interest manifested by the Church of Latter Day Saints in its flock, the fraternal helpfulness its members show toward each other, the educational methods that are used, and the influences that are exerted to keep the young people on the farms may account for this phenomenon. It is a significant fact, also, that the Mormon farmer has a great advantage in buying his implements and supplies and selling his products through the Zion co-operative stores, which exist everywhere in the State, and the sugar mills controlled by Mormon capital pay $5 a ton for beets, while farmers elsewhere are forced to accept $4.50 a ton.

The Mormons have not only reduced diversified farming to a science, but are the most practical of economists. They are self-dependent to as great a degree as the early settlers of New England. They spend very little at the store and raise nearly everything they need—a little patch of this and a little patch of that; medical herbs which are as good as anything they get at the druggists, and they use sorghum of their own raising instead of sugar. They plant trees where nothing else will grow, and utilize nearly everything that other farmers waste. Ordinarily out here people too often limit themselves to one crop, and buy bacon, butter, eggs and corn meal at the stores; but every Mormon farm has a dairy and a poultry yard. The Mormon women have not forgotten the use of the spinning wheel and loom. They work up the wool of the lambs into homespun for their husbands and sons, and their sheets and tablecloths are woven of flax that grew in their gardens. They knit the socks and the stockings and the mittens of the family, and they make their own clothes in the old fashioned way, which is not common in the twentieth century, but contributes substantially to reduce the household expenses and to increase the deposits in the savings banks.

Railroad for Ecuador.

A railroad to the eastern part of Ecuador is being surveyed by a commission of American engineers, employed by the government. The railroad is to commence at Ambato, running thence to the Curaray river, traversing a district containing very rich and productive soil.

Better Health

A Pleasing Sense of Health and Strength Renewed and of Ease and Comfort follows the use of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, as it acts gently on the kidneys, liver and bowels, cleansing the system effectually, when constipated, or bilious, and dispels colds and headaches.

Damascus, "City of Magic."

An oriental city of magic called up by a slave of the lamp to realize one's dream of the orient; a city ethereally lovely, exquisitely eastern, ephemeral, to be blown away by a breath like a tuft of thistledown, not white, but delicately pale with a pallor holding the faintest hint of a seashell flush; a city slender, calm, almost mystic in its fragile grace, set in the heart of a great wonder of green, a maze of bright and ardent woods, beyond which lie the desert spaces—this is Damascus from the mountan of Jebel Kasyun. It holds one almost breathless seen thus from afar.—Robert Hichens in Century.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by the inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Precept and Example.

"Colonel, that was an admirable speech you made at the club the other evening on the obligations of citizenship. I've been intending to tell you so ever since I heard it. We need more of that kind of talk nowadays. But what are you looking so gloomy about this morning, colonel? No bad news, I hope."

"Dash it all, yes! I've been drawn on a jury!"—Chicago Tribune.

"That Place Needs a Picture."

This is something you have often said about a certain blank spot on the wall. Modern methods of art reproduction make it possible for the Hewitt Brothers Soap Company of Dayton, O., to send you a beautiful picture for twenty-five wrappers from Easy Task soap and a two-cent stamp. This clean, pure laundry soap is the one that makes a half day's work of a whole day's washing.

Timely Caution.

Nan—Yes; I've released Jack, from his engagement. He told me yesterday over the telephone that his rich uncle, who was going to make him his heir, you know, had gone broke.

Fan—Did Jack ask to be released?

Nan—I don't know whether he did or not. As soon as he told me about his uncle I hung up the receiver.

DECORATION DAY.

With sable-draped banner and slow, measured tread,
The flower-laden ranks pass the gates of the dead;
And, decking each mount where a comrade's form rests,
Leave tear-bedewed garlands to bloom on his breast.
Ended at last in the labor of love,
Once more through the gateway the saddened lines move.
A wailing of anguish, a sobbing of grief
Falls low on the ear of the battle-scarred chief.
Close crouched by the portals a sunny-haired child
Besought him in accents which grief rendered wild:

"Oh, sir, he was good, and they say he died brave;
Why—why did you pass by my dear papa's grave?
I know he was poor, but as kind and as true
As ever marched into the battle with you—
His grave is so humble no stone marks the spot.
You may not have seen it. Oh, say you did not!
For my poor heart will break if you knew he was there
And thought him too lowly your offerings to share.
He didn't die lowly—he poured his heart's blood
In rich crimson streams from the top-crowning sod
Of the breastworks, which were in the front of the fight—
And died shouting: "Onward! for God and the right!'
O'er all your dead comrades your bright garlands wave,
But you haven't put one on my papa's grave.
If mamma were here—but she lies by his side;
Her weary heart broke when dear papa died."

"Battalion! file left! countermarch!" cried the chief;
"This orphaned young maid has full cause for her grief."
Then up in his arms from the hot, dusty street
He lifted the maiden, while in through the gate
The long line repasses, and many an eye
Pays tribute of tears to the lone orphan's sigh.
"This way it is—here, sir, right under this tree;
They lie close together, with just room for me."
"Halt! Cover with roses each lowly green mound.
A love pure as this makes those graves hallowed ground."

"Oh, thank you, kind sir; I ne'er can repay
The kindness you're shown little Nellie to-day;
But I'll pray for you here each day while I live;
'Tis all that a poor soldier's orphan can give.
I shall see papa soon, and dear mamma, too—
I dreamed so last night, and I know 'twill come true;
And they will both bless you, I know, when I tell
How you folded your arms 'round their dear little Nell—
How you cheered her sad heart and soothed it to rest,
And hushed its wild throbs on your strong, noble breast;
And when the kind angels shall call you to come
Who'll welcome you there to our beautiful home,
Where death never comes his black banners to wave,
And the beautiful flowers ne'er weep o'er a grave."

THE OTHER LEE.

Seated in the dining room of the Ingleterre Hotel, Havana, one evening early in April, 1908, were half a score of Americans, mostly newspaper correspondents, surrounding Consul General Lee, each demanding of him when he would leave Havana and when war would be declared. General Lee was evasive and finally, to check the flood of questions, dropped into reminiscence of the Civil War.

"You boys don't seem to realize," he said, "that this is a sad anniversary for me. Yet in view of everything that has happened I don't know why I should call it sad. While I am proud of the struggle we of the South made and while, had we to do it over again, history would repeat itself, I am glad to-day that God reigns and the government at Washington still lives.

"It is just thirty-three years ago to-night that I led my cavalry in a forlorn hope south from Richmond. It has been said that I left the army with my men without the consent and approval of my uncle, General Robert E. Lee. That is not true, although it is true that he sent for me to return when he learned that General Grant's generous terms depended upon his ability to surrender the entire army.

"The last stand had been made, and we fought the last fight we were capable of entering. For months we had seen the end approach, hoping against hope that a miracle would intervene to save the Confederacy. At last it became apparent that the end could be no loner delayed. When General Lee announced to us his decision to accept the best terms for the surrender of the army that could be obtained from General Grant, I asked and received from him permission to skirt Richmond with my cavalry, or what was left of it, and make my way south, cutting a road through the Union forces if necessary.

"I was a very young man in those days, and hope died hard. My thought was that if I could take my boys out of the trap we might form a nucleus about which the South could once more rally. My uncle expressed the opinion that the adventure was foolhardy, but finally gave a reluctant consent. So it happened that just thirty-three years ago to-night with my men I rode south and by daybreak was safely beyond the Union lines.

"As I have said, in those days I was a very young man. I thought I had something of a corner in the knowledge market. Even the rough, hard knocks that had come to me during the war had not been sufficient to drive the conceit out of my head. I received a mental jolt that morning, however, that started me along the right path and soon placed me where I was willing to admit there were others who were at least fully as wise as myself. I had always held my uncle in the very highest respect. I still regard him as the military genius of the war, but at that time I thought I could see mistakes he had made.

"It was just at break of day, while we were riding down a rough country road, the dust of which had been laid by a heavy shower, that we came upon an old Southern woman. Perhaps she belonged to the poor white class, but her knowledge of men was profound. She stood in front of a cabin, and I drew up and asked for a drink. As she handed me the gourd of water she inquired for news from Richmond.

"'The war is all over, aunty,' I responded. 'We are going home. General Lee has surrendered.'

"'No, he hasn't,' was the quick response. 'Perhaps that no 'count, shiftless, triflin' General Fitzhugh Lee has surrendered, but not General Robert E. Lee. I know he has not surrendered, and the war is not ended.'

"Even under the coat of tan that had accumulated during my four years of service I could feel my face flush as I heard my companions' fruitless efforts to suppress their merriment.

"We rode on, and we were perhaps four miles south of Richmond when a courier from General Lee overtook us and I received my instructions, which meant the surrender of the last remnant of the army that had so valiantly defended Richmond."—New York Herald.

CHEERS FOR THE LIVING, TEARS FOR THE DEAD

The Passing of the Veteran.

The years roll by. Time swiftly wings its flight,
We're growing old.
The wintry blast has touched us with its blight,
We're growing old.
Our eyes are dimmed, our ears refuse to hear,
Our faltering steps proclaim the end is near.

It was not thus when treason raised its head.
Then we were young;
When strong men paled and all was doubt and dread,
Then we were young.
At Lincoln's call we fought for liberty.
A land we saved, a people we set free.

We murmur not at our advancing age,
Thy will be done;
We've played our part; we're passing off the stage,
Thy will be done.
We wrought for God, for country and for right,
We've borne our cross. O, may our crown be bright.
—J. E. Gilman.

What Soldiers Liked.

No matter how serious the situation nor how near to death the soldiers were, they were always able to exchange a few jokes and to see the comic side of life. As evidence it is related that while in camp at Memphis, Tenn., a great flood came on and the camp of the Union soldiers was put very largely under water. It was the custom of the soldiers to dig large holes in the ground, for disposal of the waste from the camp, and these were covered over, but at the time of the flood the water prevented the passerby from seeing the covering. It was just at this time that Dr. David Evans, whose home was at Boston, below Richmond, and who was a surgeon, made his appearance in a handsome new suit of clothes and went out to visit a certain portion of the camp. In doing so he unfortunately landed on top of one of the waste pits, with the result that he fell through, his new clothes were ruined and he had to stand for a great deal of joking.

Under Both Flags.

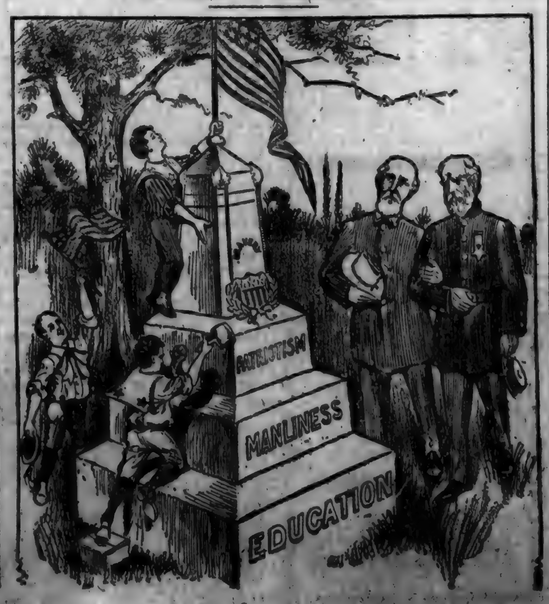
At a Confederate campfire in New York a few years ago an elderly man approached General Wheeler, who was the guest of honor.

"I want to shake hands with you, general," he said, putting out the only one he had."

"Gray or blue?" laughed the general, grasping it promptly.

"Both," was the reply. "I fought with you under the stars and bars, and my two boys fought with you under the stars and stripes."

THE LESSON OF MEMORIAL DAY.



COTTON IN CALIFORNIA.

Capitalists tp Plant 2,000 Acres of Staple in Imperial Valley.

Articles of incorporation have been filed for the California Cotton Company, whose principal business is to grow cotton in Imperial Valley, the New York Herald's Los Angeles correspondent says. The signers of the application are ranch owners and business men of Los Angeles and Memphis, Tenn.

The president of this company will be Joseph R. Loftus, president of the Joseph R. Loftus Company in this city, who was a prime mover in introducing cotton into Imperial Valley. The others mentioned are J. T. Walker of Memphis, Tenn., who has been in the cotton and cottonseed business for a number of years; W. H. Kindig, M. M. Dorfmeier and H. C. Chase, all of Los Angeles.

It was originally intended to form a large company, but on account of the very limited time before cotton planting it was decided to work along more modest lines. The capital of $25,000 will enable the company to plant from 2,000 to 3,000 acres in cotton, and have an experienced plantation manager as superintendent, and justify maintaining a business office to handle the products.

There is said to be an unlimited demand for cotton and cottonseed products. In California there is still a cotton mill that will use 10,000 bales of cotton. Cotton mills from Germany and Japan are reported to be negotiating for some of the cotton to be raised in the Imperial Valley. Oil mills and gins have already been financed by the farmers. It is rumored that private individuals will plant nearly 20,000 acres. Money has been furnished by eastern and San Francisco capitalists to help the planters, and it is predicted that with cotton growing on a commercial basis Imperial Valley will attract much capital from abroad.

Stomach and Nerves.

There is no one living who has not been compelled with more or less frequency to learn by actual experience what is meant by indigestion, the lessons varying from the occasional acute attack, traceable to some unmistakable indiscretion, to the condition of semi-invalidism in which many persons languish, solely by reason of the uncertain action of the digestive processes.

In most cases of indigestion, or dyspepsia, the stomach or the intestines are at fault; but this is by no means always so, and great injustice is done by a failure to recognize that the stomach is not the real culprit, but is only put forward by the rest of the system, as it were, as a spokesman. It faithfully performs its office of lodging a complaint for the general economy, and it is then immediately dosed and redosed, with disappointing results, because the real trouble has not been recognized or attacked.

Everyone has heard that it is best not to eat when extremely fatigued, but this is not because the stomach itself is tired, but because the entire system is temporarily too enfeebled to send out sufficient blood supply to cope with the increased work that digestion entails. The stomach, in order to do its work properly, must be fed with the nervous force that comes from good circulation, and this is impossible if the brain is calling for more than its share. This, again, is the reason why brain workers should not go straight from their work to a heavy meal, but should take a walk or some simple gymnastic exercises first, in order to draw the blood from the over-supplied brain down to the stomach, the turn or which to work has come.

The same reason should forbid immediate hard work of any kind after a meal. Let the stomach have its fair turn.

Much indigestion may be classed as purely nervous in its origin. If the whole nervous system is out of order and on strike, it would be strange if the nerves of the stomach should escape the general calamity. In this type, constant doses of medicine for "stomach trouble" will do little good, but judicious rest and general toning up of the whole nervous system may work a miracle.

That most wretched of all the briefer illnesses known as a "sick headache," in which, as the name implies, the stomach is a co-sufferer with the head, is much more apt to be caused by irritated brain centers than by abuse of the digestive organs, as is proved by the frequency with which an attack is brought on by overuse of the eyes, or any continued strain or excitement.—Youth's Companion.

Two speeches only had the supe—
"Now, caitiff, yield!" the first;
"For Rome and Graechus!" followed this,
And in these he was rehearsed.

Rushed on with the attackers;
"Now, Katie Field!" to his foe he said,
Then yelled: "For Rum and Crackers!"

ANOTHER WOMAN CURED

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Black Duck, Minn.—"About a year ago I wrote you that I was sick and could not do any of my housework. My sickness was called Retroflexion. When I would sit down I felt as if I could not get up. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and did just as you told me and now I am perfectly cured, and have a big baby boy."—Mrs. Anna Anderson, Box 19, Black Duck, Minn.

Consider This Advice.

No woman should submit to a surgical operation, which may mean death, until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made exclusively from roots and herbs, a fair trial.

This famous medicine for women has for thirty years proved to be the most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism. Women residing in almost every city and town in the United States bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It cures female ills, and creates radiant, buoyant female health. If you are ill, for your own sake as well as those you love, give it a trial.

Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

Did He Tip the Waiter?

Waiters do not like the man who tears a bill in halves and gives half of it to the man who serves him, with the promise that he shall have the other half if he gives satisfaction. A veteran waiter describes to a writer in the New York Sun an experience with a man who resorted to this device.

"I took pains to serve him poorly, to show him that I did not care for his money," said the waiter. "I was so careless that when he was leaving he refused me the other half. I was sure he was a miser, anyhow.

"I pointed out to him that the piece he had was no good to him as it was, and offered to buy it from him for two dollars.

"He thought deeply a minute and declined.

"Then I offered to sell him my half for three dollars. Somehow or other this appealed to him, and he bought it and seemed happy.

"I'll bet he hasn't stopped figuring out yet, whether he won or lost. One thing he's sure of, he didn't tip the waiter.

A Great Help.

"I look forward to having a great garden this year."

"You do? Bought some new varieties of seeds?"

"No, but I've found a man in the neighborhood who owns a wheelbarrow, and that will be a great help."—Detroit Free Press.

Baby Wasted to a Skeleton.

"My little son, when about a year and a half old, began to have sores come out on his face. I had a physician treat him, but the sores grew worse. Then they began to come out on his arms, then on other parts of his body, and then one came on his chest, worse than the others. Then I called another physician. Still he grew worse. At the end of about a year and a half of suffering he grew so bad that I had to tie his hands in cloths at night to keep him from scratching the sores and tearing the flesh. He got to be a mere skeleton, and was hardly able to walk.

"My aunt advised me to try Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. I sent to a drug store and got a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of the Ointment and followed directions. At the end of two months the sores were all well. He has never had any sores of any kind since. I can sincerely say that only for Cuticura my child would have died. I used only one cake of Cuticura Soap and about three boxes of Ointment.

"I am a nurse and my profession brings me into many different families and it is always a pleasure for me to tell my story and recommend Cuticura Remedies. Mrs. Egbert Sheldon, R. F. D. 1, Litchfield, Conn., Oct. 23, 1909."

Obviously.

"I'd like to know," said the curious citizen, "how the country is any better off on account of the north pole having been discovered."

"Can't you see, my friend?" said the distinguished explorer. "The country won't have to pay our expenses for any more trips in search of the north pole."

No Stated Hours.

The city boarder looked with superfluous pity at the son of the proprietress of Maple Hill Farm. "You poor boy," she said, coming upon him, hoe in hand, on his way down the hot road, "do you mean to say you have to hoe potatoes in this heat? How long will you have to work?"

"Well, I can't exactly tell how many hours, ma'am," said the boy, "but 'twill be just an afternoon's work."

"Then you must know how long that will be," said the lady, who was a person given to suspecting others of evading the truth.

"No, ma'am, I don't," asserted the boy, as he moved away. "She said to me, 'Dave, when you've got the potatoes all hoed you'll have done your afternoon's work.' That's all she said, and it's all I know, ma'am."

Professional Pride.

In a Christmas fairy play in Paris a set of dominoes was represented by men wearing on their backs boards marked with the different numbers. One day, a writer in Le Figaro states, a "super" gave in his resignation, and told the manager he must find a substitute.

"Why, what's the trouble?" asked the manager. "Don't you get fifteen sous a night, like the others?"

"It isn't the sous at all," said the "super," haughtily. "I am one of the oldest artists belonging to the theater, and I think you ought to have made me double six; instead I am the lowest number—double aught."

REVIEW OF INDIANA

While operating a planer at a factory at Shelbyville, Morris Marlowe had three fingers of his right hand cut off.

At Hortonville the public school building condemned by Dr. J. N. Hurty will be replaced by a modern brick structure.

William M. Waltman, owner of the Mountain View fruit farm, the largest in Brown County, says that the apples are nearly all killed and that the crop of fruit will be small.

Otis Ryan, aged 17, is in a critical condition at his home in Greenfield as the result of being struck over the head with a carrying fork by Lewis Robinson, colored, a fellow-employe at the fruit jar factory in that city.

Joseph Bube, aged 40, died of lockjaw at his home, west of New Albany. Several days ago, while cutting wood, an ax glanced and almost severed his great toe. The injury was not regarded as serious until tetanus developed.

While walking through his orchard near Owensville, John Neimier found his mother's gold ring, which was lost thirty years ago. Mrs. Neimier lost the ring while picking up apples. The orchard was plowed up annually during that period.

Mrs. Clarinda Nicholson, aged nearly 101 years, and the oldest resident of Montgomery County, died at the home of her son William, at Ladoga, her death being due to the infirmities of age. She was born in Chillicothe, Ohio, July 5, 1809.

Governor Marshall has issued the regular annual Memorial Day proclamation, setting aside Monday, May 30, to be observed as a legal holiday. He calls upon all the citizens of the State to unite in doing honor to the veterans whose memory it has become the custom to honor on that day.

"Nobody is responsible for this. Life is not worth the trouble, so I will end it all." Leaving a note containing these words and several other written messages of similar import, Miss Harriett Wright, aged 30, went to the attic of the house in which she lived with her sister, Mrs. William Danford, at Muncie, and hanged herself.

Judge J. C. Richter, in the Laporte Circuit Court, ruled against the United States Bureau of Naturalization and held that an Assyrian is a white man. He ordered the issuance of second citizenship papers to Norman Abraham Tamber, an Assyrian, who made a fight against the ruling of the Bureau of Naturalization that the Assyrians can not become citizens.

Tattoo marks on his wrist were the means of identification of Frank Lewis, who has just returned to the Indiana Reformatory at Jeffersonville from Leavenworth, Kas., after being at liberty six years, having violated his parole soon after his release on May 23, 1904, his commitment to the institution on a conviction of burglary from Terre Haute being dated September 13, 1901.

Amid a swirling throng of women hunting bargains, M. W. Ader, who had been brought along to Indianapolis by his wife on a shopping excursion from their home at Bainbridge, dropped dead in a department store. Employes and police vainly searched the crowded building for Mrs. Ader, and she presumably was hunting frantically through the store for her husband.

Steven Wargo, aged 45, and Matt Varonovich, aged 26, were ground to pieces by a Pennsylvania passenger train at Gary. Fifty persons waiting to board the train as it was pulling into the station saw the accident. The men were waiting for an east-bound freight train to pass and did not hear the west-bound passenger train pulling into the station. Both were married and employed by the Indiana Steel Co.

The State Tuberculosis Hospital Commission has let the final contracts for furnishing the buildings near Rockville, which have been completed. The Commission made a final settlement with the Modern Construction Company, of Terre Haute, paying the concern the $16,267.74 balance due. On comparison, the books of the contractor and those of the Commission, including all extra allowance subtractions, were found to correspond to the cent.

A lump of metal, representing $600 in gold coin, was found in the ashes of the home of the Rev. John Wolford, which was destroyed by fire at New Middletown. The gold represented the savings of the aged minister and after the ashes cooled down a search was instituted and the metal was found; the intense heat having melted the coins and caused them to fuse into one mass. Mrs. Wolford, who was carried from the burning building and was afterward seriously burned by running back into the house in an effort to save the money, may recover.

Henry Bowman, aged 40, living on Bald knob, ten miles northwest of Jeffersonville, was killed while driving home in a wagon, from which he fell. He was alive when found, but was so badly crushed he soon died.

While the members of Benjamin McCarty's family, in Washington Township, Shelby County, were asleep, a coal oil lamp in a bedroom exploded, causing a carpet to ignite. McCarty extinguished the flames before much damage was done.

Nelson McCracken, aged 81, and William Baldwin, aged 85, natives of Daviess County, are dead at their respective homes. Each was a victim of senility.

A mad dog has caused a scare at Memphis and Blue Lick. Four cows and a horse owned by Fred Whitesides, and six cows and a horse owned by Mat Johnson were bitten.

Robert Fulton Lannon, aged 40, died at Pendleton after a two weeks' illness of pneumonia. For many years he was a baker in that city, but two years ago went on a farm, where he died. A widow survives.

New London is the center of a smallpox epidemic. About twenty cases have developed to date. Last Sunday was the first Sunday since pioneer days that religious services were not held by the Friends.

Luther Sanders, aged 25, of Wheatland, seven miles west of Washington, was drowned while fishing near his home. He suffered an epileptic fit and fell into the stream. A searching party found the young man's body.

Grace Anna Swinford, aged 2, was searching the cupboard at her grandmother's home, near Lewis creek for cookies, and found a bottle of carbolic acid. She drank a part of the poison and became unconscious. The child can not recover.

The Vandalia Railroad Company will spend a large sum in straightening the road from a point just west of Terre Haute to Farrington, in the Indiana-Illinois State line, a distance of about five miles. The route will be shortened nearly a mile.

After being without fire protection for sixty years, Nashville is to have a reservoir which will hold 35,000 gallons built on the hill north of town. The water is to be piped to the principal streets of the town. The engine at the Nashville roller mills will do the pumping.

Abram Nicholson, an aged farmer near Pendleton, is dead after a year's illness of paralysis. He leaves two daughters, Miss Blanche, at home, and Mrs. Louisa Pike, of Marion, and two sons, Homer Nicholson, an instructor in Leland Stanford University, at Palo Alto, Cal., and Watt Nicholson, who is traveling in Europe. The widow also survives.

A report has been received from the State Board of Health that the mare bitten by a mad dog that attacked two children of Harry Hinkley, a farmer, three miles west of Lafayette, had died of rabies. A portion of the animal's head was sent to the State Board of Health for examination. The mad dog bit a number of other animals in the neighborhood of the Hinkley home and a close watch is being kept to prevent an outbreak of rabies. The children were bitten last week and are receiving the Pasteur treatment.

Mrs. John H. Cooper, of Fulton, claims to have been kissed while a child by the late King Edward VII. She says that it happened when Edward was prince of Wales and visited Canada. A reception was accorded him at Ottawa, where Mrs. Cooper, then a girl, aged 8, lived. She was chosen from a number to present a bouquet of flowers to the prince which he accepted in a gracious manner. He then picked her up and kissed her lips. Mrs. Cooper formerly lived in Peru, and is the wife of an attorney.

The figure 13 appeared in a queer combination at Crawfordsville Friday, May 13. At just thirteen minutes before 4 o'clock that afternoon the thirteenth fire alarm of the year was sounded in Crawfordsville from box No. 13. The fire was turned in by Lemuel W. Gibson, colored, who has thirteen letters in his name, and the department had to make a run of thirteen blocks in length in searching the scene of the fire. The blaze burned thirteen shingles off Mr. Gibson's house, according to the owner's count and it required the fire department approximately thirteen minutes to turn the water on, extinguish the blaze and return to headquarters. The damage amounted to $1.13.

Marshall McMurran, a miser, who was found in his cabin several miles below Evansville, half frozen and nearly starved several months ago, with money in his clothes amounting to nearly $30,000, is dead at the Southern Indiana Insane Hospital, after a brief illness. He was nearly 70 years old, and it is estimated he left a fortune valued at $60,000. McMurran had lived in one hut for several years, and his neighbors never knew he had anything of value about his place. Where his money came from is not known. Little is known of McMurran's past life. Shortly after McMurran was found in a neglected condition in his hut, several months ago, he was adjudged insane and removed to the hospital. His body will be held several days in the hope that some relative may be found.

Albert Hogan, aged 18, of Harrison County, shot himself in the foot with a shotgun. He was holding his gun with his finger on the trigger, looking sykward for a hawk when the weapon was accidentally discharged.

While Rex Cotner, aged 11, and Leon Cotner, aged 15, brothers, of Logansport, were playing with a revolver, the younger boy accidentally discharged the weapon and the bullet struck Leon in the chest. The boy's condition is critical.

Remedies are Needed

Were we perfect, which we are not, medicines would not often be needed. But since our systems have become weakened, impaired and broken down through indiscretions which have gone on from the early ages, through countless generations, remedies are needed to aid Nature in correcting our inherited and otherwise acquired weaknesses. To reach the seat of stomach weakness and consequent digestive troubles, there is nothing so good as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, a glyceric compound, extracted from native medicinal roots—sold for over forty years with great satisfaction to all users. For Weak Stomach, Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Pain in the Stomach after eating, Heartburn, Bad Breath, Belching of food, Chronic Diarrhea and other Intestinal Derangements, the "Discovery" is a time-proven and most efficient remedy.

The genuine has on its outside wrapper the Signature R. V. Pierce M.D.

You can't afford to accept a secret nostrum as a substitute for this non-alcoholic, medicine OF KNOWN COMPOSITION, not even though the urgent dealer may thereby make a little bigger profit.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated, tiny granules, easy to take as candy.

The Overland
Now the Leading Car

Overland sales now run $200,000 per day. There has never been a record approaching that in the history of automobiles.

When a man sees an Overland, all the lesser cars lose their attractions. For no other car gives so much for the money. And none is so simple, so easy to care for, so proof against troubles.

The Simplicity

The Overlands operate by pedal control, so the hands have nothing to do but steer. One goes forward or backward, fast or slow, simply by pushing pedals. A child can master the car in ten minutes.

The Overlands are free from complexities. A novice can run them and care for them. One of these cars has run 7,000 miles without stopping the engine.

In the Government Postal Service Overlands have run 75 miles a day for a year and a half without missing a trip.

They are as faithful as watches. A man who knows nothing about machinery can run an Overland a thousand miles and back.

25 h. p. for $1,000

Overlands are made by modern automatic machinery. And they are made in such numbers that the cost is brought down to the minimum.

A 25-horsepower Overland roadster sells for $1,000. It has a 102-inch wheel base, and a possible speed of 50 miles an hour. The same car with toy tonneau costs $1,100.

A 40-horsepower Overland, with a 111-inch wheel base, sells for $1,250 to $1,400, according to style of body. All of these prices include gas lamps and magneto.

Never before were such large and powerful cars sold at such prices as these.

Compare the Cars

You should find out, for your own sake, why Overlands so outsell other cars. You should see how simple they are, how trouble-proof.

There are Overland dealers everywhere—800 of them now. If you will send us this coupon for our new catalog we will tell you the nearest one. Please cut out the coupon now.

A Storekeeper Says:

"A lady came into my store lately and said:

"'I have been using a New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove all winter in my apartment. I want one now for my summer home. I think these oil stoves are wonderful. If only women knew what a comfort they are, they would all have one. I spoke about my stove to a lot of my friends, and they were astonished. They thought that there was smell and smoke from an oil stove, and that it heated a room just like any other stove. I told them of my experience, and one after another they got one, and now, not one of them would give hers up for five times its cost.'"

The lady who said this had thought an oil stove was all right for quickly heating milk for a baby, or boiling a kettle of water, or to make coffee quickly in the morning, but she never dreamed of using it for difficult or heavy cooking. Now—she knows.

Do you really appreciate what a New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove means to you? No more coal to carry, no more coming to the dinner table so tired out that you can't eat. Just light a Perfection Stove and immediately the heat from an intense blue flame shoots up to the bottom of pot, kettle or oven. But the room isn't heated. There is no smoke, no smell, no outside heat, no drudgery in the kitchen where one of these stoves is used.

Cautionary Note: Be sure you get this stove—see that the name-plate reads "New Perfection."

New Perfection
WICK BLUE FLAME
Oil Cook-stove

It has a Cabinet Top with a shelf for keeping plates and food hot. The nickel finish, with the bright blue of the chimneys, makes the stove ornamental and attractive. Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without Cabinet.

Don't Forget DECORATION DAY.

Memorial Day Proclamation

"Death is the arch gleaner in the fields of time. Each day is harvest day and each soul is ripened grain. Windrow after windrow, He mows down the human race. He spares not young man nor maiden nor him who stoops with age. Each going down leaves a void unfilled in some human breast; but the patriot's death sobers and fills with sorrow the nation's heart. If the blood of martyrs is seed of the church, then the life and death of the soldier who offered his life as a willing sacrifice for the preservation of the union, must remain the most fruitful germ in the formation of American character.

"It is well for a people to live in the present and to plan for the future but it is ill for people to forget the past. Thus far, in our history, we have not ceased to remember the toil, devotion and sacrifice of the living and the dead who, from '61 to '65 counted all else naught if thereby they might preserve the union of the states. Year by year with the beauty of the lily and the fragrance of the rose, we seek to voice above their graves the gratitude of the American to the hero of the age. Only a few now stand near the portals of that door which never outward swings. This year as they bedew with tears the graves of their long gone companions in arms, let the people of Indiana reverently lay aside their usual vocations and join in this solemn service. Let them make the day one of solemn consecration to the rights of men and of saddened reverence for that shedding of blood without which, thus far in the world's history, there being no remission of sin.

"In the hope that such will be the character of that day, I, Thomas R. Marshall, governor of the state of Indiana, do hereby designate and set apart Monday, May 30, 1910, as and do proclaim the same to be a legal holiday throughout the state. May all that is said that day come from lips afire with patriotism and hearts aglow with love for the hero dead and the hero living.

"Done at the capitol in Indianapolis and given under my hand and the great seal of the state of Indiana, this 11th day of May, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and ten and in the year of independence of the United States one hundred and thirty-four.

THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
Governor.

National Pharmaceutical Association Elects Professor Secretary.

HELP REVISE PURE FOOD LAWS

Professor C. W. Johnson, dean of the school of pharmacy, who is now in attendance at the American Association of Pharmaceutical Faculties at Richmond, Va., has been elected chairman of the section on education and legislation of that association. This is considered an important position and carries with it full membership in the council at the Richmond meeting. Prof. Johnson was also elected secretary-treasurer of the conference.

The association holds annual meetings in different cities throughout the country. Last year it was held at Los Angeles and this year at Richmond, Va.

Professor Johnson will be at Washington, D. C., working with the bureau of chemistry all summer. In this department he is on a committee to revise the standard of purity set by the government on drugs. The department is under the jurisdiction of the secretary of agriculture.

VANCE WOODCOX

Falls From Bicycle and Dislocates Left Arm.

Some little excitement was caused last Saturday morning about 10 o'clock, when Vance Woodcox, a young lad of about 9 years, fell from a bicycle and dislocated his left arm completely at the elbow joint. He had been sent to town on an errand and had borrowed Leon Kees' wheel to return on and as he was new at the business he was unable to manage the wheel. Upon starting from the bakery he attempted to mount the wheel and fell over it. He at once began to scream and Frank Kinsey ran and picked him up and took him to Dr. Lake's office, where the arm was put in its proper condition. He is getting along fine.

Do Not Hesitate

To come to St. Joe when you want Drugs, it is our pride and study to have what is known as a First Class Drug Store, then how do we do it, there is only one way and that is to buy fresh reliable goods and examine carefully to see if it is just what you would like to use personally, if it is not, then my plan is never to sell it. The harm would be greater than any profit could be. This same rule applies to Jewelry, Hammocks, Paints and Oils, China, Candy, Tobacco, etc., in fact everything handled in our store. We are always glad to show you what we have, get it for you if we can and be as reasonable as can be on all our prices. Our slogan is, "That you can do better at Dunkle's in St. Joe than other places."

Yours to Please,

Hi Dunkle,
The Druggist.

Address of Abe Lincoln

At the Dedication of Gettysburg Cemetery the 19th of November, 1863.

Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of the war. We have come to dedicate a position of that field as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that their nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate, we can not consecrate, we can not hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

Platter Sale a Success.

The Alex Platter sale was largely attended last Thursday. A large amount of stuff was to be sold and a good, fair price was realized from it. The stock sold well and the hogs went out of sight. Pigs weighing between 45 and 50 pounds were sold for $6.00 per head. C. F. Kagey, of St. Joe, served lunch and was sold completely out before the sale closed. Mr. Platter and wife expect to go West and visit with her relatives. Their many friends and neighbors will miss them and regret very much to lose them from the neighborhood. Mr. and Mrs. Platter were excellent neighbors.

Don't Bake for Your Sunday Dinner.

A Party at Mumaw's

Samuel Mumaw and wife, of north of town, were agreeably surprised last Friday evening. Mr. Mumaw's birthday was on Thursday and Mrs. Mumaw's on Saturday, and the neighbors wished to surprise them. About thirty were present and a good time was had. A lap supper was served and a most enjoyable time was had together.

Sends Clothing to Orphans

Last Thursday the Lutheran Aid Society held a sewing bee in the church basement and in the evening supper was served. On Friday the clothing was packed up and sent to the Orphans' Home at Springfield, Ohio. Thirteen pairs of pants were made for the little boys, besides the many articles of different kinds for the girls. Rev. Habey and wife have charge of the home and will be greatly appreciated by them.

Two New Machines.

St. Joe can boast of two more fine automobiles of the Ford make. D. F. Benninghoff and H. L. Dunkle are the owners. The purchases were made at Fort Wayne last week. Several others have the fever and something will result in a few days one way or the other. A great deal of pleasure is derived from an automobile. If you hang around perhaps they will ask you to go along some time.

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Telegraphic Information Gathered by the Few for the Enlightenment of the Many.

The Slaughter of Mail Clerks.

Eighty-two mail clerks were injured last year by engines bumping into trains standing at railroad stations, according to the report of T. J. Masten, chairman of the claims committee, submitted at the session of the annual convention of the Railway Mail Clerks' Association of America at Kansas City, Mo. He said the greatest number of accidents was due to collisions of trains, 143 clerks having been hurt in collisions last year. Two hundred different kinds of accidents were mentioned in the report.

Saved Half Hundred Lives.

There were sensational rescues by firemen in a blazing tenement on East Seventieth street, New York City. Mrs. Mary Miller, however, died in a fireman's arms from the effects of smoke inhalation after she had been dragged to the roof, while her husband, William Miller, clutching the 11-months-old son of the couple, unconscious and suffering from burns, was rescued just in time by another fireman. Fully forty persons were taken in this way from the burning structure where members of sixteen families had been trapped.

Longhorns Almost Gone.

The long horned cattle have disappeared on the range in Texas, and are gradually going the same way in Old Mexico. They are being graded up until the high grades and thoroughbreds of Holsteins, Herefords, Polled Angus, Durhams and Jerseys have taken their place. A hotel at Abilene has a pair of long horns from Coahuila, Mexico, that measure five feet from tip to tip. These specimens are rare, and will soon be numbered with old-time cowmen, the buffalo, antelope, lobo wolf and Indians.

Caught After Nine Years.

Nine years after his escape from a prison in Missouri, M. B. Bates was brought back to this country on his way to St. Louis, arriving in New York on the steamship Carmania from Liverpool, in charge of two St. Louis police officers. Bates, whose home was in St. Louis, was serving a sentence of twelve years for robbery when he broke jail. The Missouri authorities heard of his arrest in England for robbery and officers were sent on to bring him back on the expiration of his sentence.

Dr. Stebbins, Famous Traveler, Dead.

Dr. Roswell O. Stebbins, one of the foremost dentists of New York City and an Arctic explorer and traveler of note, died at his home of Bright's disease. Dr. Stebbins was born in Wetumpka, Ala., in 1855, and throughout his life showed great physical endurance. His love for travel led him to join numerous expeditions. He accompanied an expedition to Greenland in 1884 and was also a member of the Cook Mount McKinley expedition.

Pace Kills Son of Wealth.

Albert J. Snell, son of the millionaire Amos J. Snell, of Chicago, whose murder there in 1888 created a widespread sensation, was found dead in bed at a cheap rooming house in Chicago. He was 50 years old. He inherited a fortune from his father, and is said to have set a fast pace while the money lasted. He drifted steadily downward of late and for several years had made a hand-to-mouth living running errands on the docks.

Fourteen Hurt In Train Wreck.

Fourteen people were injured when two coaches of Denver & Rio Grande train No. 115 jumped the track two miles from Cucharas Junction, Colo. Spreading rails caused the wreck. Two cars went down the embankment.

Dies of Her Burns.

Mrs. Joseph T. Patton, of Onawa, Ia., who was burned while washing out a "rat," used in her hair, in gasoline, and was hurried to a hospital in Sioux City, following the accident, died there several hours later.

Shot from Ambush in Bloody Breathitt.

Alexander Combes, a member of a well known Breathitt County family, was shot and instantly killed from ambush while floating down the Kentucky river on a raft.

Boy Mashed Flat.

Riding on a ten-ton traction engine with his father, 5-year-old Raymond Genrich was jarred off in front of the roller at Logansport, Ind., and before the machine could be stopped the boy's body was mashed to a flat mass.

Shot in Fight with Robbers.

In a running fight between a posse of citizens and a band of robbers, who entered a bank at Wapanucka, Okla., a member of the posse was shot.

BIG LAKE SHIP SUNK; SCORE MAY BE LOST

Frank H. Goodyear of Cleveland Run Down by James B. Wood on Huron in Fog.

SURVIVING CRAFT SAVES SIX

Returns to Port Huron with Huge Hole in Bow Plates as Evidence of the Disaster.

The steel steamer Frank H. Goodyear of the Mitchell Transit Company lies in forty fathoms of water in Lake Huron about thirty-five miles off Point Aux Barques and probably eighteen persons met death in a collision between that vessel and the steamer James B. Wood, another steel boat, belonging to the Gilchrist Transportation Company. Five were saved. The collision occurred about 6 o'clock on a recent morning in a heavy fog which overhung the lake.

When the steamers came together the crew of the Goodyear, which is reported to have been struck amidships, had time only to seize life preservers. Only a few could jump overboard before the boat began to fill with water. The cook had just sounded the second call for breakfast on the Goodyear when the crash came and many were in the messroom. All rushed on deck and then the boat began to sink. Several jumped into the water and managed to get out of reach of the boat, which was filling fast.

Suddenly the Goodyear parted in the center and with a sound which could be heard above the whistling of the Wood, sank out of sight, carrying with it all except five on board. The bow of the Wood was stove in, but she rested on her bulkhead, and, although some water flowed into the hold, was kept afloat with the pumps. Captain Gibson of the Wood ordered the lifeboats lowered and gave the crew instructions to make every possible effort to save any of the sailors of the sinking steamer.

In a short time the yawlboat was brought alongside the Wood and Capt. Hemenger, Steward Frank Bassett, Mrs. Emma Bassett, Frank Mollick and George Grant were taken aboard, all exhausted from their exertions to save themselves during the time they were in the water. Many of the Goodyear's crew were killed by falling hatches before they had a chance to jump into the water. All had on life preservers when their vessel sank. The cook's baby was dashed from his arms by a falling hatch and the infant was lost.

Both the Wood and the Goodyear are large steel vessels. The Wood is 514 feet long and the Goodyear was 436 feet long. For more than seven hours the Wood remained at anchor near the scene of the collision, the captain hoping that he would be able to save others of the crew of the Goodyear. When the fog rose nothing was in sight, and as his boat was damaged and in danger of sinking he decided to return to Port Huron, Mich.

BALLOON LANDS IN MICHIGAN.

St. Louis Aeronauts Cover 470 Miles in Twenty-two Hours.

After an aerial flight lasting twenty-two hours, during a part of which a perilous journey was made through a dense fog over Lake Michigan, H. E. Honeywell and W. F. Asmann, aeronauts who left St. Louis Thursday afternoon in an effort to establish a new long-distance record, landed shortly after 3 o'clock Friday afternoon at the town of Shiloh, Mich. They had covered 470 miles when the monster gas bag, which carried them safely through varying air currents and other obstacles, had been anchored. It was their ambition to surpass the Lahm cup record of 731 miles, now held by A. Holland Forbes, but they were forced to abandon the trip on account of a dead calm.

COUNTESS AND OTHERS GUILTY.

Russian Enchantress and Accomplices Sentenced to Prison.

In Venice Friday the curtain was dropped on the most dramatic trial Europe has known in modern days, when the Countess Maria Tarnowska, "the enchantress," was sentenced to eight years in prison for the murder of her husband; her puppet accomplices, Prilukoff, the lawyer, to ten years, and Dr. Naumoff to three years. The last days of the trial, in which the evidence of the two accomplices exposed to the world the workings of this strange woman's mind, proved the Countess Tarnowska a reincarnation of the Borgias and left no doubt of her conviction.

IS KILLED "PLAYING SUICIDE."

Revolver Placed to Lad's Head by Companion, Is Discharged.

Joseph Klein, 11 years old, was fatally shot in Pittsburg, and John Allen, aged 17, who admits having shot his companion, and another boy who witnessed the shooting declare that the three were "playing suicide." Allen had placed the revolver at Klein's head, instructing him how to commit suicide, when the weapon was accidentally discharged. The bullet passed through Klein's head back of the right ear. He died soon after being carried by his mother to their home near by.

THE END OF THE JOY RIDE.

VOTE TWO DREADNOUGHTS.

Senators Down Burton Amendment for One Ship and Pass Naval Bill.

The Senate has passed a new naval appropriation bill authorizing two new battleships of the Dreadnought type by a vote of 26 to 39, defeating an amendment offered by Mr. Burton to authorize only one battleship. The bill carries an appropriation of $134,000,000.

During the debate, which was confined almost exclusively to the battleship question, two important amendments were adopted. One of them, offered by Senator Johnston, appropriates $450,000 for the purchase of torpedo boats "whose vitals are below the normal load line;" the other, by Senator Jones, eliminates railroad, county and municipal bonds from the securities which may be deposited by contractors. The naval increase for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, provided by the bill, is as follows:

Two first-class battleships to cost not exceeding $6,000,000 each, and when equipped with armor and armament about $12,500,000 each.

Two fleet colliers, to cost not exceeding $1,600,000 each.

Five submarine torpedo boats, not exceeding a total of $2,500,000.

Six torpedo boat destroyers to cost not exceeding $750,000 each.

The House bill provided only four submarines and no torpedo boat destroyers. The Senate also added a provision that not more than one of the battleships should be built by the same company. The provision inserted in the house requiring that the battleships and fleet colliers should be built under the "eight-hour law," was retained by the Senate.

NUN HELD FOR SWINDLE.

Arrest of Sister Candide in Paris Causes Sensation.

Sister Candide, a nun, famous in France for her charities and who has enjoyed for years the confidence and esteem of the best class of people, was arrested in Paris on a charge of larceny of jewelry from merchants who had confided it to her to sell. Her arrest was hastened by the suicide of Dr. Leon Petit, a well-known Paris physician, who left letters incriminating her in other shady transactions. Those who claim intimate knowledge of the facts say that liabilities of $800,000 have already been locasted and that the exposure now assured will show the career of this woman in holy garb to have been more remarkable in many ways than that of the notorious Mme. Humbert or that of Cassie Chadwick.

POLITICS and POLITICIANS

Speaker Cannon has declared that he will hold on to the speakership until March 4, 1911, unless Republican progressives join with the Democrats to remove him.

Senator Dolliver of Iowa was chosen by the Senate progressives to make a reply to the speeches of President Taft, Attorney General Wickersham and Representative Longworth.

It has been authoritatively stated that ex-President Roosevelt is not a candidate for any office. He has given no thought to the governorship of New York and very little to the senatorship so far as he himself is concerned.

Senator H. W. Barker of Sparta, one of the candidates for the Republican nomination for Governor of Wisconsin, says he does not represent either the stalwarts or progressives in the present fight, although in the past his sympathies have been with the La Follette faction.

"If the administration shall measure up to its full opportunity it will pass into history as one of the most noteworthy and useful administrations of recent time," declared Representative Martin of South Dakota, who delivered a speech in the House on combinations in restraint of trade and needed legislation in aid of more complete enforcement of the Sherman anti-trust act.

TAKE $32,034 AT STATION.

Express Money Packages Stolen from Platform at Oil City, Pa.

Three packages of money, containing $32,024.24, were stolen from the Pennsylvania station at Oil City, Pa., at 3:30 the other morning while John J. Truby, the agent, was loading baggage on a Buffalo-bound train. The money was being shipped by the Adams Express Company to Philadelphia. The Pennsylvania Railroad pay car arrived in Oil City late at night and turned over to the station agent three packages of money wrapped in manila paper, containing $32,024.24, which were receipted in the name of the Adams Express Company. The money was consigned to the treasurer's office of the Pennsylvania at Philadelphia. The packages proved to be too bulky for storage in the small station safe and Night Agent Truby placed them under a sack behind the ticket counter, covering them carefully. At 3:30 in the morning a train arrived and Truby stepped out on the platform, closing the office door behind him. The door is self-locking. While about 200 feet from the office Truby saw that the office door was not closed. Hurrying back he discovered that the packages of money were missing.

MINES TO REMAIN IDLE.

Illinois Operators and Men Fail to Reach Terms and Strike Is On.

Illinois coal operators and miners reached the parting of the ways Friday afternoon and the joint convention in Peoria adjourned sine die. The suspension which has been in effect since April 1 will now become a strike and test of endurance on both sides. No attempt will be made by the operators to resume with non-union miners, and it is probable that the mines will remain closed during the summer. The immediate effects of the strike are expected to show a sharp advance in coal prices in Chicago. No serious coal shortage is anticipated, as all the Eastern mines are in operation and able to supply the Chicago market, but at advanced prices.

Officials of the United Mine Workers have not yet outlined their plan of campaign or said whether the pump men and other mechanics now doing repair and alteration work in the mines are to be ordered out or not.

BABE UNDER 44 CARS; YET LIVES

New York Child, Hit by Engine, Is Unhurt After Long Train Passes.

The 2-year-old son of Ernest Allen escaped death as if by a miracle at Syracuse, N. Y. The baby was playing close to the railroad tracks near his home and was struck evidently by the step of a locomotive. He lay between the tracks while the locomotive and forty-four cars passed over him. When the last car had passed the youngster was picked up uninjured excepting a bump as the result of his fall.

RECEIVER FOR TRACTION CO.

Move by Creditors Puts Chicago Railways Co. in New Hands.

Following the entry of a judgment of $1,344,685 against theChicago Railways Company by Judge Farlin Q. Ball in the Superior Court, the big traction corporation was thrown into the hands of receivers by Judge Peter S. Grosscup in the United States District Court. The receivership was asked by the Westinghouse Electric Company on a claim for $69,514. Henry R. Blair, chairman of the board of directors of the Chicago Railways Company, and John M. Roach, president of the corporation, were named as receivers by Judge Grosscup. The suit for a receivership was understood to be friendly, and the proceedings were taken as a protective measure to safeguard the interests of the creditors, the stock and bondholders and the city. The total funded debt of the Chicago Railways Company amounts to $70,840,034.50.

MARRIED MAN SHOOTS A GIRL.

Denver Man, Whose Wife Lives in Chicago, Then Tries Suicide.

Harry Pike, a real estate dealer of Denver, whose wife lives in Chicago, and Miss Maezelle Ritter, a stenographer, occupy cots in adjoining wards in the county hospital in Denver, both suffering from serious bullet wounds fired by Pike because Miss Ritter refused to marry him. Pike argued with the girl in her apartments on Capitol Hill until late at night, and when she refused, on account of his wife, to accede to his wishes, shot her twice and, leaving her for dead, went to the Kaiserhof Hotel. Seating himself in the lobby, he shot himself in the head.

ROLLINS PLEADS GUILTY.

Former Governor Pays $2,000 Fine for Smuggling.

Former Governor Frank West Rollins of New Hampshire, who was accused on his arrival from Europe of trying to smuggle wearing and jewelry belonging to himself, wife and son, valued at $2,000, was indicted in New York by the federal grand jury and pleaded guilty to the charge. Judge Hand declared that the distinguished position occupied by the Rollins family made the crime all the more reprehensible and directed the accused to pay a fine of $2,000. The fine was paid.

RECEIVES ROOSEVELT.

Alexandra Expresses Appreciation of American Sympathy.

Queen Mother Alexandra received Mr. Roosevelt at Buckingham palace, London, the other day. The two had a long chat, in which her majesty took occasion to tell the former President how much she appreciated the sympathy expressed for her in America at the time of her bereavement. Subsequently the queen mother received Lord Strathcona, high commissioner of Canada, whom she asked to convey to the people of the dominion an expression of her gratitude for their love and sympathy.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY.

Minnesota produces 60,000,000 bushels of corn a year, the yield per acre exceeding that of Iowa.

One squab raiser at Morristown, N. J., last year sold $35,000 worth of these birds. Most of them went to the big hotels and restaurants of New York and to supply the great steamship lines.

Canada's total trade for the fiscal year ending March 31, reached the record figure of $667,143,189. This is an increase of $117,506,238, more than 20 per cent, as compared with the preceding year.

The branch United States assay office at Deadwood will hereafter purchase and ship East the gold from the Homestake mine, amounting to $6,000,000 a year. At prodent this is shipped direct to New York from Lead.

Miss E. Candler, of Caseville, Wis., produced and marketed 12,000 pounds of honey last season. This big crop was the output of 300 colonies of bees, and Miss Candler did with her own hands practically all the work.

The Week in Congress

In the Senate Thursday the Cummins amendment to the railroad bill requiring the approval of the interstate commerce commission to all increases in railroad rates before they take effect, was under consideration throughout the day, but no vote was reached. Mr. Cummins occupied the floor during the entire session. The regular Republicans and Democrats failed to reach an agreement. Campaign speeches occupied the House while sundry civil appropriation bill theoretically was under consideration. There was a strenuous debate on forestry, resulting in sending back for further conference a Senate amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill, giving the States 35 per cent instead of 25 per cent of the gross receipts from forestry administration. The remainder of the conference report was agreed to.

Whether there shall be authorized by the present Conress two or only one battleship was the subject of a long discussion in the Senate Friday while the naval appropriation bill was under consideration. The principal speakers were Senators Clay, Hale, Gallinger and Burton. It was brought out that the revenues of the present fiscal year probably would not equal the expenditures and that there would be an increased deficit. The tariff, ship subsidy, a lively disputation between Messrs. Ames of Massachusetts and Payne of New York, both Republicans, over Canadian tariff relations, and an arrignment of some of his Republican colleagues by Mr. Fish of New York, occupied Friday's session of the House. Messrs. McKinlay of California and Dickema of Michigan, Republicans, advocated the proposed $250,000 appropriation for enlarging the scope of the tariff board's ascertainment of tariff information.

In the Senate Saturday eulogies were delivered on the lives of the late Representatives Cushman of Washington and DeArmond of Missouri. No other business was transacted. Party issues held the attention of the House while the proposed appropriation of $250,000 in the sundry civil bill to enable President Taft's Tariff board to collect information for him was pending theoretically.

By the action of the Senate Monday the construction of two new battle ships for the navy was assured. Senator Burton's amendment to the naval appropriation bill to limit the authorization to one ship of the Dreadnought type instead of two, as authorized by the House, was defeated, 26 to 39. The bill then was passed. It carries appropriations aggregating $134,000,000. In the House the proposed appropriation of $250,000, as recommended by the President, was stricken from the bill on a point of order made by Mr. Fitzgerald of New York and decided by Representative Mann of Illinois, who was in the chair. In order to accomplish practically the same purpose in a different way, Chairman Tawney of the appropriations committee offered an amendment appropriating the same amount of money, but leaving out all reference to the tariff board. He hoped in this manner to bring the amendment within the House rules. Mr. Fitzgerald, however, made a point of order against the new provision, and this was pending when the House adjourned.

The Cummins amedment to the railroad bill prohibiting the putting into effect of increases in railroad rates until they shall have been approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission was before the Senate Tuesday. Arguments in favor of the amendment were made by Senators Cummins, Borah and Dolliver. Senator Martin suggested an amendment to the Cummins provision requiring the commission to pass upon all increases within six months after their filing. In the House an amendment to the sundry civil bill was adopted by a strict party vote of 110 to 83, appropriating $250,000 to enable the President to obtain such prices relating to production here or abroad as would be necessary for an enforcement of the tariff law. By a vote of 84 to 106 the House rejected an amendment reducing this allowance to $75,000.

A Fatal Temptation

CHAPTER VI.

Dr. John Blantire when quite young, just beginning his practice, had been called in to attend a young lady patient whose name was Sylvia Burton Carr—a girl not more than nineteen years of age. She lived with her father in a quiet, retired way, evidently on a slender income; and John Blantire had no idea that they were related to the great family of the Carrs, of Carrswell.

There had been a quarrel between the brothers of the Carr family—the eldest, Rudolph Carr, having disagreed with his two brothers, Richard and Edmund. Richard joined the army, and gained some distinction, after which he returned home badly wounded. He died unmarried, and without being reconciled to his brothers. The good-natured Edmund had neither strength, energy, nor wealth—he simply drifted through life; he married early, and had one daughter, named after her mother, Sylvia Burton. He never made any attempt to increase his small income; he had none of the spirit or ambition of the Carrs. He was content to read and to dream his life away. When his daughter Sylvia was in her nineteenth year, she fell dangerously ill; and John Blantire, then a poor, struggling surgeon, was hastily summoned, as being the nearest and the cheapest doctor within reach. Sylvia Burton Carr fell madly in love with him, and he with her.

"We shall be parted at once if my father knows of our attachment," she said to him. "He is indifferent on all subjects, but with regard to my future prospects he is decided. He would sooner see me dead than the wife of a poor doctor; but your wife I will be, John, nevertheless," she added, "and never the wife of any other man."

Eventually the young couple eloped, Sylvia declaring that it would be useless to endeavor to obtain her father's consent to their union. Mrs. Blantire never saw her father again. She had but one child, her son Laurence. The young man had never dreamed that the day and the hour would come when the Carrs, of Carrswell, would seek him. But the four sturdy sons of Rudolph had died one after the other from various causes, and then the old baronet fell ill with grief and anxiety. He began to wonder who was to succeed him. Edmund had one daughter—Sylvia Burton Carr; they found the registry of her birth; but they could find no trace of her. Her father was dead, her neighbors had long since lost sight of her. It was only after infinite trouble that the lawyers succeeded in discovering that she had married John Blantire, and had had one son. This son, if he were living, was indisputably Rudolph's heir and the future master of Carrswell, and forthwith the search recommenced for him.

When Messrs. North & Son received Laurence's first letter, Mr. North, the senior partner, answered it in person. It may be imagined what a sensation this visit caused at Seafield House; and when he told his errand the sensation was greater still. Mr. North smiled when he saw Laurence.

"You certainly have the Carr features," he said. "When you go to Carrswell, you will see many faces hanging on the walls there just like your own. There needs little confirmation of the fact that you are the son of Sylvia Burton Carr, and, when that is proved, you will be installed as Rudolph's heir."

The young assistant listened with a white, grave face that somewhat surprised the lawyer. He had expected some natural elation of spirits at the news he brought; but there was none. The young man's face grew graver and paler; he was thinking what a stain he had brought on an honored name, that he was unfit to uphold the glories of an ancient race because he had branded himself "thief." So he listened with a pale, shadowed face to the description of the brilliant future in store for him.

"If all goes well," Mr. North went on, "you will succeed to Carrswell and twenty thousand per annum. You do not look so delighted, Mr. Blantire, as I should do in your place."

"I am not worthy of it," he replied.

Every one in Seafield soon heard the news concerning Laurence Blantire, that he was heir to a great estate and title, that his mother had belonged to a good old family, and his father had run away with her. Before long it was known all over the countryside, and every one rejoiced to hear of the young doctor's good fortune. So many people came to see and to congratulate him, that Laurence had little time for his adieus. He found a few minutes for Miss Leigh. He sent to ask her if she would see him, and she hastened to the conservatory, where he awaited her. She held out her hand, and smiled as she greeted him.

"I am asking myself," she said, "if it be a fairy tale, or if it be true."

"It is true," he replied, "quite true. You can imagine how great is my gratitude to you; but for you rank and fortune would have found me in a dishonored grave. Think how much I owe you! Tell me, how shall I prove my gratitude to you?"

"You say you wish to prove your gratitude to me," she replied. "Perhaps the day may come when I shall ask you to do so."

"I shall not fail," she said, earnestly.

"Remember your words," she returned. "When I ask a favor, I shall remind you of them."

"No need to do that," he assured her. "I realise now," he went on, "what sin is; but for that dark background, I should be the happiest man in the world."

"You must forget it," she said, gently; and, looking at her with troubled eyes, he answered:

"It is the one thing I shall never be able to forget."

Laurence left Seafield House with good wishes and kind words lingering in his ears, but all deadened by the dark memory of his sin; only for that, how brightly happy he would have been!

CHAPTER VII.

It was late in the afternoon when the lawyer, accompanied by the young heir, arrived at Carrswell. Laurence was very silent as the carriage, which met them at the station, drove through the spacious and magnificent park—he was more silent still when the mansion itself came into view.

"I am the first Carr who has entered this house with the stain of a crime on his soul," thought the young heir; and the lawyer wondered again how any one could see this magnificent heritage and show so little emotion.

If he could but forget it—just for one hour! If he could regain the lightness of heart, the ease of mind, the serenity of conscience that had been his four months ago! Oh, thrice accursed sin, the memory of which would not die!—oh, dark and miserable shadow, that even all the glory of his present life could not brighten!

Rudolph was very ill—too ill to see the young heir on the night of his arrival; but the next morning he desired his presence. Rudolph lay in one of the state chambers—he looked very ill, very gray, and haggard.

"Welcome to Carrswell!" he said cordially though feebly. "You take the place of my sons to me."

"I wish," returned Laurence, gently, "that I could take the place of one son to you."

"I like the boy," said Rudolph, a few minutes later. "North, are all the documents right?"

The lawyer drew near with a roll of papers in his hand.

"I have everything here that can possibly be needed—certificates of the birth, marriage, and death of your brother, Edmund Carr, certificates of the birth, marriage, and death of his daughter, Sylvia Burton Carr, of the death of her husband, John Blantire, and of the birth of this young man, Laurence Carr Blantire."

"He must drop the name of Blantire, and take that of Carr," said Rudolph. "Come nearer to me," he continued; then, turning to the lawyer: "You are right, North; he has the true Carr face; no one could mistake him. If—if—I could have foreseen that I should have lost my sons, my four bonny lads, I would have tried to find the Blantires long ago. He looks good—he looks honest and true. Laurence, you will try to do credit to the old name?"

"That I will, Heaven helping me!" he replied.

"You will be a rich and a great man; you must be a good one also, or the rest will not avail."

"I will try, Heaven helping me," he answered. The recollection of that terrible fall of his was too strong upon him to allow him to say more.

"I like this boy," thought Rudolph; "he is modest and unassuming. Come nearer still, Laurence," he went on, aloud. "You are very young to find yourself placed in such a position; you will have many temptations; men will crowd round you—and women—ah! women, too—But perhaps you have a safeguard—have you?"

Laurence thought of the beautiful face that had so strangely impressed him; and, even as he thought of it, the expression of his own face changed and grew more bright and tender.

"I have," he replied; and there was quite another tone in his voice as he spoke.

"That is right, the heart of a young man is best in safe keeping. I shall not live long, Laurence, and for the short time I have to spend on earth you must remain with me, and try to learn how to manage a large estate. When I am gone, you can bring your bride home."

An impulse came over the young man to say, "I do not even know the name of the girl I love"—he never thought of Marion—she had been very good to him, she was very handsome and very proud, she had saved his life, but she never entered his thoughts as a girl to love and marry.

CHAPTER VIII

It was about three months after Laurence's installation as the heir of Carrswell that Rudolph sent for him to his room one morning.

"Laurence," he said, "owing to my illness you have had no opportunity of meeting our friends and neighbors. Here is a letter from Mr. D'Este; he lives at Swanscourt, about six miles from here, and he asks you to a dinner party next week, to be followed by a ball in the evening."

"I would much rather decline the invitation and remain at home with you," he young man replied. "I do not like to leave you."

"This is a social duty, you see, Laurence, one of the kind that ought to be fulfilled, whether we like it or not. He is one of our leading men; he has always shown the greatest courtesy and kindness toward me; doubtless he intends to continue the same toward you. You must go, Laurie."

"If you wish, sir," Laurence replied.

On the day indicated, young Blantire went to Swanscourt, and was most cordially welcomed by Mr. and Mrs. D'Este.

"We have been longing to make your acquaintance," said the former; "but Rudolph has been so ill, it seemed hardly right to trouble him with visitors. You are welcome to Swanscourt. As we are to be neighbors, we ought to knew each other."

Mr. D'Este was a kind, large-hearted, generous man. His wife was a nonenity. Though she was a handsome woman still, it was a languid kind of beauty, quite in accordance with her weak, sentimental character.

"You have not been introduced to my daughter," she said. Her heart warmed to the handsome, gallant young fellow, whom she felt sure her daughter would like. "Come with me," she added. "Magdalen is generally surrounded by a little court of admirers; she is at the further end of the room."

They paused before a beautiful, graceful girl. The light from the chandelier fell full upon her. Laurence saw the gleam of white pearls in the bright coils of her hair, and then his eyes rested on her face. A low exclamation burst involuntarily from her lips. It was the same face he had seen but once before in his life, but which had haunted his dreams persistently—the face of the girl he loved.

Mrs. D'Este looked up at him at the sudden exclamation. He had grown deathly pale. She smiled complacently. He was not the first one upon whom her daughter's charms had had a similar effect.

Meanwhile, the little crowd of admirers made way for the countess and the stranger, then the lovely face was turned smilingly to Laurence, the beautiful eyes rested kindly on him, as Magdalen said a few words in a voice that seemed to him like sweetest music—only a moment, and then she moved away to speak to some one else. When the countess left him, Laurence remained standing like a man in a dream. His eyes followed every movement of that graceful figure, saw nothing else—no one else; he forgot everything except the presence of Magdalen d'Este.

He never remembered afterward with whom he went down to dinner, of what viands he partook, or what subjects were discussed.

DEBTORS SAFE AND UNSAFE.

Much More than Honesty Considered by the Credit Man.

There are many people who have an idea that this business of giving or refusing credit is merely a matter of the applicant's honesty or dishonesty; but there's a whole lot to it besides that. Honesty is only one of the essentials of a safe risk—not all of them. Most business men are honest as honesty goes nowadays, the Bookkeeper says, but that alone does not constitute a valid reason why the credit man should turn over a good many dollars of his firm's money to them, to do with as they see fit. The difference between a safe debtor and an unsafe one is the difference between business capability and progressiveness, plus honesty, and business incompetence and languor, either with or without honesty—and there are a hundred and one other things to be considered in each individual case. The credit man's job offers opportunities for sleuthing as well as a place with the Pinkertons; the credit man, it is true, does not of necessity have to be able to tell, from an examination of the cigar as dropped on the office carpet by the suspect, just how much money that gentleman has at home in the bank, but he ought to be able to read plain signs and to gather some information of value to himself from the applicant's personality and his method of telling what he has to tell.

Just as the stream is limited in its rise by the height of its source, so is the credit man's chances for perfection in his work bounded by the completeness of his records. Our principal method of determining what is most likely to happen in the future is by a study and comparison of the things that have happened in the past. The fact that John Smith has always met his obligations with a certain degree of honesty and promptness is not, to be sure, any reason for believing that John Smith is absolutely certain to continue to do that same thing for all the rest of his life, but it is an excellent indication that—unless the whole course of his actions be changed by some occurrence of great consequence to him or his business activities be affected in some way by some circumstance which could not possibly be foreseen—he will continue to do that same thing. Like others, the credit man must be guided by a knowledge of what has gone before, and the more exhaustive and comprehensive a record he has of what has already happened, the better will be his chance for calculating wisely on future probabilities. The best carpenter living could not be expected to turn out a good job unless he had good tools to work with; the credit man's records are the tools of his trade.

The very name and appearance of a happy man breathe of good nature and help the rest of us to live.—R. L. Stevenson.

BODY OF EDWARD VII. BORNE TO THE GRAVE

Greatest Spectacle Since Victoria's Jubilee Marks Procession in London to Station.

NINE KINGS RIDE IN THE LINE

Many Persons Injured in the Crush of Hundreds of Thousands of Spectators.

The body of King Edward VII. was carried through the streets of London Friday in the presence of many hundred thousand subjects and with the Kings of nine European nations, several future rulers, representatives of all the royal families of the world and a former President of the United States following the casket from Westminster Hall to Paddington station. The cortege moved through solid double lines of red-coated soldiers standing with rifles reversed and the regimental colors dipped to the ground. At the railway station the casket was placed in a funeral car and taken to Windsor, where, after the Church of England service had been conducted by the Archbishop of Canterbury in St. George's Chapel, it was entombed in the Albert Memorial Chapel adjoining.

No such processional spectacle had been witnessed in London since Queen Victoria's jubilee. The parade included many of the greatest men of the kingdom, with representatives of all arms of the service and delegations from the most famous regiments of the empire and representative groups of foreign armies and navies. Behind the casket upon which rested the imperial symbols followed King Edward's charger, while his favorite terrier was led by a Highland soldier just before the imperial ensign. King George, Emperor William and several other members of royalty wore the uniforms of British generals. No personage in the parade attracted greater interest than did Theodore Roosevelt, the special American ambassador, whose civilian clothes contrasted curiously with the gilded state coach with its white-wigged and silk-stockinged flunkies, within which he rode. The booming of minute guns and the tolling of bells accompanied the movement of the procession, while the bands in turn played "The Dead March from Saul" and Chopin's "Funeral March."

The morning was clear, and a hot sun beat upon the great mass of humanity that lined the route of the procession. It is doubtful that so many people were ever before seen in London. At the Mall, in James street and at Hyde Park the throng almost overwhelmed the procession. The police and soldiers had to fight to prevent the lines being swept away by the crush. There were many broken limbs and other injuries were received. Hundreds of persons fainted, especially among the women who had been standing on the pavement for hours before the procession left Westminster Hall.

The terrific crush resulted in the injury of hundreds and 1,500 emergency patients being treated at regular hospitals.

INJURED IN MINE RIOT.

Officials and Strikers Wounded in Sharp Clash Near Pittston, Pa.

A riot broke out among striking miners at No. 14 colliery of the Pennsylvania Coal Company, near Pittston, Pa., following an attempt of a posse of State police, headed by Sergeant Henning, to disperse a crowd. Sheriff Rodda of Luzerne County hurried to the colliery and was shot at. Peter Sura, miner, was so severely clubbed by State policemen that he may die. State Trooper Jasper Oftedach was caught under his horse, which was felled by a blow, and he was badly clubbed. The riot was finally quelled; then another one broke out at the Ewen colliery, a mile away, but the rioters there dispersed when troopers arrived.

World's Rail Record Broken.

The world's record was broken the other day on the Michigan Central Railway, when two special trains of twelve coaches each carried the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers from Detroit to Niagara Falls. The first train ran the 224 miles from river to river without a stop in 224 minutes, and the second train in still better time—217 minutes.

Wreck of Fast Train Maims Eight.

Eight persons, including one woman, were injured when Illinois Central train No. 18, known as the Diamond Special, crashed into a wrecking train at the mouth of a tunnel at 8th street and Clark avenue, St. Louis. George E. Wyckoff, Chicago, express messenger, suffered internal injuries.

Auto Kills Man; Girl Is Held.

S. B. Shotwell, a broker, was struck and killed by an automobile in St. Paul while on his way home from the ball game. The machine was driven by Miss Theodora Stark, aged 19, of Minneapolis. She is held without bail pending an investigation.

New Envoy for Washington.

Dominico Da Gama, minister of Brazil to the Argentine Republic, will be appointed ambassador to the United States.

CHRISTIANS IN BIG PARADE AT THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

10,000 Men's Bible Class Members, Singing Hymns, March to Sunday School Mass Meeting.

An army of more than 10,000 members of men's Bible classes from all parts of the world marched down Pennsylvania avenue in Washington Friday and around the Capitol of the United States on their way to a monster mass meeting in Convention Hall. This was the feature of the day's session of the World's Sunday School Association. The broad steps on the east side of the Capitol were filled with thousands of women delegates to the convention and other Sunday school workers.

To the tune of "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and other hymns the paraders marched, bearing banners inscribed with numerous Christian mottoes. They were nearly an hour in passing the Capitol. Practically every country in the world and every State of the Union was represented in the parade.

As Convention Hall was not large enough to accommodate the crowd, another meeting was held in Mount Vernon Methodist Episcopal Church. Simultaneously two meetings for women were in progress. Rev. Dr. F. B. Meyer, president of the association, led the big men's meeting, the principal speakers being Rev. Dr. Homer C. Stuntz and Rev. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, who talked on "The Transforming Power of the Word of God." At the other men's meeting the principal speakers were Rev. Richard Roberts of England and Rev. Dr. George Heber Jones.

At one of the day sessions Rev. John Hillman of London outlined the Sunday school work of England, and Rev. Daniel Hayes, also of London, described the conditions in the slums of the British capital and the activities on the banks of the Congo in Central Africa, where he was formerly a missionary. Rev. N. Tamura of Japan depicted the "Victories of the Gospel in Japan," and emphatically declared his country surely would be a Christian nation in due time.

President Taft, Mrs. Taft, Colonel Roosevelt, King George of England, President Diaz of Mexico and William Jennings Bryan were made life members of the World's Sunday School Association in the Saturday session amid scenes of great enthusiasm. For each of those so honored $1,000 had to be subscribed, and in the case of Colonel Roosevelt the chairman of the convention by popular demand limited subscriptions to $1. The nomination of persons of less public renown continued until $65,000 had been pledged for mission work.

UTES GET $3,408,611 VERDICT.

Court Allows That Sum as Compensation for Indian Lands Seized.

The United States Court of Claims has handed down its decision in the Ute Indian case, entering judgment for the Indian claimants for $3,408,611.40 as just compensation for lands confiscated by the United States government. The tribes confederated in the suit were the White River Utes, the Uinta Utes, the Southern Utes, and the Uncompahgre Utes.

By an act of Congress jurisdiction of the Ute Indian reservation was vested in the Court of Claims in 1909, because land had been taken by minor treaties without just compensation, and large forest preserves were taken out, until the holdings of the Utes dwindled to a very small acreage. The judgment is to compensate for this, and in addtion to the money a tract of the government lands in Colorado, containing nearly 15,000,000 acres, will be set aside for the Utes as a reservation.

BOY PUTS BATTER OUT; DIES.

Hit in Abdomen by Ball, Lad Hurls Sphere and Falls Dead.

The baseball instinct was so strong in Harry Becker, a 14-year-old boy, that although he was knocked down and plainly badly injured when struck in the abdomen by a batted ball during a "scrub" game, he managed to throw the ball to first in time to catch the runner. That assist was the last that will be credited to him. As the umpire cried "Out!" Becker collapsed and he was dead when a physician reached his side.

Kansas Kidnaper Sent to Prison.

Freeman H. Tillotson, convicted at Holton, Kan., for aiding in kidnaping Marian Bleakley, the St. Louis World's Fair incubator baby, from Topeka, Kan., last August, was sentenced to an indeterminate term in prison by Judge Rains. Mrs. James G. Barclay, foster mother of the child, of Moline, Ill., for whom the girl was kidnaped, is yet to be tried.

Inventor of Rotary Snow Plow Dead.

Captain George W. Ruggles, known to railroad men throughout the country as the inventor of the rotary snow plow and to sportsmen as the inventor of notable improvements in the methods of constructing canoes, is dead at his home in Charlotte, a village near Rochester, N. Y.

Elevator Kills Millionaire.

Stepping from the elevator in his hotel in San Francisco, while the cage was in motion, Joseph Griffin, a millionaire of St. Thomas, Ont., was crushed to death. Griffin was 70 years of age.

Death to Train Wrecker.

Senator Oglesby has introduced a bill in the Louisiana legislature providing the death penalty for an attempt to wreck a passenger train.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of Chicago trade says:

"The smallest comparative gain of this year appears in the bank clearings, and high trading defaults continue to affect credits. These features in part may be attributed to special causes of a temporary nature, there being no clear evidence of a reaction in business aside from that due to the unseasonable weather, which has hindered operations to some extent recently.

"A more favorable development is seen in an increasing distribution of necessaries and crude materials, indicating that the purchasing power has not diminished, although the discount rate remains discouraging to extended enterprise.

"Railroad plans indicate that improvements through the coming financial year will be extensive and the successful flotation of bonds under negotiation will provide for much investment in extensions, trackage, power and rolling stock.

"The wholesale markets for general merchandise were strengthened by a satisfactory attendance of visiting merchants, and the buying compared favorably with this time last year in dry goods, clothing, boots and shoes, furniture, men's furnishings and food products.

"Bank clearings, $273,398,740, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1909 by 0.6 per cent, and compare with $227,439,132 in 1908.

"Failures reported in the Chicago district numbered 31, as against 36 last week, 24 in 1909 and 28 in 1908. Those with liabilities over $5,000 numbered 8, as against 16 last week, 16 in 1909 and 7 in 1908."

NEW YORK.

Trade reports, except in the Northwest and on the North Pacific coast, are of little gain in activity, and, indeed, in some lines, such as textile manufacturing, quiet or further curtailment is still the subject of discussion. Some lines of industry, it is true, are still active, prominent in these being the building trades; with hardware and other kindred lines. There is still evidence, however, that anticipations as to spring trade were keyed too high. Collections are little, if any, better than fair.

Business failures for the week ending with May 19 were 225, as against 216 last week, 219 in the like week of 1909, 284 in 1908, 165 in 1907, and 170 in 1906. Busines failures in Canada for the week numbered nineteen, which compares with twenty-four for last week and twenty-five in the corresponding week of last year.—Bradstreet's Report.

A Rare Experience.

"No doubt you recall the most enjoyable railroad trip you ever made?"

"Oh, yes. It was a short trip of only half a day, but because his private car had been derailed the president of the road was traveling with the common herd in an ordinary Pullman car."

"And so you enjoyed the novelty of traveling in close proximity to the president of the road?"

"No; it wasn't that particularly. I enjoyed seeing the porter look humble."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Bucked.

While occupying the pastorate of a Western church in his early career Dr. George H. Fenton had a deacon whose character had always been above reproach until a certain prayer meeting which followed a sermon during which the elder had soundly slumbered.

"Will Brother Jones kindly lead?" was asked by the pastor at the beginning of the prayer service.

Waking with a start at the mention of his name, the deacon almost broke up the service by replying: "I led last time. It's your turn. What are trumps?"—Philadelphia Record.

PITY FOR MAN AND BEAST.

Lovers of Animals Everywhere Regret Col. Swope's Plan Failed.

It will grieve lovers of animals to learn that the death of Col. Swope, the late Kansas City millionaire, defeated a project for a summer home where hard-worked city horses were to be provided rest, recreation and something good to eat.

The other day it was made known that the aged philanthropist had all but completed plans for paradise pastures when death intervened. Failing to make provision in his will the charity must perish, the Lincoln (Neb.) Star says, unless the idea should appeal to other rich men or to the Rockefeller foundation.

Necessary funds were to be provided for sufficient acreage, buildings and supervision. Enough sound horses to make a cavalry brigade were to have been kept in reserve

Every poor person in Kansas City who used a horse in his business was to have been searched out and loaned a fresh one while his own tired animal spent a few weeks in clover. In this way every weary, frazzled beast that plods the hot pavements from dawn to dark would have been afforded a genuine annual vacation.

Members of the Humane societies and those who are not but ought to be will regret that death spoiled the plan. The only comfort is in the knowledge that Swope did not copyright the idea. Any citizen of any town who has money to give away and knows not which direction to turn is at liberty to take the tip.

Next to a provision whereby overworked women and men could get a holiday in the country during the summer would be the contemplated relief for the overworked horse.

Some day the owner of some great fortune like Rockefeller or Carnegie will provide a fund for the relief of the toiling women and girls who never can get away for a day from the daily grind of life. Already provision is made in some cities for an outing for the babies and their mothers. The Daily News of Chicago has for years raised a fund for this purpose and thereby brought rest and health and happiness to thousands.

To relieve the faithful horse or dog from distress is a noble work, but suffering humanity is even more to be regarded by those who have the power to relieve them.

A REAL ROMANCE.

The saying that there is honor among thieves suggests the thought that if the virtue began a little further back it might prevent any practice of the profession. However, brigandage being an established fact, one may permit himself to admire the gallantry displayed by the bandit whose exploit is described by Andrew F. Crosse in his book, "Around About the Carpathians."

A certain lady, the widow of a wealthy man of title, inhabited a lonely castle not far from the route between Buda and Vienna. One morning she received a polite note requesting her to provide that night at 10 o'clock a supper for twelve gentlemen.

She knew at once the character of her self-invited guests, and devised a novel mode of defense. She dared not send for aid, for she knew every road between the castle and any town would be watched to prevent communication, so she made her own plans.

At 10 that evening up rode an armed band of twelve. The great gate of the outer court was thrown open as if for an honored guest. The lady herself, richly dressed, stood at the entrance to receive. She at once selected the chief, bade him welcome, and gave orders that the horses should be well cared for. Then, taking the arm of the chief, she led the way to the dining-room.

A goodly feast was spread on the table, and the sideboards were covered with a magnificent display of gold and silver plate.

The leader of the robber band started back in surprise, but recovering his presence of mind, he calmly seated himself by his hostess.

"Madame," he said, "the happiest moments of my life have always been the shortest. I have another engagement to-night which I must keep, but before I go allow me to tell you that in appealing to my honor as you have to-night, you have saved me from the commission of a crime. Bad as I am, on one ever appealed to my honor in vain. As for my men, I charge them to take nothing from this house. He who disobeys dies that instant."

The brigand then asked for paper and pen, and wrote a few sentences in strange characters.

"If you or your retainers ever lose anything," he added to his hostess, "post this publicly in the nearest town, and I pledge my word the missing article shall be returned."

The band departed. A few weeks later the chief was captured and hanged. He proved to be the impoverished younger son of a noble family of Hungary.

One kind of harmless crank revolves a grindstone with the assistance of a small boy. It isn't subject to violent turns.

HELPED LAY ATLANTIC CABLE.

William Napper Tells of Expedition of Which He Is a Survivor.

One of the survivors of the expedition, if indeed not the only one, that laid the first successful Atlantic cable in 1865 from Ireland to the coast of Newfoundland, William Napper, with his family has been spending several months in San Francisco, the Express of that city says.

Speaking of what was thought at the time an impossibility and of the real work in accomplishing the great enterprise, Mr. Napper said:

"The cable we laid in 1865 was the first one to be successfully completed so that it could be operated. There was a cable laid in 1856, but it did not last very long. Cyrus W. Field was the promoter of the enterprise, and knowing no such word as 'fail' he again became interested in the cable from Ireland to Newfoundland which we laid in 1865. When we started from Ireland we had 503 men aboard. We took on 14,000 tons of coal and more than 2,000 miles of cable. The Great Eastern was the ship we used to do the work with. In one place the water was so deep it required twenty-four miles of cable to lay four surface miles.

"A paper was edited on board the ship and bulletins issued every twenty minutes were tacked on the bridge. The first message sent over the cable is perhaps known by most Americans now. It was: 'Glory to God in the highest; peace on earth and good will to men.'

"When the job was completed Cyrus W. Field, who was with the party, gave each one of the 503 men one month's pay extra."

An Early Picnic.

A crowd of Butler young people, among whom were Miss Ethel Tess, Miss Grace Murch, Miss Mable Mutzfeld and Miss Alta Farner, were the guests of Miss Jennie Steward and Mr. Argyl Beams Wednesday and Thursday. The young people spent Wednesday evening in music and fun, and on Thursday they took a picnic trip up the river. They rowed until they came to a beautiful grassy bank and there they spent the day with fishing rods and rifles. At the noon hour well filled dinner baskets were emptied in picnic style and the enjoyment was at its highest. In the evening the young people returned to Butler after expressing their delight with the little town.

Poisoned on Canned Salmon.

A letter from St. Paul, Minn., written by Mrs. I. W. Adams, formerly Grace Fales, stated that a couple of weeks ago she and her sister, Lelah, had been severely poisoned by eating canned salmon. As is cutsomary, they bought salmon for their supper but failed to recognize anything wrong. In a short time they commenced to get sick and a physician was called in. He discovered that the salmon was not what it should be and that it was causing their trouble. Mrs. Adams stated that she had lost 18 pounds by her sickness and that Miss Lelah was again at her work. Their many friends here are glad to know that they escaped without serious results.

LITERARY FEAST

By the Renowned Author and Poet, Will Carlton, Opera House, Butler, Ind., June 9th.

Will Carlton is author of "Farm and City Ballads," "Farm and City Legends," "Farm and City Festivals," and many other books and is to Michigan what Whitcomb Riley is to Indiana, and these two are the greatest living poets to-day. There is only one "Carlton." Now is the time to hear him and it is a chance of a life time. The joy, love and tender pathos pictured by him will carry his listeners from the heights of laughter into the vale of tears and back again on the joyous wave of happiness. No one can hear him and not have a finer, grander view of life and be happier for it. Given under the auspices of Herr Co. No. 63, U. R. K. of P. Executive Committee: Capt. Geo. W. Geddes; 1st Lieut. Ed. W. Gengnagel; 2nd Lieut. Eugene Oberlin; Recorder, H. B. Miller; Major, F. D. Fanning, and ex-Representative, Luther Knisely. Reserve seats at Stone's drug store, June 1st. Tickets, 35c and 50c.

Lame shoulder is almost invariably caused by rheumatism of the muscles and yields quickly to the free application of Chamberlain's Liniment. This liniment is not only prompt and effectual, but in no way disagreeable to use. Sold by H. L. Dunkle, St. Joe, and W. L. Wernert, Spencerville.

The Blacksmith.

"It cured me," or "It saved the life of my child," are the expressions you hear every day about Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. This is true the world over where this valuable remedy has been introduced. No other medicine in use for diarrhoea or bowel complaints has received such general approval. The secret of the success of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy is that it cures. Sold by H. L. Dunkle, St. Joe, and W. L. Wernert, Spencerville.

ANIMALS DOOMED.

Every year marks the continuous decrease of wild animal life. It gives way to the progress of man into the hitherto hidden fastnesses of forest and jungle. Already the continent of North America has become practically depleted. Where swarmed millions of buffalo but a few years ago none at all remain, and the only existing specimens total scarcely an hundred collectively in shows, private parks and zoological gardens. Europe has practically none at all. Australia has only the kangaroo and other small pouched animals. Even in Asia they are displacing, while the enormous tide of emigration which is so rapidly carrying man into every part of Africa betokens an equally rapid lessening of the number and variety of wild animals on the dark continent.

In like proportion the value of the menagerie increases, for in them only may the study of natural history be profitably pursued by the masses. Notably the greatest and the only complete collection of wild animals in America is the menagerie of Robinson's Famous Show. In point of specimens of rare wild beasts there are none to compare favorably in either perfection or variety: Truth is always worth repeating, and it is true that the menagerie department of this show is a liberal education in natural history, and an hour's visit to it is of more value than a year of solid study from books and pictures. The incidental wonder and delight children find in seeingthe wild animals makes it a double duty of parents to give their little ones the pleasure and benefit that a visit to this mammoth menagerie will bring.

Robinosn's Famous Shows come to Auburn on Saturday June 11th.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

It is surprising the many different appetizing ways that Corned Beef can be prepared for the family's meals. Every one likes Corned Beef and there is no more healthful or delicious dish than Libby's, carefully selected from prime beef and properly "corned."

There is some waste, to be sure, when bought at the butcher's, but in the plan here suggested you may buy the finest corned beef in the world in which there is absolutely no waste and every particle of which can be eaten.

Suppose you ask your grocer for Libby's Corned Beef. It represents all full value—no bone, no gristle—just clean, pure corned beef selected first hand from the finest beef stock—no scraps or second pieces—and corned and cooked to perfection in Libby's wonderful white enamel kitchens. A can of Libby's Corned Beef sliced and served cold with dill pickles and potato salad is a delightful meal and will be enough for four people.

Corned Beef Hash.—Take the contents of a can, chop fine, add one-fourth as much boiled or baked potatoes, a little fried onion and a small quantity of water. Cook slowly until thoroughly heated, then serve on toast with or without poached eggs.

Corned Beef Omelette.—Beat the yolks and whites of four eggs separately and add one-half of the whites to all of the yolks. Put in a hot frying pan and, when nicely browned on the bottom, sprinkle a cup of minced corned beef over it. Spread over this the remainder of the whites, put in the oven and brown on top. Then fold and serve.

Creamed Corned Beef.—Mince the contents of a can of Libby's Corned Beef. Put over this a dressing of cream gravy with the yolk of an egg beaten into it. Serve on toast.

New England Boiled Dinner.—You may have this in one-fourth of the time it usually takes. Put a can of Libby's Corned Beef in boiling water—it is already cooked—and serve in the usual manner with vegetables.

Besides the economy in the use of Libby's Corned Beef, another great advantage to the housewife in using it is that it is all cooked when bought and there is no necessity for the long, tedious and expensive boiling which is necessary with raw corned beef. The house is not filled with steam and odors and valuable time is saved. Libby's Corned Beef is ready at once for serving in any one of the many ways mentioned above, and you will find it a great convenience to try it next time. Be sure you get Libby, McNeill & Libby's Corned Beef.

FIVE YEARS OF SUFFERING.

Restored to Health by Curing the Kidneys.

Mrs. A. P. Hester, 614 Fourth Ave., Evansville, Ind., says: "For five years I was laid up with kidney trouble for weeks at a time. My limbs were swollen and I suffered almost unbearable pain. The kidney secretions were scanty, passed too frequently and scalded. I shook like a person with palsy. My case completely puzzled the doctors. Finally I began with Doan's Kidney Pills, soon felt better and ere long was cured."

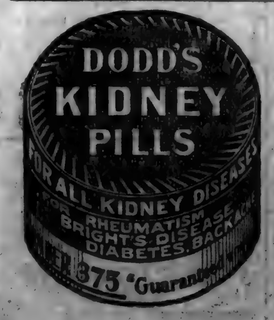
Flowers at Funerals.

The custom of having flowers at funerals is very ancient. The Greeks, centuries before the Christian era, crowned the dead body with flowers and also placed flowers on the tomb. The Romans decked the funeral couch with leaves and flowers and spread flowers, wreaths and fillets on the tomb of friends. Most of our funeral customs are derived from the Romans, such as dressing in black, walking or riding in procession, raising a mound over the graves, etc., and among the rest is that of using flowers at funerals.



THE POPULAR PULPIT

CALLED TO BE WITNESS.

By Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D. D.

"And ye shall be witnesses unto me." Acts 1, 8.

The word "witness" is one of the great words of the Bible. It is found at least a hundred times in the Old and New Testaments with reference to testimony to God; and the thought that lies beneath the word is simply "telling out what we know," for which any child is competent, and for which even the greatest man is no more than competent. To know something about God and tell what we know—that is witness in the true Biblical sense.

There is the relation of the witness to God Himself. "Ye are My witnesses, saith the Lord." "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me." God depends upon human witnesses; the Lord Jesus Christ is dependent upon His followers for witnessing of Him to a dying world. If we do not testify for the Lord by lip or pen, how is He going to proclaim His gracious Gospel? This great work of witnessing is the magnificent and all-comprehensive work of Christians individually and collectively. As long as the church rests upon the rock-foundation of Peter's confession, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God"—the foundation upon which our Lord said He would build His church—"the gates of hell shall not prevail against it," but it shall stand unaffected by demoniacal rage and malice.

What is all work for God, but a witness to the fact that He has a claim on our service? Witness is expansive, expulsive and explosive. Witness makes us greater men and women, it enlarges our experience, it deepens our sense of God, it closely identifies us with the Faithful and True Witness, the very "Amen" of God. Witness casts out trifling, hindering, enslaving, defiling things; it makes it impossible for us to follow the idols of the world. If we have really got the love of God in our hearts we shall be constrained to witness for Him.

The greatest witness in the Word of God, next to the Lord Jesus Christ, is not Paul the apostle, but the dying thief. We have long depreciated the penitent thief. There was the darkness over all the earth, there was the dying Christ, and even the disciples themselves had given up their hopes that Christ was He "who should have redeemed Israel." Perhaps that penitent thief had never seen Christ before, or, at best, only in the course of the trial, when the Christ said: "I am a King; My kingdom is not of this world." He had no opportunity, for aught we know, of any acquaintance with the Lord Jesus Christ or with His teaching. And yet, while the other malefactor railed on Him, he gave his witness, even before he had the Lord's assurance and blessing. He said: "Doth not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation? And we indeed justly, for we receive the due reward of our deeds; but this Man hath done nothing amiss." What a melting testimony! A thief dying on a cross and Jesus Christ dying beside him, he not knowing the person of Christ or His character, never having even sat under His teaching; and yet that poor penitent thief saw a King in the dying Jesus, and that death and burial were the ushering of the King into His kingdom. He says: "Lord, remember me when Thou comest into Thy kingdom." There is hardly anything more pathetic and melting and marvelous in the whole of the New Testament than that penitent thief's testimony and prayer.

The next most marvelous witness in the New Testament is the blind man, John 9. Eight times he witnessed to Christ. He witnessed to his own identity—to the cure and the manner of it; he repeated that witness before the Pharisees; he bore his witness to Christ as a prophet; he bore his witness to Christ as his Master. The words: "Will ye also be His disciples?" showed that he had virtually accepted Him as his Master; he confessed Him as the greatest miracle-worker since the world began; he confessed Him as a righteous Man; he owned Him probably as Messiah when he said, "If this Man were not from God, He could do nothing." These eight times he witnessed to Christ, and when our Lord found him cast out, He said: "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" and the man said: "Who is He, Lord, that I might believe on Him?" he was in an attitude of craving new light and knowledge, that he might obey. The Lord Jesus said to him: "Thou hast both seen Him, and it is He that now talketh with thee." And he said, "Lord I believe. And he worshipped Him." All that probably took place in the course of a few hours, and the man gained more light every time he testified.

Experience enriches testimony, but testimony enriches experience. Every time he confessed something that he found, the Lord revealed to him something he had not previously known. Many people keep silence because they think they do not know anything; but they do not know more because they keep silence.

Yet it is a dangerous thing to give what is not a sincere expression of experience. To talk about and pray for consecration, while your neighbors and family know that you are carnal—it is a dangerous thing to yourself and hurtful to other people. Lot was twenty years in Sodom, and he never saved a soul that we know of. If he had brought one soul to God in each of these twenty years, Sodom would not have perished. There was no man in the Old Testament that compared with Daniel as one who witnessed to God. Not only were Daniel's enemies compelled to confess that he was a faultless man, but King Darius glorified the God of Daniel; Daniel compelled Darius to confess to the reality of Jehovah. Are you a sincere and genuine witness? Is the testimony of your lips borne out in your life? I beseech you, turn unto God, that He may enrich your spiritual experience, and then be sure that your experience enriches your testimony in a constantly growing manner.

SONGS IN THE NIGHT.

By Rev. James Mudge, D. D.

"But none saith, where is God my Maker, who giveth songs in the night?"—Job 35:10.

The night of grief and pain comes to all. Soon or late, more or less, we What shall we do with it? Defeat, devastation, peace, triumph—which will we have? The Almighty is fully able to make his children victorious over all their trials, turning them into means of grace for which hearty thanks can most fitly be given. It is possible not merely to bear them with patience and resignation, but to rejoice greatly at the glorious results therein wrought.

We may raise to God, in the night of affliction, a song of trust. We may say, "Though He slay me, yet I will trust in Him;" "Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall there be any fruit in the vine, yet I rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation." The song of trust necessarily becomes also a song of joy and hope, of peace and contentment. We find that our burden is our boon, that what breaks our trust in the creature enables us to lay hold on the Creator, and that this is a most blessed exchange. It is only in the dark valley that we thoroughly learn to sing with the Psalmist, "I will fear no evil, for Thou are with me." It is only when it is black around us that the eternal stars shine out. "Darkness shows us worlds of light we never see by day," and never could see.

Do we sometimes, in a moment of fierce temptation or anguish, feel like saying, "Lord, take away pain!" If so, brief reflection shows us the folly of it, For, as Browning says, "Put pain from out the world, what room were left for thanks to God, for love to man?" Pain is the greatest of God's teachers. By it we learn sympathy with others. Without it we should be hard and cold and selfish, self-contained, self-centered, self-conceited. Unspeakably precious lessons of brotherhood and helpfulness come from our pangs and our prostrations, our faults and our failures. What a mercy is physical pain which warns us that something is out of order in the body and needs attention, thus preventing our sudden dissolution. Nor is it otherwise with pain mental, which calls a halt in our proud career of self-sufficiency, throws us back on our fellows, equips us for service, puts us into the way of communion with God, companionship with Jesus. It has wonderful compensations. "The deepest griefs have hollest ministries."

HYMNS AND THEIR AUTHORS

JUST FOR TO-DAY.

By Ernest R. Wilberforce.

[The author of this hymn is a descendant of the Great William Wilberforce, the philanthropist, and a son of Samuel Wilberforce, the bishop of Oxford, and later of Winchester. He was born in 1840 and became canon of Winchester in 1878 and, later, bishop of Newcastle. This is his only hymn which has attained popularity and this has been of recent growth. It was written for a morning prayer at private devotion.]

Lord, for to-morrow and its needs
I do not pray;
Keep me, my God, from stain of sin
Just for to-day.

Help me to labor earnestly
And duly pray;
Let me be kind in word and deed,
Father, to-day.

Let me no wrong or idle word
Unthinking say;
Set thou a seal upon my lips
Through all to-day.

Let me in season, Lord, be grave,
In season gay;
Let me be faithful to thy grace,
Dear Lord, to-day.

And if, to-day, this life of mine
Should ebb away,
Give me thy sacrament divine,
Father, to-day.

So for to-morrow and its needs
I do not pray;
Still keep me, guide me, love me, Lord,
Through each to-day.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't forget that fanaticism is a germ of zeal and falsehood.

Don't lose hope of your brother lest you lose faith in your Father.

Don't forget that he has ceased to live who does not long for more life.

Don't mistake the faith that is anxious to kill for the faith that is ready to die.

Don't become deluded by the feeling that you are raising yourself by depraising others.

Don't imagine that the suffering of the saints under the sermon augments their grace.

Don't overlook the fact that to know yourself may prevent some lies if it does not reveal all truth.

Don't forget that a fool seeking wisdom is better than a wise man satisfied with what he has.

Don't fail to observe that a neighbor's reputation is often improved by giving the imagination a rest.

ATTRACTIVE UGLY MEN

Many Whose Faces Frightened Little Children Were Noted Lady Killers.

JOHN WILKES CAPTURED ALL.

Married the Prettiest Heiress of His Time—Pair Labeled "Beauty and the Beast."

Many of the plainest men of whom we have any record have not only won pretty and well-dowered brides, but have been able to pick and choose among the fairest, to the confusion of their more well-favored rivals.

Was there ever a plainer wooer, we wonder, than John Wilkes, the famous champion of popular liberties and one of the most dissolute men of his day? asks Tit-Bits. So ugly was Wilkes that the very children ran away shrieking at sight of him in the streets, and yet such was the spell he cast over women that "ladies of beauty and fashion vied with each other for his notice, while men of handsome exterior and all courtly graces looked enviously on."

"Give me a quarter of an hour's start," he used to boast, "and I will win any lady's hand against the handsomest man in England." And he could have done it, too. There were few beauties, however fair or highly placed, whose hands could not have been his for the asking, and in the very early '20s he won for his wife one of the loveliest heiresses of the time—a lady who refused more than one coronet—to be his bride. "'Beauty and the Beast,' they call us," Wilkes once said to a friend, "and really I cannot find fault with the description."

Brougham, the great lord chancellor, was a man of almost repellant ugliness, without a solitary compensating grace of speech or manner. When anyone asked, "Where is Brougham?" the invariable answer was, "Where the ladies are thickest." And, sure enough, there he was; and the more he repelled his fair persecutors, the more they clustered round him.

Another famous "lady killer" was Jean Paul Marat, one of the leading and most infamous figures in the French revolution. "Beyond any question," wrote a contemporary, "M. Marat is the ugliest man in the whole of France—and not merely ugly, but positively repulsive in person, habits and manners."

Even while hiding in the sewers of Paris, he was devotedly nursed by one of the loveliest of his admirers, whom he "married one fine day in the presence of the sun."

If possible, a still more repulsive man was Potemkin, the ex-private soldier who enslaved the fancy of Catherine the Great, and by her favor was made virtually Czar of Russia. "Dreadful and repulsive" was the description of him by one who knew him. "He has an unwieldy figure and knock-knees, is swarthy of skin, coarse in feature and has lost one eye. He often passes whole days in his room half dressed, uncombed, unwashed, biting his nails and scratching his untidy head."

But perhaps the most remarkable of all these cases of woman's infatuation for ugly men was that of W. Hamilton, a Scotsman of a century and a half ago. Hamilton was not only preternaturally ugly, but he was terribly deformed. "His legs," we are told, "were drawn up to his ears, his arms were twisted backward and almost every member was out of joint."

In spite of these terrible physical drawbacks Hamilton easily outstripped all the gallants in his district in the favor of the ladies. "He might have married any of them for the asking—indeed, it is said several of them actually asked him," says a chronicler. But he remained proof against all their wiles until after his eightieth birthday, and then he married a girl of 20, himself being carried to the altar on men's shoulders.

JOHN ALDEN WAY IN CHINA.

Chinese Student Lovers Like Having a Middleman Propose for Them.

Dr. Isaac T. Headland, a resident of Pekin for many years, where he enjoyed the friendship of the late dowager empress, throws a new light on the new women of China. Taking up the relations between the sexes and especially the Chinese method of getting a wife, the Travel Magazine says, he repeats a conversation with a young Chinaman who had recently become engaged to a Chinese maiden with whom he had never spoken.

"We students have a very great advantage over the old Chinese method of finding a wife and getting engaged," said my celestial friend.

"What do you mean?" I inquired.

"Well, you see, by the old Chinese method a man can never see his wife until she is brought to his home, unless he can bribe the middleman to allow him to stand on the street corner and see her pass by in a cart."

"And what advantage do you have?"

"We see the girls in church," he answered. "They also can see us. We have sisters in the girls' school; they have brothers in the college, and when we go home during vacation we can learn all about each other."

"This is an advantage."

"In my judgment," he continued, "we have a better method than even you foreigners have."

"How is that?"

"Well, you see," he continued, "after we have selected the lady we want, we can have a middleman go and ask her for us, while you have to go and ask the lady yourself."

"But," I objected, "we can get so much better acquainted by our method."

"Yes, that's true," he admitted, "but doesn't it make you awfully angry if you ask a girl to marry you and she refuses?"

It was necessary to admit that there were advantages in the middleman method which had never occurred to me, and, while I was not ready to acknowledge that his new-found method was better than mine, I could still see that the force which brought it about was bringing woman out of her seclusion and placing her on a level with her brother and her future husband.

A Compliment for the Senator.

When the young teacher of a small Western New York charity kindergarten asked a new boy his name, she was rather taken aback to have him answer, "It's Chauncey Depew, ma'am."

A few days later, having heard that Chauncey was ill, she went to inquire for him.

The door was opened by a neat-looking Irish woman, who, on being asked, "Is this Mrs. Depew?" replied: "No, ma'am, that's not my name."

"But," said the nonplussed teacher, "Chauncey told me his name was Chauncey Depew."

"Sure, it is," promptly answered the proud mother, "I named him for the sinator meself. My name is Mrs. Pugh, an' his is Chauncey D.—Chauncey D. Pugh."

If we were a girl we would insist on being named Roberta.

Thomas Hood's Oversight.

Thomas Hood gave to literature the undying "Song of the Shirt," but he might have written an even sadder song, that of the washtub. Easy Task laundry soap was unknown in his day. It is only for the last quarter century that it has been relieving women of backaches and bruised hands. It takes the dirt out of or off anything —actually does most of the work itself. Your grocer has it.

Flowers Bloom in Darkness.

After two years of experimenting with nearly every spring flower of this section of the country, Dr. Marion Mackenzie of the department of biology at Temple University has established the fact that every kind will blossom as quickly and as beautifully in the darkness as in the light, says the Philadelphia North American.

The experiments were conducted in the greenhouses of the botanical garden at the University of Pennsylvania and extended over two years. The flowering plants were studied comparatively under conditions of high and low temperature, in the darkness and in the sunlight.

Among the varieties that flowered in the darkness were the violet, all varieties of the maple and poplar trees, the wild azalea, sassafras, the jack-in-the-pulpit and the skunk cabbage. The observation that darkness does not retard the blossoming was so generally true that Dr. Mackenzie thinks it justifiable to state as a result of her experimental work that all flowers of our climate will bloom under these remarkably unnatural conditions.

It was a matter of some surprise to Dr. Mackenzie that the skunk cabbage, thought by even the most admiring naturalists to be a worthless perennial plant, burst forth into a rich bloom when brought indoors. The flowers, too, noted the experimenter, are more gorgeous than those of many plants that the housewives of to-day are harboring in their homes.

WESTERN CANADA

What J. J. Hill, the Great Railroad Magnate, Says About its Wheat-Producing Powers

"The greatest need of this country (United States) in another generation or two will be the providing of homes for its people and producing sufficient for them. The days of our prominence as a wheat exporting country are gone. Canada is to be the great wheat country."

This great railroad magnate is taking advantage of the situation by extensive railway building to the wheat fields of Western Canada.

Upwards of 125 Million Bushels of Wheat

were harvested in 1909. Average of the three provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba will be upwards of 23 bushels per acre.

Unsightly Complexions.

The constant use of Cuticura Soap, assisted by Cuticura Ointment, for toilet, bath and nursery purposes not only preserves, purifies, and beautifies the skin, scalp, hair and hands, but prevents inflammation, irritation and clogging of the pores, the common cause of pimples, blackheads, redness and roughness, yellow, oily, mothy and other unwholesome conditions of the complexion and skin. All who delight in a clear skin, soft, white hands, a clean, wholesome scalp and live, glossy hair, will find Cuticura Soap most successful in realizing every expectation.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment are admirably adapted to preserve the health of the skin and scalp of infants and children, and to prevent minor blemishes or inherited skin humors becoming chronic, and may be used from the hour of birth. Cuticura Remedies are sold throughout the civilized world. Send to Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., sole proprietors, Boston, Mass., for their free Cuticura Book, 32 pages of invaluable advice on care and treatment of the skin, scalp and hair.

To Make Clothes Last.

Table linen is expensive. It costs more today than it did five years ago. When it begins to wear in holes, to come from the wash with worn spots that tell how soon it will be no good, no wonder the housewife despairs. Cheap, common soap full of caustic that eat the linen are greatly to blame. Easy Task laundry soap is an enemy to dirt and stains and a friend to the table linen. Get two five cent cakes; try it, and if it does not surprise and satisfy you the makers will return your money.

What does that mean?

It means that the men that in a past generation would have been independent merchants are now the employes of these stores, and never can be anything else; employes on wages with time checks, fines, and their daily work dependent upon a manager's caprice. That is their prospect in life. It is hard (in some of its aspects), and we dislike to admit it, but it is the truth.

The gigantic department stores and mail order houses are built of the ruins of independent stores, just as the Christian churches of Rome were built of the fragments of the old temples, and each independent store destroyed is an independent merchant turned into a salaried employe.—Charles Edward Russell in Success Magazine.

Just a Chance.

"Yes, you offer the property low enough, Mr. Yipsley," said the real estate agent, "but it will be best for you to give some satisfactory reason for wanting to sell."

"The reason why I want to sell is that the property is all run down. It doesn't bring me 2 per cent on the money invested in it. I'm not offering it at a sacrifice. I don't need the money. I want to get rid of it, but I am asking all it's worth."

"Um—well, I'll list it for you, Mr. Yipsley," said the real estate agent. "It's barely possible that the novelty of the thing may attract some equally cranky purchaser."

REVIEW OF INDIANA

A week ago Sherwood Biggs, of Brookville, bought a new auto. He took his father-in-law, Louis Hornung, and his 12-year-old nephews, Hubert Hornung and Rudolph Kissel, for a ride. The machine skidded off a bank and turned turtle. Kissel was killed and Louis Hornung was badly injured. Biggs escaped unhurt.

Winfield S. Fowler, who came prospecting to the Indiana oil fields from Virginia two years ago, was standing alone near his pump at Hartford City. He wore a long overall coat, buttoned tightly at the throat. A whirling shaft caught the tail of the coat, ripped it up the back to the neck band and garroted him. He was dead when released.

Luther Martin, manager of the Western Union office at Madison, who died last week, was connected with the office for fifty years and was manager for forty-six years. Officers of the company say he kept the best and cleanest set of books of any employe of the company and that he had no superior as an honest, faithful employe.

A million wall-eyed pike were placed in the Kankakee river, north of Morocco recently by C. H. Briggs, president of the Kankakee Fish and Game Association. The fish were hatched by the Illinois State Fish and Game Commission and represented one-eighth of the commission's total supply. Assurances have been received of further consignments of bass and other game fish.

Charles Kammar, a blind man with a police record, was shot and killed at Terre Haute by William Marsh, while attempting to rob Marsh's hencoop. Kammar's slayer has been the victim of chicken thieves on several occasions recently, and the night Kammar visited him, he lay in wait with a revolver. When Kammar appeared in the poultry yard and was preparing to fill a sack with fowls Marsh opened fire. The wounded man died in jail soon afterward.

George Cook, aged 82 years, a prominent farmer who lived north of Rochester, was drowned in the Tippecanoe river. He had been fishing in the morning, and when he did not return at supper time his daughter started in search of him. She found a rowboat run up near the shore and the body of her father hanging backward over the side with the feet in the boat and the head and shoulders beneath the water. The Coroner gave the cause of death as accidental. Five children survive.

The biggest elephant of the herd belonging to the Norris & Rowe shows, which are in the hands of a receiver and are quartered at the circus winter quarters east of Peru, broke its chains a few night ago, and in walking about the big barn broke through a platform near the door. Because the elephant could not extricate itself it became angry, broke down a door, shattered several windows and trumpeted so loudly that the other animals set up a howl and created intense excitement for a while.

Because his bull terrier swallowed a $10 bill which was dropped by a man in a Logansport cafe, Chris. Panton, who runs a tailoring establishment in that city, is threatened with a lawsuit. The man has made a demand on Panton for $10 in place of the one which the dog destroyed and the tailor has refused. However, he offered to give the owner of the $10 the dog, but this was refused. The man says if he does not receive $10 he will sue, and Panton says that he can have the dog, but that he will not give up a "ten spot."

William Geake, of Fort Wayne, who is known all over the United States for his eminence in Masonry, has just been elected thrice potent master of the Fort Wayne Lodge of Perfection, A. A. S. R., for the twenty-fourth consecutive term. In all the history of Masonry, so far as is known, there is but one case in which any man has served at the head of a lodge of perfection for a greater number of years consecutively than Mr. Geake has presided over the Fort Wayne body. He is a member of the Supreme Council and the ranking deputy for Indiana. But a short time ago Mr. Geake was elected an honorary member of the Supreme Council of Italy.

Elwood physicians who were called to the home of George Kimberlin, in the Frankton neighborhood, report a case that puzzles them. Kimberlin, while watering stock, was struck by a heavy iron casting that fell from the windmill. The piece of iron struck his right arm near the shoulder, crushing the flesh and bone and lacerating the main artery. The wound was dressed and it was thought at the time that the arm could be saved, although of little use to the injured man in after life. Eighteen days later it was found that the arm was lifeless, and was shriveling up. The puzzling thing is that blood poison did not set in. Instead the bone, tissue and flesh dried up.

While looking out of his bedroom window trying to see Halley's comet, Jacob Haberiach, a barber of Evansville, aged 48 years, became unduly excited and fell over dead from the effects of heart disease.

J. T. Arkins, aged 25, of Indianapolis, brakeman on a Pennsylvania freight train, was fatally injured in the railroad yards of Greenfield when he was run down by a train. He was removed to Dr. C. K. Bruner's sanitarium.

Mrs. David Hobbs, living near Atlanta, had a brooder, raised from the ground to give ventilation and with apertures in the body. Last week she found that forty-six little chickens had had their feet eaten off by rats, which found their way under the coop. The chicks were not otherwise injured.

The Twelfth Councilor District Medical Society, at its convention in Fort Wayne, elected officers for the coming year as follows: President, Dr. Fred Metz, Ossian; vice-president, Dr. W. W. Swartz, Auburn; second vice-president, Dr. Woodward Hays, Albion, and secretary, Dr. Garrette Van Swearingen, Fort Wayne.

Farmers' wives in the vicinity of Morocco say that goose eggs, as a rule, will not hatch this season, and not a few of thes women show a disposition to hold Halley's comet responsible for the trouble—at least till a more satisfactory explanation of the matter is forthcoming. One woman reports that out of ninety-six eggs but two were hatched.

Representatives of more than a score of churches in Fort Wayne and Allen County, at a meeting held recently, took preliminary steps for the formation of a permanent county organization in connection with the Laymen's Missionary Movement. Permanent officers will be named in advance of a banquet which is to be held in Fort Wayne soon, when covers will be laid for one thousand men.

Hiram McFeron, a Columbus nurseryman, who was called to Mitchell and Bedford a few weeks ago to wage war on white ants, has again been called to Bedford. Ants have made their appearance at the home of J. H. Hartley, owner of stone interests at Bedford. The white ants had been eating away the timbers of his home and all but took charge of the house. McFerron "shot them" with hydrocyanic gas, and believes they will not come back.

Eight cows belonging to Byrne Zollerman, living near Walton, ten miles south of Logansport, which were bitten by a rabid dog a fortnight ago, went mad and frantically raced about the pasture, bumping into and knocking down other stock. They finally became so violent and the danger of affecting other cattle became so great, that they were shot. Other live stock was bitten by mad dogs a couple of weeks ago and since the Zollerman cows went mad, alarm is felt by farmers throughout the district.

Miss Goldie Gibson, who has just graduated from the North Salem High School, has a record for attendance which stands alone in Hendricks County. During the twelve years she was in school she was neither tardy nor absent from school, nor did she in all that time miss a single recitation. She was regarded as one of the best students in the school. Not only did she keep up her school work, but she also devoted a part of each day for several years studying the violin, on which she is a finished performer. She also assists her mother in the housework and often aids her father at his grocery by keeping his books.

Uncle Jesse Eggers, aged 92 years, who lives west of New Maysville, Putnam County, has just made his annual visit to Danville, on horseback. For years it has been his custom to make the trip in this manner, and no matter what comes up to disarrange his plans he invariably succeeds in carrying out this part of the program. The aged man is amply able to ride in as good a buggy as could be made, or even make the trip in his own automobile, should he so desire, but he insists on saddling his trusty horse and making the journey of thirty miles on the animal's back. He has an easy-going horse and a saddle that has been in service many years. For one of his age the trip is regarded as remarkable, but Mr. Eggers says that he thoroughly enjoys the exercise and that after he gets home he feels as spry as a two-year-old.

An unusual number of circumstances in the life of the Rev. Dr. L. J. Naftzger, of Greenfield, is connected with the number 13. His father and mother was each a member of a family of thirteen, and they were the parents of thirteen children. The Rev. Mr. Naftzger was born on March 13, joined the church when he was thirteen years old, and on Friday the 13th began the study for the ministry. On the 13th of the month he erceived the degree of doctor of divinity from Chaslin University, was married on May 13th, and twin sons came to his home on Friday the 13th. In 1893 the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Naftzger celebrated their thirteenth wedding anniversary on May 13, when thirteen persons were guests at their home, 313 Thirteenth street, Muncie, and on Friday, May 13, this year, a public reception was given him by the members of the Bradley M. E. church, of Greenfield, the occasion being his thirtieth wedding anniversary.

The farmers of Decatur County are alarmed by cholera among the hogs. Several cases have been reported where the disease appeared after the hogs had been loaded on the cars for shipment to market.

In repairing a porch at the home of Mrs. Harris, widow of Captain Lee O. Harris, in Greenfield, myriads of white ants were found. They had cut off all the supports to the porch and had attacked other portions of the house when discovered.

Answer This Question

When shown positive and reliable proof that a certain remedy had cured numerous cases of female ills, wouldn't any sensible woman conclude that the same remedy would also benefit her if suffering with the same trouble?

Here are two letters which prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Fitchville, Ohio.—"My daughter was all run down, suffered from pains in her side, head and limbs, and could walk but a short distance at a time. She came very near having nervous prostration, had begun to cough a good deal, and seemed melancholy by spells. She tried two doctors but got little help. Since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, Blood Purifier and Liver Pills she has improved so much that she feels and looks like another girl."—Mrs. C. Cole, Fitchville, Ohio.

Irasburg, Vermont.—"I feel it my duty to say a few words in praise of your medicine. When I began taking it I had been very sick with kidney and bladder troubles and nervous prostration. I am now taking the sixth bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and find myself greatly improved. My friends who call to see me have noticed a great change."—Mrs. A. H. Sanborn, Irasburg, Vermont.

We will pay a handsome reward to any person who will prove to us that these letters are not genuine and truthful—or that either of these women were paid in any way for their testimonials, or that the letters are published without their permission, or that the original letter from each did not come to us entirely unsolicited.

What more proof can any one ask?

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

The Dishonest Marriage Service.

Sir Charles McLeran is championing in the English Commons a series of bills to reorganize the marriage service with a view to making it honest. The High Church service enjoins: "Wives, submit yourselves unto your husbands as unto the Lord," which, Sir Charles says, ladies never have any intention of doing, and which, Sir Charles' wife says, involves an arrogation to the men of Godlike quality which she regards as a characteristic bit of masculine buncombe. Further on the service contains the man's vow: "With all my worldly goods I thee endow," which Sir Charles and Mrs. Sir Charles declare is just a plain lie. He never means it for fifteen minutes after the knot is tied.—Success Magazine.

The Matter Explained.

"Why do they say 'as smart as a steel trap?'" asked the talkative boarder. "I never could see anything particularly intellectual about a steel trap."

"A steel trap is called smart," explained the elderly person in his sweetest voice, "because it knows exactly the right time to shut up."

More might have been said, but in the circumstances it would have seemed unfitting.—London Tit-Bits.

Silence!

The instinct of modesty natural to every woman is often a great hindrance to the cure of womanly diseases. Women shrink from the personal questions of the local physician which seem indelicate. The thought of examination is abhorrent to them, and so they endure in silence a condition of disease which surely progresses from bad to worse,

It has been Dr. Pierce's privilege to cure a great many women who have found a refuge for modesty in his offer of FREE consultation by letter. All correspondence is held as sacredly confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription restores and regulates the womanly functions, abolishes pain and builds up and puts the finishing touch of health on every weak woman who gives it a fair trial.

DODDER IN RELATION TO FARM CROPS—II.

Kinds of Dodder Occurring in Indiana Clover and Alfalfa Seed and Readily Observed Characteristics of Each Kind.

Examination of many samples of clover and alfalfa seed received at the Purdue Experiment Station has revealed the presence in the seed on our market, of four distinct species of dodder. Since these four kinds distinctly differ from one another in one or two important respects, and at the same time resemble one another in certain other respects, attention is here called in general terms to the different kinds.

1. Clover Dodder. This infests clovers and alfalfas. It is found in Europe and other foreign countries producing clover, also in the states east of the Mississippi and in the northern Pacific states. The seed is in general, gray to brown, nearly round, or somewhat flattened; the surface is finely pitted. It is from 1-30 to 1-24 of an inch in diameter.

2. Large Seeded Alfalfa Dodder. This occurs commonly in western alfalfa growing states, and is being found in the western alfalfa seed used in Indiana. The larger seeds of this dodder are about the size of the smaller alfalfa seed, and are therefore hard to clean out thoroughly. On the other hand they are smaller than the larger seeded red clover, and should be quite easy to clean from it. The size and shape of the seed is variable, the larger seeds, however, are nearly circular, and are gray to brown in color, sometimes having a slight pinkish cast. The surface is seen, under a lens, to be very rough.

3. Small Seeded Alfalfa Dodder. This is very common and destructive in the western states, and has been found in samples examined in the seed laboratory here. This is to be expected as Indiana imports much western-grown alfalfa seed. It does little or no damage to other clovers. The seeds are very small, oval, and owing to compression in the pod, have two flattened faces; the surface is roughened; color, usually yellowish, which may have a tinge of green or purple.

4. Field Dodder. This is apt to appear in either clover or alfalfa, whether grown east or west of the Mississippi, and is extremely destructive. Field Dodder seeds are larger than those of Clover Dodder, or of Small-seeded Alfalfa Dodder, notched at the scar, rounded on one side, and variously flattened, angled, or grooved, on the other. They vary in size from 1-24 to 1-16 of an inch in diameter, and are variable in color, being yellowish, purplish, dusty or grayish brown with a decided pink or flesh cast.

Notice that the seeds of all the dodders mentioned here are more or less rough, while clover and alfalfa seed is smooth with a slight gloss. The scar on the dodder seed is much less evident than is that on the clover seeds. Dodder seeds are generally smaller than good red clover seed or alfalfa seed. All who use or handle the smaller farm seeds are urged to procure a good magnifying glass. Such a glass is indispensable in the examination of seed for dodder and other impurities. A tripod lens costing about 50 cents seems to be as convenient a form of lens as any on the market. As a further means of identifying dodder seed, soak the latter in water a few hours, then with needles pick a seed apart, and with the aid of the lens, find the embryo, or undeveloped plant within. In dodder the tiny plant within the seed, will be found to be slender, threadlike and coiled.

In order to aid farmers in determining whether alfalfa or clover seeds contain dodder, the Agricultural Extension Department, Purdue Experiment Station, Lafayette, Ind., will be glad to examine and report on samples sent them.

Nothing Serious.

The matron had dropped a coin while in the act of handing it to the street car conductor. It had rolled under the seat, where it could not be found, and she was making a loud fuss about it.

"What's the matter?" asked the policeman on the rear platform.

"Nothing," said the conductor. "A lady has lost a nickel and her temper; that's all."—Chicago Tribune.

FIGHTING A LION.

Nothing causes the East African colonist more genuine concern than that his guest should not have been provided with a lion. The Hon. Winston Spencer Churchill says that a failure to produce a lion preys on the colonist's mind until it becomes a regular obsession. He feels that some deep reproach is laid upon his own hospitality and the reputation of his adopted country. In "My African Journey," Mr. Churchill tells something of the pursuit of this noble game.

This is the way in which they hunt lions: First find the lion, lured to a kill, driven from a reedbed or kicked up incontinently by the way. Once viewed, he must never be lost sight of for a moment. Mounted on ponies of more or less approved fidelity, three or four daring Britons or Somalis gallop after him, across rocks, holes, tussocks, through high grass, thorn scrub, undergrowth; turning him, shepherding him, heading him this way and that until he is brought to bay.

For his part the lion is no seeker of quarrels; he is often described in accents of contempt. His object throughout is to save his skin. If, being unarmed, you meet six or seven lions unexpectedly, all you need to do, according to my information, is to speak to them sternly, and they will slink away, while you throw a few stones at them to hurry them up. All the highest authorities recommend this.

But when pursued from place to place, chased hither and thither by wheedling horsemen, the lion becomes embittered. First he begins to growl and roar at his enemies, in order to terrify them and make them leave him in peace. Then he darts little short charges at them. Finally, when every attempt at peaceful persuasion has failed, he pulls up abruptly and offers battle. Once he has done this, he will run no more. He means to fight, and to fight to the death.

And when a lion, maddened with the agony of a bullet-wound, distressed by long and hard pursuit, or, most of all, a lioness in defense of her cubs, is definitely committed to battle, death is the only possible conclusion. Broken limbs, broken jaws, a body raked from end to end, lungs pierced through and through—none of these count. It must be death, instant and utter, for the lion, or down goes the man, mauled by septic claws and fetid teeth, crushed and crunched, and poisoned afterward to make doubly sure.

MARVELOUS DISCOVERIES

mark the wonderful progress of the age. Air flights on heavy machines, telegrams without wires, terrible war inventions to kill men, and that wonder of wonders—Dr. King's New Discovery—to save life when threatened by coughs, colds, lagrippe, asthma, croup, bronchitis, hemorrhages, hay fever and whooping cough or lung trouble. For all bronchial affections it has no equal. It relieves instantly. Its the surest cure. James M. Black, of Asheville, N. C., R. R. No. 4, writes it cured him of an obstinate cough after all other remedies failed. 50c and $1. A trial bottle free. Guaranteed by H. L. Dunkle.

A WOMAN'S GREAT IDEA

is how to make herself attractive. But, without health, it is hard for her to be lovely in face, form or temper. A weak, sickly woman will be nervous and irritable. Constipation and kidney poisons show in pimples, blotches, skin eruptions and a wretched complexion. But Electric Bitters always prove a godsend to women who want health, beauty and friends. They regulate Stomach, Liver and Kidneys, purify the blood; give strong nerves, bright eyes, pure breath, smooth, velvety skin, lovely complexion, good health. Try them. 50c at H. L. Dunkle.

Do Not Hesitate

To come to St. Joe when you want Drugs, it is our pride and study to have what is known as a First Class Drug Store, then how do we do it, there is only one way and that is to buy fresh reliable goods and examine carefully to see if it is just what you would like to use personally, if it is not, then my plan is never to sell it. The harm would be greater than any profit could be. This same rule applies to Jewelry, Hammocks, Paints and Oils, China, Candy, Tobacco, etc., in fact everything handled in our store. We are always glad to show you what we have, get it for you if we can and be as reasonable as can be on all our prices. Our slogan is, "That you can do better at Dunkle's in St. Joe than other places."

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

Indianapolis Track Fastest in World.

Makers and drivers of racing motor cars began to bend their energies to preparation for the races at the Indianapolis speedway on July 1, 2 and 4, for extraordinary effort must be made if the new records set during the meet which closed recently, are to be passed or even equaled. Twenty-four records in the stock car and free-for-all classes were broken during the meet. At the distances from five to 200 miles, and in the classes from the little cars of 161 cubic inches piston displacement to the ponderous motors of six hundred cubic inches cylinder interior, nearly all the old records went down in the course of the three days, and Oldfield, in a Benz, set new speed records for the mile and kilometer. The brick track, an experiment on the part of its constructors, demonstrated that it is the fastest of all the motor speedways. The drivers were able to hold their flying cars true to a line, no tires were torn unless they were defective and only one man, Herbert Lytle, was injured in all the three days of the race contending for supremacy among the cars and drivers.

Sail for the South Pole.

The British antarctic expedition in the steamer Terra Nova, sailed from London for New Zealand. Captain Scott had announced December, 1911, as the date for his arrival at the south pole. Captain Scott and Lieutenant E. R. Evans, second in command, claim that they have the best equipped expedition that ever started on a polar search. The officers and scientists number crew of twenty-seven, are all picked men.

Cigarette as Forest Burner.

Believing that Givanni Jacobi carelessly set fire to the woods above St. Clair, Pa., while lighting a cigarette, he was arrested by fire wardens and will have a hearing in Pottsville, Pa. Fanned by a heavy gale, the mountain fires destroyed thousands of acres of timber. Forest wardens fighting the flames say little can be done to stop the fires beyond removing the dried leaves of last fall, on which the flames feed.

Lose Life in Quarry Explosion.

Twenty-five workmen were killed in an explosion in a quarry of the Union Portland Cement Company at Devil's Slide, Utah, thirty miles east of Ogden. The explosion blew down the telegraph and telephone poles and the news came in brief messages sent by courier. Most of the killed are Japanese and Greeks who made up the quarry gang of 75 to 100 men. The injured are reported to number a score or more.

Six Fishermen Drowned.

Six fishermen lost their lives when the brigantine Mauve, of Cancale, France, struck on Point Blanche, while entering St. Pierre in a thick fog. Most of the crew were in their berths when the Mauve struck. The nineteen survivors reached shore after most trying experiences. The Mauve had been fishing on the Grand Banks and was heading for St. Pierre with eleven hundred quintals of fish.

COURT STOPS RAISE IN FREIGHT RATES

Twenty-five Western Roads Are Restrained from Enforcing the New Tariff.

PLEA CITES UNLAWFUL COMBINE

Action Is Begun by Attorney General Wickersham on Behalf of Federal Government.

Twenty-five Western railroads were temporarily restrained by United States District Judge David P. Dyer in Hannibal, Mo., from enforcing or making a general advance in interstate freight rates. The injunction was granted on a petition filed by the United States government on the allegations that the advance in rates were fixed by the defendants by agreement, without competition and in violation of the Sherman anti-trust act.

The petition was filed in the United States Circuit Court at St. Louis and was brought to Hannibal to present to Judge Dyer. It states that unless such a restraining order be issued the advances will become effective at once, to the grave harm and injury of the people of the United States.

The petition was presented by Edwin P. Grosvenor of Washington, special assistant to the Attorney General, and Frederick N. Judson of St. Louis, acting as special counsel. It was signed by George W. Wickersham, Attorney General; William S. Kenyon, Assistant Attorney General, and Charles A. Houts, United States District Attorney.

The roads restrained from increasing their freight rates are:

LORIMER DEFENDS HIMSELF.

Illinois Senator Makes Speech Denying Bribery in Legislature.

William Lorimer the other day asked the United States Senate for an investigation of the charges that his election was secured through the buying of votes in the Illinois General Assembly at prices ranging from $1,000 upward. By way of preface to this request he delivered his long-awaited speech, and in vehement language declared before his colleagues that the bribery scandal is the outcome of a "political conspiracy." Immediately after finishing his speech Senator Lorimer hurriedly put his affairs in order and caught a late afternoon train for Chicago.

The main points in the Senator's address were as follows:

Eulogy of Minority Leader Lee O'Neil Browne, now under indictment in Chicago for bribery.
Attack upon Governor Deneen.
Assault upon Representative Charles A. White, whose confession opened the scandal.
Attack upon the Chicago Tribune.
Five-thousand-word history of Mr. Lorimer's political career since 1884, and an outline of his newspaper "feud."
Declaration that Governor Deneen first suggested that Lorimer become a candidate for Senator, but withdrew his support on the day of election.
Accusation that Governor Deneen broke faith with him on water way legislation.
Denial that Representatives H. J. C. Beckemeyer and Michael S. Link have made confessions corroborating White's.
Declaration that Governor Deneen joined the Tribune in a "conspiracy" to overthrow Lorimer, to get control of the next Legislature.

Mr. Lorimer's request for an investigation was referred under the Senate rules to the committee on contingent expenses.

KILLS MAN WHO JILTED HER.

Milliner Slays Bookkeeper When He Tells of Wedding Another.

Because he jilted her, Miss Carrie Pritchard, 25 years old, a milliner employed by J. F. Ball & Bro., shot and killed Sam E. Ford, bookkeeper for the same firm, in his office in Pollock, La. Miss Pritchard, on going out for luncheon, accused Ford of fickleness and asked him if the report was true that he would marry Birdie Long on June 22. Ford admitted the accusation. The milliner opened her hand satchel and flashed a large revolver. Before clerks could interfere she fired a bullet through Ford's head. Miss Pritchard was arrested.

DR. KOCH IS DEAD.

German Professor Who Developed Preventive Medicine Passes Away.

Professor Robert Koch, the eminent German bacteriologist, died in Baden Baden the other afternoon of heart disease. He had been in failing health for a year or more, following the exposures to which he subjected himself while engaged in scientific research in malarial districts in German East Africa and elsewhere. He was in his sixty-seventh year.

DR. ROBERT KOCH.

A graduate of the University of Berlin, Dr. Koch began his bacteriological investigations about thirty years ago, when he was district surgeon at Wallstein. He first achieved public notice through his discovery of a method for coloring microscopical preparations by means of which he isolated the tubercle bacillus and produced tuberculosis by its inoculation in animals. His reward for this was his selection as privy councillor and the enjoyment of the full confidence of the Kaiser.

He gained world fame by his discovery of antitoxin for the prevention and cure of diphtheria and by his research for the cause and cure of "sleeping sickness" which afflicted the tribes of Central Africa. He also was the discoverer of a ratkilling gas which proved effective in ridding ships of rodents. Koch never claimed that his lymph cure for tuberculosis was infallible. He did claim, however, that it was a preventive and a practical cure in a great majority of cases.

JULIA WARD HOWE 91.

Masses of Floral Greetings Received by Aged Author from Friends.

Julia Ward Howe was 91 years old the other day. There was no public observance of the event, the breakfast to her which the New England Women's clubs have given every year for forty-two years having been served two days before. As has been her custom of late years, Mrs. Howe spent the day in her home on Beacon street, Boston, with her family, surrounded by her children, grandchildren, and now the little great-grandchildren, who had loving greetings and caresses. While few outside of the family circle were received by her, gifts of flowers from relatives and friends and telegrams and letters were received from all parts of the world.

C. H. TREAT FALLS DEAD.

Former Treasurer of Nation Stricken with Apoplexy.

Charles Henry Treat, treasurer of the United States under President Roosevelt, died of apoplexy in his apartment at the Hotel Victoria in New York. He was stricken an hour before death, and did not regain consciousness. He is survived by his wife and two daughters.

Mr. Treat was born in Frankfort, Me., about sixty-eight years ago. Among his ancestors were Robert Treat Paine, a signer of the declaration of independence, and Robert Treat, a colonial governor of Connecticut. He was graduated from Dartmouth College in 1865, and at once entered business with his father and brothers, who operated a fleet of twenty-eight vessels engaged in the import and export trade.

In 1888 he was Delaware's delegate-at-large to the Republican convention in Chicago and was credited with solidifying the Delaware delegation for Benjamin Harrison. Soon after McKinley's election he was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the Wall street district, serving during the Spanish-American war.

NEW YORK PRIMARY BILL DEAD

Assembly Kills Compromise Act—Hughes Will Veto Other.

By a decisive vote of 46 to 94 the Cobb compromise direct nomination bill, after having passed the senate, was defeated in the New York assembly as the climax of a session of fourteen hours. Governor Hughes has announced that he will veto the Meade-Phillips bill, which has passed both houses, and the only hope of primary reform or direct nomination legislation this year lies in the possibility of an extraordinary session being called.

Town Is Submerged, Railways Are Damaged and People Imperiled.

Phenomenal warmth has melted enormous quantities of snow on the mountains in the interior of Norway. The result is that lakes and rivers are flooded to an extent not equaled since 1860. The town of Lillestrommen, twenty miles from Christiania, is submerged. The inhabitants have been compelled to take refuge in the upper stories of their houses. Widespread damage has been done to railways and crops.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP NOW AT 32,936,445

Protestant Denominations Report 20,287,742 and the Roman Catholics 12,679,149.

NUMBERS ARE ON THE INCREASE

Statistics Are Based on Report of United States Census, Soon to Be Published.

The aggregate number of communicants or members of all religious denominations in the United States in 1906 was 32,936,445, according to the United States census of religious bodies. Of this grand total, the various Protestant bodies reported 20,287,742 and the Roman Catholic church 12,679,142.

Of the Protestant communicants, according to the report, 80.6 per cent were outside the principal cities of the country. Of the Catholics, 27.9 per cent were in the cities of the first class, those having a population of more than 300,000, while 47.8 per cent were outside the cities of the first, second, third or fourth classes, the last class being cities of 25,000 to 50,000. Protestants in the first-class cities aggregated 7.3 per cent.

Of the Protestants, the Protestant Episcopal church reported a majority of its communicants in the principal cities, 51.2 per cent, as did the Church of Christ, Scientist, 82.6 per cent.

The report shows a growth of all communicants, both in the cities and country, since 1890. In the five leading cities the proportion of communicants to population was: New York, 44.7 per cent; Chicago, 40.7; Philadelphia, 38.8; Boston, 62.6; Ct. Louis, 46.6.

STATE SENATOR IS INDICTED.

Sangamon County Grand Jury Makes Charge Against Holstlaw of Iuka.

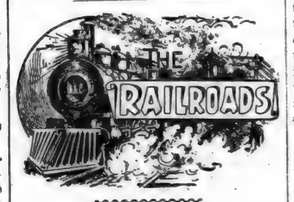
State Senator D. W. Holstlaw, of Iuka, Marion County, who represents the Forty-second Senatorial District in the Illinois General Assembly, was indicted by the Grand Jury of Sangamon County on two counts charging perjury in testimony given by him in the local investigation of legislative bribery. The evidence against four other men is being carefully considered by State's Attorney Edmund Burke, and on the basis of it more indictments are being drawn up.

The alleged perjury consists in Senator Holstlaw's sworn statement before the grand jury that he never wrote a letter to J. W. Knox, a salesman for the Derby Desk Company. At the time Mr. Burke, it is claimed, had in his possession a letter written by Holstlaw to Knox, shortly before the contract was let.

MORE THAN 500 PERSONS PERISH

East Africa and Adjacent Ocean Is Swept by Terrible Cyclone.

More than 500 persons were drowned and many ships lost in the terrific cyclone that swept East Africa, according to dispatches received from Mozambique. The storm did great damage on land as well as on sea. It is believed that several large ships, as well as smaller ones, were lost. On one were 400 miners, en route to the Rand mines. All were drowned.



President Tuttle, of the Boston and Maine, announced that passenger rates on that line would be advanced on June 1 to those prevalent before the 10 per cent reductions of 1907. The increase is said to be due to the recent advance in wages paid to employes. It will not affect the suburban service.

Records now published show that the number of accidents since the pay-as-you-enter cars were put into operation on the Chicago Rapid Transit System about two years ago, have decreased 31 per cent. This is due to the fact that the new system requires that the car shall not be started till all passengers are aboard. At the same time the receipts of the Chicago system have increased 4½ per cent, and, allowing one-third of this for increased traffic, there still remains to the company a gain amounting to $1,000 a day.

Several more railroads have joined the procession of those which had granted better wage scales to employees, and the largest of the independent steel companies of Pittsburg have followed the example of the steel trust by volunteering a 6 per cent increase. Trolley companies in many cities have agreed to pay 10 per cent more, and the Postal Telegraph and Cable Company gives notice of advances of from 5 to 15 per cent. At the same time the railroads of the Middle West have given notice of coming advances of freight and passenger charges, the former averaging 18 per cent. Soft coal miners in Central Pennsylvania and in Pittsburg district have received an addition of 5½ per cent and have gone to work. The Pressed Steel Car strike at McKees Rocks, Pa., ended without material results.

The Week in Congress

With the exception of a brief time given to the general calendar, the Senate devoted the entire session Wednesday to the consideration of the railroad bill. Senator La Follette occupied the floor for almost five hours in support of the Cummins amendment requiring the approval of increases in railroad rates by the Interstate Commerce Commission. In the course of his speech he declared that it would be necessary to add greatly to the equipment of the commission in order to put it into condition to render effective service. The House considered various bills on its calendar. Measures were passed to provide a railroad in the Hawaiian Islands and to build in Nome, Alaska, a house of detention for persons suspected of being insane. Mr. Olmsted of Pennsylvania explained at length the bill to provide a new civil government for Porto Rico.

The Senate Thursday by a vote of 29 to 43 rejected the Cummins amendment requiring the approval of railroad rates by the interstate commerce commission before they become effective. It also adopted an amendment providing for six months extension of the 120 days' suspension of new rates and regulation in case the hearing is not concluded within the time. The capitalization provisions were stricken from the bill. Because the President exceeded his traveling expense allowance of $25,000 voted by Congress for the present fiscal year and the committee on appropriations sought to meet the deficiency by making the appropriation for next year "immediately available," the House was thrown into lively debate. Chairman Tawney offended several Democrats by suggesting that the President had made his extended Western and Southern trip largely upon the urgent solicitation of Democrats of the House. Several Democrats made angry retorts and the motion was defeated.

The Senate failed Friday to reach a final vote on the railroad bill. Senator Dixon moved an amendment placing telegraph and telephone lines under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. This provision had no sooner been adopted, though in different form, than Senator Brown, of Nebraska, offered an amendment prohibiting railroads from acquiring control of competing lines under a penalty. Unwilling to accept so important an amendment without more opportunity for consideration, the Senate adjourned. The House twice rejected amendments by Mr. Keliher, of Massachusetts to authorize canteens at soldiers' homes where such institutions are within five miles of a town or city in which the sale of liquor is authorized. It appropriated $1,500,000 for State and Territorial homes for disabled soldiers and sailors and refused to move from New York City to Washington or anywhere else the board of managers of the national homes for disabled volunteer soldiers.

The Senate Saturday laid aside the railroad bill to listen to a personal explanation by Senator Lorimer of Illinois of the charges of corruption in connection with his election. He introduced a resolution directing the committee on privileges and elections to make an investigation. The remainder of the day was devoted to eulogies on the life of the late Representative Griggs of Georgia. The House devoted the day to the sundry civil appropriation bill. Led by the Democrats, it curtailed the appropriation for the protection of the public domain, cutting in half the amount authorized to be used in bringing the work up to date, and prohibiting the use of any of the money to meet the existing deficiency.

With the exception of the adoption of the Cummins amendment shifting to railroad companies the burden of proving the reasonableness of increases in rates, and the rejection of the Brown amendment prohibiting the consolidation of competitive railroad lines, the Senate's consideration of the railroad bill Tuesday was confined to discussion. Senator La Follette offered a resolution directing the Attorney General to bring suit to enjoin the recent railroad rate increases, but Senator Curtis announced the Attorney General had acted already in that direction. Early in the day Senator Owen delivered a set speech in support of his resolution for the election of Senators by direct vote. In the House nearly the entire session was consumed by a discussion relating to appropriations to make effective recent legislation creating a bureau of mines and mining. Up to the time of adjournment $488,000 had been appropriated for this purpose. Amendments making additional appropriations for the bureau will be voted on when the sundry civil bill is again under consideration.

CHAPTER VIII.—(Continued.)

There was an hour to pass in the drawing-room before the ball began. Laurence saw Magdalen standing by one of the small tables—she had carelessly taken up an engraving, and was examining it. He crossed over to her. She turned her bright face to him, with a charming smile.

"I have seen you before," he said, a little abruptly; and then he paused, for the beautiful eyes were looking at him with a wondering smile. "I have seen you before," he repeated, "and I have never forgotten it."

"I do not remember ever meeting you," she answered with a puzzled air.

"No, no, he rejoined, hastily. "You did not see me. It was one morning in the summer. You were gathering wild flowers."

"But where?" she asked, laughingly. "I have gathered wild flowers so frequently and in so many different places. Where was it?"

"At Seafield," he replied. "I lived there; and one morning, when I was walking to St. Margaret's Bay—I—saw you."

Her face brightened.

"I remember Seafield," she said, "a lovely place by the sea. I was staying at Pemberton Court, and it must have been during my visit there that you saw me; but," she added, her beautiful eyes looking frankly into his own, "if such was the case, how was it that I did not see you?"

"Should you have remembered me if you had done so?" he asked, eagerly.

"I do not know," she replied. "I see so many faces—"

"And I," he said, speaking out the thoughts of his heart, without pausing to think whether it were discreet to do so or not—"and I, since I saw your face, have seen no other."

"It is time we went to the ball-room," she said, hurriedly.

If Rudolph noticed any change in Laurence after his visit to Swanscourt, the made no comment on the fact. The dearest wish of his heart had been that one of his sons should marry Magdalen d'Este—he had the same wish with regard to his young kinsman, but he never gave expression of it.

After this Laurence went over frequently to Swanscourt, where he was always a most welcome guest. Mr. and Mrs. d'Este both liked him; they had the same idea, that he would be an excellent husband for their beautiful daughter; what she thought on this subject was not so well known. Magdalen was always kind to him—always beautiful and charming, but she did not wear her heart on her sleeve.

Laurence said nothing to any one of the great hope of his life, the desire to win Magdalen d'Este for his wife. Rudolph was so ill that he required all his care and attention; it was hardly the time to trouble him about a love affair.

CHAPTER IX.

Mr. and Mrs. d'Este went away early in the year, and their daughter accompanied them. In the meanwhile, Laurence had proved his gratitude to those he had known at Seafield. He had first of all paid his debt to Marion, sending her, at the same time, a letter filled with expressions of gratitude and affection; then he had lavished presents upon them all—not forgetting Miss Thornton.

"I always said he was a prince in disguise," that lady declared, emphatically, as she admired his costly gifts. "Who but he would have thought of me?"

Miss Leigh received a magnificent set of rubies.

"They are too good for me to wear in this place," said Marion, thoughtfully; "but I shall not always be here."

She often looked thoughtful in those days, for a great plan was maturing in her mind.

And so the time sped on, and at length Rudolph, after a long illness, died. He was laid to rest, amid all the solemn and sorrowful paraphernalia of death; and Laurence became owner of Carrswell. No future ever seemed brighter than his, no prospects fairer. Those who had to deal with Laurence Carr, as he was now called, could not help noticing how kind, gentle, and generous he was to all evil-doers. He could never be persuaded to punish a man for his first offense.

"Give him another chance," he would say. "It is the first offense—we do not know how sorely he was tempted—let him try again."

It was with no small feeling of delight that he heard that Mr. and Mrs. d'Este were expected home. On the day after their arrival, he went over to Swanscourt. They had always received him with the kindliest courtesy; this morning they were more gracious than ever. When they had talked for some little time, Mr. d'Este rode out to keep an appointment, and his wife excused herself on the plea of receiving some visitors.

"You will find Magdalen out in the garden," she said.

That was what he wanted, to be alone with Magdalen, if but a few minutes; and he hurried through the grounds in search of her. Her fair face flushed when she saw him.

She held out her hand to him, and looked into his face with kindly eyes.

"Your mother told me I should find you here," he said.

"Yes," she answered; "I delight in being in the fresh air. What a lovely morning this is."

She was standing near a little fountain under a spreading chestnut tree; near it was a rustic seat.

"Shall we sit down?" she said, taking a seat near the marble basin, and making room for him beside her.

He could hear the beating of his own heart as he accepted her invitation. He was so happy that he forgot even his sin; the memory of it did not creep into that sunlit hour. Of course he was not going to make love to her, although love shone in his eyes, trembled on his lips, was revealed in every word and gesture. He reverted to the old theme—where he had first met her; and they talked about Seafield and St. Margaret's Bay.

In some way—she never could quite tell how it happened—the flowers that she had been carrying lay on the grass at her feet, and her hand rested in his. She was so surprised that she made no effort to withdraw it; and presently she asked him to tell her the story of his life at Seafield.

"I cannot quite make out," she said, when he had finished, "whether you like this Marion Leigh or not."

"She was very kind to me once," he answered; "but, as a rule, we saw very little of each other. I must always be grateful to her for a service she once rendered me."

Soon the other hand was made prisoner, and he was pouring out his whole heart to her, telling her what he hoped to do in the future, what great ends and aims he had fashioned for himself, and of a sweet rest and hope, the fulfillment of which would crown his life. She listened with deepest sympathy, her beautiful eyes meeting his, her fair face changing as his moods changed.

And then—neither of them knew how it happened—he kissed her; and her heart went out to him in that moment, never to come back to her again.

CHAPTER X.

Later on in the season Mr. and Mrs. d'Este left Swanscourt again; they had accepted an invitation to spend some weeks at Ryde. Laurence only saw Magdalen once before her departure.

"Give me something," he said, "to remember this hour and your words."

She turned to a bush near, and plucked a white rose and placed it silently in his hand.

"Thank you," he said; "but I want something more—remember, I have to live without seeing you until August."

She knew—she felt sure that, when she came back to Swanscourt, he would tell her that he loved her, and would ask her to be his wife. There had been no mention of love or marriage between them yet; but her faith in him was so perfect that she raised her face to his and kissed him. Words might have been said then that were irrevocable, but that Mrs. d'Este suddenly appeared.

The family from Swanscourt went away that day, and on the morrow came a letter from Dr. Leigh—he had not been well lately—he said he wanted change of air, and he would avail himself of Laurence's oft-given invitation, and bring Marion with him for a few weeks—he had engaged some one to take charge of his practice, so that he should feel quite at ease while he was away.

"I have not had a real holiday since my honeymoon," wrote the doctor—"that was more than twenty years ago—you may imagine how much I shall enjoy this. Marion looks forward to it with even greater pleasure and anticipation than I do. We shall hope to be with you by the end of the month."

A kindly letter—and Laurence had certainly often written to invite them. He was most anxious to see them; he had thought of it often, and had made plans for their amusement. He could not tell why a shudder came over him, why there was a sense of coming sorrow and trouble. Then he laughed at himself. What could it be? What sorrow could be drawing near him? He shook aside impatiently this feeling of oppression, and set to work in real earnest to provide amusement for his coming guests—perhaps in the depths of his heart there was some little dislike to seeing Marion again. She was the only one who knew of that shameful past; her presence would bring it all the more vividly before him. It was but natural that he should shrink from seeing her. Still, but for her kindness—her generosity—he would not be here—"lord of this fair domain." He would show his gratitude to her by doing all in his power to make her visit pleasant.

He ordered his housekeeper to prepare the best suite of rooms for her; he purchased a beautiful little carriage, with a pair of ponies, as a present for her. She should drive about in the lovely lanes, and when she returned to Seafield, take the present home with her. He remembered that she was fond of flowers, and he ordered her rooms to be filled with the rarest and choicest.

Dr. Leigh and his daughter arrived on the date fixed for their visit, the former looking old and worn, Marion bright, well, and wonderfully handsome. They reached Carrswell in the evening. Laurence was standing on the terrace awaiting them. As Marion Leigh came slowly toward him, he wondered again why that presentiment of trouble weighed so heavily upon him. The doctor was unfeignedly pleased to see him.

Throughout that evening Marion was very quiet; nothing could have been kinder or more cordial than their reception, yet she felt further apart from him than she had ever done before.

Laurence could not fathom the expression of those dark eyes—he could not tell what they meant; but there was something in them that startled him, why, he knew not. He felt that it would be some little relief if she would talk, laugh, look tired or bored—anything rather than watch him in that cool, deliberate way.

CHAPTER XI.

One evening they strolled into the rose-garden. A statue of Flora stood in the midst of the roses, and a garden-chair was placed against it. Marion declared herself fatigued, and sat down, drawing her black shawl around her shoulders. The moonlight, the sweet-scented air, the hundreds of blooming roses, the lovely scene that lay around them, made it a paradise. Laurence did not talk much. Marion, too, was silent for some minutes. She hesitated, as a diver might pause on the brink before he makes a perilous plunge. She was about to gain or lose all.

"Do you remember, Laurence," she said, slowly, "the story you told me about Barbara Carr?"

"Yes; I remember it well," he replied, wondering a little why Marion should revert to that subject now.

She went to one of the rose-trees, and gathered a red rose; he saw her strip away the thorns and arrange the leaves; he saw the dew shining on the petals of the flower; then she walked slowly up to him, and stood before him, the red rose in her hand.

"You remember the story you told me?" she repeated, holding the flower out to him. "Suppose that I were the beautiful Barbara, and you Rupert Carr, would you have the rose from me on the same condition as he took it?"

Her breath came hard and fast as she uttered the last few words; her face grew deathly pale. She held the flower out to him, but he did not take it. Instead of that, he sprung from his seat, pale and agitated.

"I do not understand you," he said, hurriedly; he was taken so utterly by surprise he was at a loss what to say.

"How shall I make my meaning clear?" she said. "Barbara Carr gave the red rose to the man she wished to marry—I give you this."

"There is one great and insupreable obstacle," he replied, in a low, clear voice. "I do not love you."

"That does not matter," she said; "neither, in the sentimental sense of the word, do I love you. We shall not require love; we shall have plenty of money—everything that our hearts most desire."

"Your ideas do not accord with mine," Laurence said, slowly.

"I—I have a claim upon you," she urged.

"I know it," he murmured; and in his own heart he cried: "My sin has found me out!"

She drew a little nearer to him, and held out the red rose to him; the perfume from it reached him, and he hated the scent of roses ever afterward.

"Will you take it?" she asked.

"No, I will not," he replied.

"It is the price of my silence—the price of your secret, Laurence."

"I will not take it; I will not touch it."

Slowly, leaf by leaf, she pulled the beautiful rose to pieces, and threw the petals on the ground.

"Walk over them," she said; "and just as easily shall I tread under foot all your resistance—just as easily shall I bring down your pride, and—and break your heart."

Clerkers and Workers.

Here is the statement of the National Employment Exchange as to labor conditions in one field:

"The skilled men and the laborers are all getting work. We can't supply the demand for laborers or mechanics."

Here is a statement from the same authority as to conditions in another field:

"Clerk labor is a drug on the market. There are simply not enough jobs to go around."

Evil days are indeed on the clerker, the New York Globe says. Not only do his wages—"salary" he calls it—tend to stay down while the cost of living increases, but employment is precarious. Great are the material sacrifices that must be made by a young man who has aversion to hard work, who wants to be "genteel," who insists on employment permitting the wearing of cuffs and a collar. False pride is an expensive luxury, and it is being hammered out of many soft heads.

It is the worker, with a trained intelligence directing a skilled hand, that the world needs and wants, and needing him and wanting him, bids for his services. The average income of the good mechanic is now well up to that of the average doctor or lawyer. There is growing up an intellectual proletariat which is suffering keenly. Under the pressure of present economic tendencies it is likely to suffer more and more until there is a recasting of educational methods and a final suppression of the idea that mechanical labor lacks dignity.

A Real Regret.

THE PRIMARY PULPIT

RELIGION IN LIFE.

By Henry F. Cope.

"I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help."—Psalms cxxi., 1.

It is not so strange that many should say they have no need for religion in their lives. To some it seems rather a mark of weakness than of strength, a yielding to superstitious fear or to popular custom or a sacrifice of the independent judgment in favor of a scheme which has been devised by the few for the deception of the many.

There is a good deal that goes under the name of religion that one ought to be ashamed not to disown; there are types of piety that are but confessions of poverty of intellect, and there are forms of faith that are only evidences of cowardly and superstitious fear. Wherever religion means being less a man, means dwarfing, shrinking the life, then one dare not acknowledge allegiance to it.

But there are so many imitations, so many pretensions of religion simply because the thing itself is so essential to the life of man. So far from the religious life being one of lesser living, so far from religion signifying the sacrifice of powers, the denying of reason, judgment, and the will, the truth is that no life can be in any sense complete without its spirit and power.

If there is one thing of which a man might well be ashamed of it is the loss of the spirit and ideals of religion in his life. Those characteristics which mark the trained, developed, ordered, educated life are the attributes of religion. There is no fullness of life, no mastery of the spirit, no conquest of the art of living without this.

No man can be a gentleman by the process of memorizing books of etiquette any more than he can find fullness of health by reading books on medicine and hygiene. The life of courtesy and the life of vigor and health have their hidden sources. Every life that realizes fullness and beauty has its hidden sources in the religious spirit. This is the power and secret of the perfect life.

The world is full of half developed lives; men and women who are competent in spots; as strong in some things as they are weak in others, brilliant as to some of their ways and walking in darkness as to others; the man of affairs loses vision, the philosopher loses practical sense, the scientist becomes an animated, soulless scalpel, and all for the want of an aim that would preserve a balance and harmony in the life.

A man can so give his hand to business in that he becomes nothing but a hand; another can give his mind to intellectual problems so that he becomes only a brain carried around on stilts, while yet another becomes a stomach and no more. But religion gives to all lives the spirit and aim that apportions to every part its true function, subduing all to a purpose great enough to enlist all the powers and to bring them to harmonious fullness.

Religion means living for the sake of life itself; it means finding a sufficient motive in living. It is the point if view and the spirit in life that sets things in right relations, helps one to find true values and to know the things that are worth living for, to set the tools of life and the products of life in right relations.

Who is sufficient for living without this spirit? He who lives the right life knows that he has struck time and tune with the eternal laws of the universe; he who lives for love finds the real law of life. Seeking the good we find the infinite goodness; the life and love that are the heart of all become a certainty to all of those who follow the light they have, who do the will of love.

The life of faith is living in loyalty to faith in life's best, in its higher values. This is the faith we need to nourish, faith in the righteousness of the universe, faith in goodness, truth, honor and right as over and against lust and meanness, falsehood and cowardice. He only has the truth who dares be true to the vision he has, who lives in the freedom of his light.

THE MISTAKE OF THOMAS.

By Rev. J. R. Miller, D. D.

But Thomas, one of the twelve, called Didymus, was not with them when Jesus came.—John xx: 24.

Thomas was not with the apostles when Jesus came to them on the evening of the resurrection. By his absence he missed seeing Jesus. The others went out with hearts full of joy. We have no record of what happened that week, but we are sure they were wondrously glad. But think of Thomas all the week. He had missed seeing the risen Jesus. His sorrow was uncomforted.

There is a story of a colored man in the south who walked several miles to his church, and never failed to attend. One week he was noticed by a white man, trudging every evening through slush and rain. "Why do you go so far to church these stormy nights?" the neighbor asked. "I should think you would stay at home when the weather is so bad." The old man took off his hat in the cold rain, and said with deep reverence: "You see, we are praying in our church for a blessing, and I would not dare stay away, even for one night, for that might be the night the blessing would come, and if I were not there I should miss it."

Thomas was not with them when Jesus came, and he missed the blessing. We do not know what divine message may come to the worshipers in our church any Sunday. You may be in sorrow. The word that day may be a message of comfort. Those who hear it thank God and go away with a song; but you, sitting in your home, nursing your grief, miss the message and go into another week unhelped, to walk all the way through gloom and shadow.

Many people yield to discouragement, and discouragement hurts their lives. Discouragement is a sort of mental and spiritual malaria. It poisons the blood. Much of certain forms of sickness is only discouragement darkening the sky, putting out the stars, quenching all joy and hope. It was discouragement which kept Thomas away from the meeting that night, and the mistake almost wrecked everything for him. If Jesus had not been so patient with him, giving him a second chance, a week later, Thomas would never have got back into the apostolic family. But if he had been present at the meeting, he would have seen Jesus when the others did, and his discouragement would have changed both faith and joy.

Let us miss no opportunity to be where Christ may be, to stand where He may pass by, to go where He may come. The mistake of Thomas was that in his gloom and discouragement he was not with the apostles that continually miss our opportunities of seeing the Lord and of having his doubts and griefs swept away by the light of faith and love. Many of us continually miss our opportunities of gladness and beauty. We nurse our sorrows and turn not our faces toward the comfort of God. We stay in our little dark rooms with the shutters closed, and go not out into the blessed sunlight. We live in the mists and fogs of the valley when we might be dwelling on the mountain tops. We neglect our opportunities of receiving divine revealings, and then say we cannot believe. Let us open our hearts to the beauty and grace of Christ, however it may come to us. Then we shall have no more doubts and fears, but shall find all the beauty and the joy of Christ.

HYMNS AND THEIR AUTHORS

A DISCIPLE'S PRAYER.

By John Ernest Bode.

[The Rev. John Ernest Bode was a rector of the church of England, born in 1816 and dying in 1874. His life was spent in his parish duties and in writing several volumes both of prose and of poetry. This hymn first appeared as one of his poems. The relative popularity of the hymn in England as compared with the United States is indicative of a fact often overlooked, that the place of a hymn depends much on the tune with which it is associated. In the former country it is always sung to the beautiful setting by J. W. Elliott, while in the latter no particular tune has been commonly assigned to it.]

O Jesus, I have promised
To serve thee to the end;
Be thou forever near me,
My Master and my Friend;
I shall not fear the battle
If thou art by my side,
Nor wander from the pathway
If thou wilt be my guide.

O, let me feel thee near me;
The world is ever near;
I see the sights that dazzle,
The tempting sounds I hear;
My foes are ever near me,
Around me and within;
But, Jesus, draw thou nearer,
And shield my soul from sin.

O Jesus, thou hast promised
To all who follow thee
That where thou art in glory
There shall thy servant be;
And, Jesus, I have promised
To serve thee to the end;
O, give me grace to follow,
My Master and my Friend.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of Chicago trade says:

"The aggregate payments through the banks for six days exhibit a sharp decrease for the first time this year in comparison with the corresponding period of last year and the record of trading defaults continues unfavorable. Various contributing causes account for these adverse features in the business situation, but all are of a temporary nature, the basic conditions being sound in both commerce and finance.

"The increase in failures mainly applies to concerns affected by inadequate capital to meet the high cost of operation, and the bad weather, which limit spring sales, is responsible for the collapse in minor retail lines. The season is still improving very slowly and the general demand here and at the interior does not rise equal to expectation, but a few warm days will bring an adequate disposition of stocks.

"Wholesale dealings for future deliveries compare favorably with this time last year in dry goods, footwear, clothing, suits and cloaks, and men's furnishings, the attendance of visiting buyers being good, although the usual uncertainty as to crop conditions causes some conservatism in commitments.

"Bank clearings, $257,619,466, are 5.8 per cent under those of the corresponding week in 1909, and compare with $216,460,701 in 1908.

"Failures reported in the Chicago district numbered twenty-seven, as against thirty-one last week, twenty-six in 1909 and twenty-three in 1908. Those with liabilities over $5,000 numbered five, as against eight last week, eight in 1909 and eight in 1908."

NEW YORK.

Quiet still rules in trade and many lines of industry, while speculation, except in grain, seems in a waiting stage, pending clearer views of the ultimate crop and price outcome. Relatively the most activity in the jobbing trade is centered in meeting current demands, and fall business still lacks form. Retail trade has shown some gain at the big Western markets, but is still classed as below expectations. Unreasonably cool weather is commonly assigned as the cause for the backward trade, but there are still in evidence signs that uncertainty as to prices holds back future commitments.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending May 26 were 200, a sagainst 225 last week, 205 in the like week of 1909, 263 in 1908, and 142 in 1907 and 127 in 1906. Business failures in Canada for the week terminating with Thursday numbered fifteen, which compares with nineteen last week and twenty-two in the like week of last year.—Bradstreet's.

SUMMER CARE OF ORCHARDS

The fruit crop in many localities in central and northern Indiana, has been severely damaged by the recent succession of heavy frosts. The crop in most sections of southern Indiana, also, has been made lighter than was promised early in the season, although some favored localities apparently escaped any injury.

Many owners of orchards have attempted this spring for the first time, to give their trees intelligent care in the way of pruning and spraying. It is always a temptation for those farmers who are growing fruit as a sideline, to neglect caring for their trees in off years or when only a light crop is produced. This policy is a great mistake, and accounts in no small degree for the fact that the orchard of the commercial grower usually bears much more regularly and abundantly than the other orchards in the same neighborhood. The commercial orchard is cared for every year. The ordinary home orchard is sprayed, pruned and cultivated irregularly and spasmodically and is likely to bear crops in the same way.

It pays to care for well located orchards in off years when the crop is a total or partial failure. The care the trees receive this summer will help to determine the number and vitality of the fruit buds which will be formed this season for next year's crop. Watch the trees carefully during the summer. The scab fungus and some other diseases which ordinarily do so much damage to the fruit, work also on the leaves. Spraying with Bordeaux mixture is very helpful in keeping these diseases in check, thus protecting the foliage and providing favorable conditions for a good crop next year, even though this year's crop may be light. Watch for leaf eating insects also, and if any are present, add two pounds of arsenate of lead or six ounces of Paris green to every 50 gallons of Bordeaux and spray thoroughly.

In certain sections of the state the crop has been but very little injured. It goes without saying that careful vigilance should be exercised to bring this crop to harvest with as little loss as possible. It is now past the time for the first codling moth spraying, but the fruit should be watched for the appearance of the later broods and sprayed accordingly.

The Department of Horticulture of the Experiment Station is always glad to receive specimens and answer inquiries relating to orchard problems.

Curing Coleridge

The English schoolmaster of long ago preferred spoiling the rod to spoiling the boy. When Samuel Taylor Coleridge was about 13 he went to a shoemaker and begged him to take him as an apprentice. The shoemaker, being an honest man, returned with the boy to Bowyer, his master, who got into a great rage, knocked Coleridge down and turned the shoemaker out of the grounds.

"Why have you made such a fool of yourself?" he then demanded.

"I have a great desire to be a shoemaker," Coleridge replied, "and I hate the thought of being a clergyman."

"Why so?" asked the master.

"Because, to tell you the truth, sir," said the boy, "I am an infidel."

For this, without more ado, Bowyer flogged Coleridge—wisely, as he afterward thought; soundly, as he knew at the time.

"It was my one flogging, and it was just," Coleridge afterward owned. "Any arguing or sermonizing would have gratified my vanity and confirmed me in my absurd views; as it was, all my infidelity was thrashed out of me, and I got heartily laughed at besides."

Why He Did It.

"So you read every word of the reports of that investigation."

"Yes."

"And you feel benefited?"

"Unquestionably. I won my bet with the man who thought I wouldn't have the necessary nerve and endurance."

Both Expert in Logic.

"Tom," said a father to his son, whose school report showed him to have been an idle young scamp, "what have you been studying this term?"

"Logic, father," replied Tom. "I can prove you are not here now."

"Indeed! How so?"

"Well, you must be either at Rome or elsewhere."

"Certainly."

"You are not at Rome?"

"No."

"Then you must be elsewhere."

"Just so."

"And if you are elsewhere you clearly can't be here."

For answer the father took up a cane that lay near and laid it smartly across his son's back.

"Don't!" cried Tom. "You are hurting me."

"Not at all. You have just proved conclusively that I am not here, so I can't be hurting you."

Before his stern parent had quite done with him Tom felt that there must be, after all, a flaw somewhere in his logic.—London Tit-Bits.

Nature as a Healer.

A great, broad, consoling and fundamental fact remains that in a large majority of diseases which attack humanity under 90 per cent of the unfavorable influences which affect us nature will effect a cure if not too much interfered with. As the old proverb has it, "A man at 40 is either a fool or a physician," and Nature is a good deal over 40 and has never been accused of lacking intelligence.—Woods Hutchinson, M. D., in Delineator.

Why G. W. Was No Sailor.

A Baltimore school teacher got disgusted with the ignorance displayed by one of her boys in relation to the recorded acts of the Father of His Country, and she grew sarcastic.

"I wonder," she began, "if you could tell me whether George Washington was a sailor or a soldier."

The boy grinned. "He was a soldier, all right," he said.

"How do you know?" the teacher asked.

"Because I saw the picture of him crossing the Delaware. Any sailor would know enough not to stand up in a boat."

Let the Lights Go Out.

It is a lonely little fishing bay in a corner of the Cornish coast, but it boasts a lighthouse on its queer old quay and also a story concerning it and its ancient keeper. The light was noted to be a little erratic, and so one day to the ancient keeper thereof came an officer of the coast guard. "What is this I hear?" he demanded. "Is it true that your light is never alight after midnight?" "That's right nuff," assented the ancient one equably. "'Tis a fack and well known that all the boats be in and safe afore 12 midnight, so I be savin' the ile!" And he looked smiling for approbation.—St. James Gazette.

The Skin of My Teeth.

In the book of Job appears the sentence, "I am escaped with the skin of my teeth," which is modernized "by the skin of my teeth" and gives the idea of a narrow escape, one so close as to be just by the thickness of the skin on the teeth, which is so thin that no microscopist has yet been able to find it. "To cast in the teeth" means to throw defiant reproaches or insults spitefully, as one would cast a stone at the exposed teeth of a snarling dog. "Tooth and nail" denotes the manner of an action full of frenzied fury, typified by biting and scratching, as when two belligerent cats make the fur fly.

FASTING GREEN MORAY.

It Is Forced to Eat Finally and Now Great Eel Is Improving.

Among all the creatures in the aquarium the most erratic feeders are those olive green twisters with the queer-shaped heads and the needle-pointed fanglike teeth, the green morays of Bermuda, the New York Sun says. A green moray may feed well for five or six days and then skip eight or ten. It is not remarkable for a green moray in captivity to go without eating for two or three months; and in more than one instance a green moray has gone without food for six months. In one case a green moray that had abstained from food for this long period then began eating and continued to eat voraciously for two years. The green morays are fed daily or it is sought daily to make them eat. There may, however, come a time when they must be forced to eat.

Of the two green morays now at the aquarium, one, a five-footer, received from Bermuda on June 30, 1903, has lately been for six months without taking the food offered it. Some weeks ago there were placed in the tank a number of small blackfish, eight or ten inches in length, with the hope that the green moray would feed on them, and it is thought to have taken one or two of them, but that was not enough.

When the green morays are not twisting about in the water with their marvelous convolutions they may lie with head reared against the wall of the tank or they may lie stretched prone upon the bottom or they may extend their bodies through an open section of tile piping which lies on the bottom of the tank, a situation which they favor. Here they may lie inert, and yet if the eel is in good condition it will even here show every indication of power and of latent alertness.

But the fasting green moray had now become listless and the time had come when it must be fed; and on the next occasion when it raised its head to the surface of the water in the tank they were ready for it with a ten-inch dead herring impaled on the end of a feeding-stick, and when the green moray opened its mouth, as the moray does regularly and constantly in its breathing, the herring was thrust down the green moray's throat to a point at which it was compelled to swallow it.

On the next day this herring was disgorged, but in a condition showing that it had yielded some nutriment in the moray, and a few days later it took and kept a herring's head and now the big green moray is improving and showing more life and animation, and it is expected soon to begin to feed again. It is tempted daily.

EARLY DAYS PRINTING.

First Press in Western World Set Up in City of Mexico.

It seems odd that the first American printing press should have been set up up in the City of Mexico, says an exchange. It is nevertheless true that in that city the first press was installed in 1536, and it was forty-four years thereafter before the first printing was done in the British colonies of North America.

This first American press, a very crude affair, was brought from Spain, where the printing press had been established in 1474, and set up by Viceroy Mendoza. It was operated on February 20 and a small religious tract was "run off," a copy of which is still preserved in the Mexican museum. The first book printed was the "Escala Espiritual de San Juan Chinaco," of which no copy is known to exist. A duplicate of this press was made by a mechanic in the City of Mexico and found its way to Lima, Peru, where it was put in operation in 1584.

The first American press was set up at Harvard college in 1638 by Stephen Daye, and this press still continues under the name "University Press." The first book issued was the "Bay State Psalm Book," in 1640.

Before Christ the Chinese had originated a method of printing in ink on paper by means of engraved blocks, which is the first mention in history of the art. The Chinese are also credited with having used movable type as early as the twelfth and thirteenth centuries.

In Europe in classical and medieval times books were made by transcribing them in manuscript, but about the thirteenth century these manuscripts began to be produced with the initial letters stamped in ink from engraved blocks of wood. John Gutenberg is usually named as the inventor who first established typography on anything like a scientific basis. Laurenze J. Coster of Haarlem, Holland, is said to have invented types of wood about 1428 and at a later date types of metal with which he printed several small books.

Gutenberg experimented with printing at Straussburg in 1430 and in 1448 he had a printing office at Mainz. Printing was practiced in Rome in 1467, in Paris in 1469 and in Spain in 1474. The first English press was set up at Westminster abbey in 1477.

The first stereotyping was done by William Ged of Edinburg in 1725; the first electrotyping by Joseph A. Adams in New York in 1839. The inking rollers were first used in 1814. The type setting machines developed from a crude invention of William Church of Connecticut in 1821. The development of late years in printing presses and typesetting machines, as well as all other parts of the printing trade, has been little less than marvelous.

WHO'S AFRAID OF A GOOD TIME?

If life is worth the living, then it is worth living right. All our time is devoted either to work or to pleasure, and if we ever expect to get out of life everything there is in it, both work and pleasure must be exercised. The pursuits of pleasure are the great safety valves against grouchiness, selfishness and despondency. In other words it is the most effective way of letting ourselves know that we are really alive, without in the least degree endangering ourselves morally or spiritually. One of the best and surest signs of a Christian life and a clear conscience is a disposition for fun. Rob the world of its fun and frolic and we would witness something like a kite with no tail in rapid descent. Why, if everybody would take a round of pleasure instead pills each meal, our physicians would beat their teeth tongs, carving knives and medicine bottles into pruning hooks and plough shares and quit the business. It's fun we youngsters need to make us natural. It's fun and only fun that will keep us "old fellers" from getting a corner on this town, or, at least the thoughts that we might own the place. It's fun that we all need to cause us to make good at any task. A good time is never harmful as long as we remember what Webster's Unabridged says about the word good. We only have one life to live—let's have some fun.

"Our little daughter, when three months old, began to break out on the head and we had the best doctors to treat her, but they did not do her any good. They said she had eczema. Her scalp was a solid scale all over. The burning and itching was so severe that she could not rest, day or night. We had about given up all hopes when we read of the Cuticura Remedies. We at once got a cake of Cuticura Soap, a box of Cuticura Ointment and one bottle of Cuticura Resolvent, and followed directions carefully. After the first dose of the Cuticura Resolvent, we used the Cuticura Soap freely and applied the Cuticura Ointment. Then she began to improve rapidly and in two weeks the scale came off her head and new hair began to grow. In a very short time she was well. She is now sixteen years of age and a picture of health. We used the Cuticura Remedies about five weeks, regularly, and then we could not tell she had been affected by the disease. We used no other treatments after we found out what the Cuticura Remedies would do for her. J. Fish and Ella M. Fish, Mt. Vernon, Ky., Oct. 12, 1909."

A Woman's Advice.

A woman was looking over the shoulder of a man who was writing this item, and just when he got to this point, and was writing the word "soap" she said:

"There's one great essential in a laundry soap. It must be a soap that will not rot the clothes or the fabrics. Some soaps will clean goods, but they rot them; others have sticky, yellow rosin in them and stain the clothes yellow. Just you write that Easy Task soap saves half the work and saves all the clothes and drives away the dirt and keeps away the disease germs and is the best soap I ever found."

And so her advice has been followed, for women know soap.

Municipal Neatness.

After keeping up a tirade for many years against the billboard nuisance it is very pleasant to note in numerous towns that some drastic measures have been taken looking to the curtailment of this most offensive eyesore. The vacant lot is another problem, with or without the billboard. Ash heaps, piles of tin cans, broken dishes, baling wire, old bed springs, broken carts and perambulators, bottles without number and castoff shoes are a few of the decorations noted in vacant lots of some of our towns. Neatness is indicative of cleanliness just as surely in the case of a municipality as with individuals. While it may cost a little to secure this cleanliness, the cost of maintenance of a high standard would be very little, and assurance of such desirable conditions could be brought about by the passage and enforcement of suitable ordinances. Neatness has its own reward, for, aside from improved appearances, a decided menace to health is removed. The value of cleanliness to the city beautiful movement is simply incalculable. Beautiful surroundings have a decided effect upon the character of our lives. Clean characters come only from clean conditions and clean surroundings. That town is not a desirable place of residence in which many evidences are seen of slovenly municipal housekeeping. Uncleanliness is not a valuable asset to a town's progress.

HARD ON CHILDREN

When Teacher Has Coffee Habit.

"Best is best, and best will ever live." When a person feels this way about Postum they are glad to give testimony for the benefit of others.

A school teacher down in Miss. says: "I had been a coffee drinker since my childhood, and the last few years it had injured me seriously.

"One cup of coffee taken at breakfast would cause me to become so nervous that I could scarcely go through with the day's duties, and this nervousness was often accompanied by deep depression of spirits and heart palpitation.

"I am a teacher by profession, and when under the influence of coffee had to struggle against crossness when in the school room.

"When talking this over with my physician, he suggested that I try Postum, so I purchased a package and made it carefully according to directions; found it excellent of flavor and nourishing.

"In a short time I noticed very gratifying effects. My nervousness disappeared, I was not irritated by my pupils, life seemed full of sunshine, and my heart troubled me no longer.

"I attribute my change in health and spirits to Postum alone."

EDITORIALS

Opinions of Great Papers on Important Subjects.

THE PICKPOCKET AND HIS VICTIM.

A MAN from whom a sum of money has been stolen and who has caused the arrest of a suspect receives an offer of the return of the money taken if he will drop the prosecution. Desiring the return of his money more than the punishment of the thief, he consents. The money is returned and he notifies the police and the court that he has no charges to make. Whereupon the judge orders the release of the man whose guilt is practically confessed by the return of the money.

What are the moral aspects of such a case as this? The victim of the thief is naturally eager to get his money back, but is he justified in letting the thief go? Is he not, in fact, compounding a felony when he agrees to such a settlement? What right has he to save the thief from imprisonment and to set him free, so that he may prey on society? Such questions often confront citizens against whom crimes are committed. The temptation to recover the valuables and the repugnance for being mixed in court proceedings frequently lead to such settlements. There can be no doubt, however, that they are against public policy and, in point of fact, indefensible.

One may go farther and question the wisdom of the judge who will let a prisoner go under such circumstances. It would seem better to secure the attendance in court of the accuser by whatever means may be necessary, so that a trial of the matter could be held. The offer and acceptance of the return of the stolen money would be strong corroborative evidence of the guilt of the accused man. Pickpockets are dangerous persons to be at large. When caught red-handed they ought to be prosecuted to the limit, whether the victim gets his money back or not.—Minneapolis Journal.

COAL TAR PRODUCTS AND HEART FAILURE.

SO MANY people suffer from sleeplessness and other real or imaginary affections of what we call nerves; and so many who think they suffer also think they find relief in a certain cycle of hypnotic drugs, that the permanent effect of these drugs on health is a matter of even more popular than medical interest. The drugs in question are derived from the by-products of gas making and oil refining, coke burning and the like. Science has utilized these unpleasant mineral smells as it has utilized the animal smells of the packing houses. These compounds are grouped together for the chemist by the fact that they approach the highly complex formulas of organic chemistry and for the vulgar world of apothecaries and patients by the fact that the names of most of them end in al. They differ from the opiates or narcotics formerly used to produce sleep in their direct effect upon the brain and nerves through the circulation. This effect is produced through an influence upon heart action against excess of which medical men warn patients and which observing patients are able to detect. This effect varies in different preparations and in different patients, according to their condition and susceptibility, all the way from a slight depression of vitality to complete heart failure and stoppage of life. Some drugs seem to affect one person in this way and some another, but few persons are immune to all of them.

It appears that medical men in the East are proceeding from individual warnings in relation to the use of drugs to an organized campaign against any resort to them except on a physician's order and under his direction. They resemble other remedies in the respect that injurious results follow their abuse. Whether these results are so uniform and certain as to make it necessary to pay a doctor's bill every time one takes a dose appears still to be a matter of dispute.—St. Paul Dispatch.

WHY MEATS ARE HIGH.

THE schemes of "civilization" to put food materials (mixed with some materials that are not food) through various complications that greatly increase the price and hence the profit to the mixers, and that capture trade by putting out a product that has a different appearance, color, odor or taste from the same thing in a less expensive form, are entirely based upon our anthropoid curiosity.

In the case of meats, for instance, the farmer takes grain worth a cent and a half a pound and feeds it to a steer who completely consumes fourteen out of fifteen pounds of it, and deposits in his carcass, together with the fifteen pounds of grain, two pounds of water. Now this steer the farmer sells to the packer at a rate high enough to pay for all his feed, labor and the loss from animals that did not thrive. Next the packer turns 40 per cent of this steer into fertilizer and fusses and fixes the rest of it up and passes it on to us through the hands of a dozen storage men, wholesalers and retailers; finally it reaches the consumer a pitifully meager share of the original food grown on the farm, and hopelessly loaded with the product of the steer's physiological economy and the packer's chemical laboratory.

When one considers the waste and folly of the whole proceeding, instead of being surprised that meats are high, he wonders that they are so low.—Physical Culture.

BACK TO THE LAND

ONE HUNDRED years ago human society was essentially rural. Since then the great collective interests have developed, and the thought of the world has become largely urban. The present interest in country life is the rising of a tide. It is an unconscious expression of the sentiment lying back in the human mind that society must be neither predominantly rural nor predominantly urban. We are now beginning to see that the most fertile civilization must be the result of the attrition of the two great means by which human beings express themselves—as individuals and as collective or aggregate units. Country life typifies the individual self-acting unsyndicated means; city life typifies the associated consolidated and corporate means.—National Magazine.

CLIMATIC IRRITABILITY.

Why Certain Localities Are Bracing and Others Are Enervating.

Certain places are said to be "bracing," while others enjoy an unenviable reputation of being enervating, though the latter quality is sometimes described as "soothing," according to the London Lancet. The very antithesis of soothing is the climate too often met with in many resorts on the Mediterranean littoral during winter, where a blend of hot and cold that is disagreeable to the healthy and very trying to the invalid may frequently be experienced.

It is common in midwinter in these places for the landscape to be quivering in the hot sun while a piercing wind from the northeast seizes every opportunity—the shade of a palm tree or a wall—to grip the unwary traveler in its fierce embrace to the detriment of his comfort, possibly of his health. The inexperienced laugh at the cautious resident who dons his overcoat in spite of what looks and feels like summer sunshine, but the wages of ignorance is often disease.

There is one curious effect of these bitter-sweet climates—namely, a certain irritability of temper that attacks people after a few weeks spent in these surroundings. Ask any one who has passed three months at Helouan or Algiers, Nice or Menton, and although he may not admit it as regards himself he will readily concede the truth of this observation on behalf of his friends.

Now, this irritability is no doubt an outward and visible manifestation of a disturbance of nervous equilibrium consequent on nervous exhaustion. The effect of these rapidly recurring alternations of heat and cold on the nervous system is strictly comparable with that of quick alterations of light and dark on the eye. The bewildered vaso-motor system does its best to respond to the kaleidoscopic indications, but fails and ultimately reacts on the nervous system as a whole.

When this symptom declared itself it is time to move on, either further south, where the variations of temperature are less marked, or to a higher altitude, where the temperature, being low, is more uniform.

The latter is the better choice of the two, because no matter how far south one goes, starting from the Mediterranean, much the same difference obtains between the temperature in the sun and that of the wind. The only advantage attending the desert air is that, being absolutely dry, the alternations are less trying than the near coast, where the relative humidity is high.

Spiders in the Cheese.

Andre Laturbe, a young Parisian who thought he had solved the problem of living at other people's expense, has been arrested for a most ingenious fraud, a St. Louis Post-Dispatch's Paris correspondent says.

His method was to go to a fashionable restaurant and dine well. When he got to the cheese stage he produced from his pocket a little tin box full of spiders. To introduce a couple of spiders on the plate from which he was eating his cheese was the work of a moment. Then he called the waiter and protested loudly against the filthiness of supplying food with spiders in it.

On the arrival of the manager he protested still more loudly and the ruse invariably ended by the distracted manager hushing the thing up by inviting the outraged customer to take a glass of old brandy and tendering profuse apologies. Of course the waiter was instructed to present no bill.

But finally Laturbe, in choosing a restaurant where he has not been before, happened to choose one that employed a waiter who had seen his trick at another establishment. This man quietly sent for the police and when Laturbe had been arrested and searched the box of spiders was found in his pocket.

NEWS OF RECENT BOOKS

Ian Hay, who comes before the American public for the first time with his new novel, "The Right Stuff," is a young Scotch writer. "The Right Stuff" has been compared with Barrie's "When a Man's Single." It deals with London life of to-day.

Maurice Hewlett has lately been appearing as the bellwether of Thomas Hardy's admirers. Mr. Hewlett belongs to a family that has lived in Somerset and Dorset for generations. The members of the family were always Whigs and Puritans. Mr. Hewlett has some French Huguenot blood. His early reading was Malory, the Bible, "Don Quixote" in English, Sir Thomas Browne.

William Allen White recently entertained Governor Stubbs of Kansas, Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan and Miss Morgan at his home in Emporia. In an interview the next day the Governor characterized Miss Morgan as an "insurgent." This is perhaps significant in view of the fact that Victor Murdock, who, it is believed, is the original of one of the characters in Mr. White's novel, "A Certain Rich Man," is an intimate friend of Mr. White's—and a leading insurgent.

H. G. Wells tells a story of a business man next to whom he once sat at a public dinner. The conversation had turned upon one of his own books, and Mr. Wells had said something to the effect that "were there no self-seekers the world would be a Utopia." This neighbor promptly observed: "I maintain that all water used for drinking and culinary purposes should be boiled at least an hour." "You are a physician, I presume?" suggested the novelist. "No, sir," was the reply, "I am in the coal line."

It is well known that at one stage of his career Mark Twain was in serious financial difficulties. He was interested in the publishing firm of C. L. Webster & Co., and when that company failed he insisted upon undertaking their liabilities. The figures are now being recalled. "The assets of the company were realized upon as far as possible, which enabled the firm to pay about 40 cents on the dollar. As the entire debts amounted to $100,000, this left $60,000 of unpaid and unsecured debts. When this became known Mark Twain announced that he would assume personally the responsibility of paying the $60,000. His phrase was: 'I'll pay this if I live.' No one believed him, but he immediately went on a lecture tour, wrote 'Following the Equator,' and kept at work until he had paid every dollar of the Webster indebtedness."

Aged Man Sings Six Hours.

What is believed to be the most prolonged singing performance on record has just been achieved by Alexander R. Porter, a magistrate living in the Liverpool suburb of Waterloo, who before retiring from business was chief accountant in Liverpool of the North and South Wales bank, the London Express says.

Mr. Porter has sung a hundred songs in one evening by way of demonstrating his vigor at the age of 72. The veteran magistrate is sprightly in his bearing and has a ruddy and cheerful face. He believes that vigorous and frequent singing tends to longevity and good health and attributes his own mental and physical well-being to vocal exercise. Since he was a lad he has always begun the day by a vigorous bout of singing before breakfast and closed it with a liberal exercise of his vocal cords in the evening.

The more he has sung the more he has found himself able to sing, and he contends that the singing has invigorated his heart and brain, expanded his lungs, and so largely contributed to his enjoyment of good health.

Mr. Porter on his 72d birthday gave a party to relatives and friends, and during the evening sang 72 songs, one for each year of his life. The songs included modern light opera, old ballads and sacred selections, and were rendered in a rich and powerful baritone, accompanied by a pianoforte. The feat took six hours, with necessary intervals.

When a girl goes out of town on a visit, and her hostess cries when she departs for home, she thinks her visit was successful.

AFTER SUFFERING ONE YEAR

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Milwaukee, Wis. — "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me a well woman, and I would like to tell the whole world of it. I suffered from female trouble and fearful pains in my back. I had the best doctors and they all decided that I had a tumor in addition to my female trouble, and advised an operation. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made me a well woman and I have no more backache. I hope I can help others by telling them what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me." — MRS. EMMA IMSE, 833 First St., Milwaukee, Wis.

The above is only one of the thousands of grateful letters which are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., which prove beyond a doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, actually does cure these obstinate diseases of women after all other means have failed, and that every such suffering woman owes it to herself to at least give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial before submitting to an operation, or giving up hope of recovery.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health and her advice is free.

Rattled.

"What's your order, sir?" asked the waiter.

"Bring me," said the wild-eyed customer, "some medium boiled potatoes and some eggs with the jackets on."

"Sir?"

"I don' know whether I've got that right, or not, waiter," said the wild-eyed man, "but do the best you can with it. A big red automobile had to jump out of my way about two minutes ago to keep me from running over it, and I'm a bit flustered."—Chicago Tribune.

IT WEARS YOU OUT.

Kidney Troubles Lower the Vitality of the Whole Body.

Don't wait for serious illness; begin using Doan's Kidney Pills when you first feel backache or notice urinary disorders.

David P. Corey, 230 W. Washington St., Ionia, Mich., says: "I had kidney trouble so badly that for six months I could only get around with a cane or crutches. The backache grew gradually worse until I was compelled to take to my bed. While still in bed I began using Doan's Kidney Pills and gradually improved until well."

Remember the name—Doan's. For sale by all dealers. 50 cents a box. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

The Reason Why.

A wilfully literal answer is sometimes the most impudent kind of a retort. Of such nature was the reply made by General Early and quoted below from "The Confederate Scrap Book," a collection of cuttings gathered by Mrs. Lizzie Cary Daniels, and published after the Civil War.

During the march of General Lee's army through northern Virginia to Maryland, General Jackson happened to notice a number of stragglers in General Early's division, and that night he sent him a note.

"General. General Jackson desires to know why he saw so many of your stragglers in the rear of your division to-day.

"(Signed) A. S. Pendleton."

Old Jubal replied:

"Captain. In answer to your note I would state that I think it possible that the reason General Jackson saw so many of my stragglers on the march to-day is that he rode in the rear of my division. J. A. Early."

"Stonewall" Jackson only smiled when he read the note, and made no further inquiries.

Why Have an Overheated Kitchen in Summer?

When the sultry days come and the coal range makes the kitchen almost unbearable and cooking a dreaded task, put out the range fire and try the newest method of cooking in hot weather—use a

New Perfection
WICK BLUE FLAME
Oil Cook-stove

What a contrast! The kitchen no longer is stifling hot, the work is now done with comfort, and the housewife is not worn out with the heat.

Cautionary Note:—Be sure you get this stove—see that the name-plate reads "New Perfection."

She saves her strength, keeps her health and is better able to enjoy the summer.

The New Perfection does everything that any other stove can do—all the family cooking, baking, washing and ironing. No smoke, no dust, no odor. Heat is applied directly and not wasted. A turn, and the flame is out.

The New Perfection stove has a Cabinet Top with shelf for keeping plates and food hot, drop shelves for the coffee pot or saucepans, and nickeled towel racks.

It has long turquoise-blue enamel chimneys. The nickel finish, with the bright blue of the chimneys, makes the stove very attractive and invites cleanliness. Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without Cabinet.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Calvin Bolin, a farmer near Madison, caught a white crow, the first ever seen in that locality.

Harry Gill's barn, at Marble Hill, was destroyed by fire. Thirty thousand pounds of tobacco, feed and harness were burned. The loss is $6,000, with small insurance.

Frank Ebert, of Alexandria, was elected president of the American Order of Owls by the delegates to the State convention in Richmond. Other officers are: Charles Potter, of Richmond, vice-president, and George Clem, of Anderson, invocator. The next meeting will be held at Anderson in 1911.

Word has been received of the finding of a skeleton five miles north of Pierceton, near the Highland Park clubhouse. The skeleton is that of a woman and was found in an upright position in a sand bank four feet below the surface by the children of John Kuhn, who were playing in the sand.

After being deserted by an old hen, a brood of twelve chicks was taken in charge by a bantam rooster belonging to Joseph Coyle, of Logansport. The rooster is mothering the little chickens with as much care as any hen, and Coyle says that the male bird developed the art of clucking and can bring the little chickens on the run to him when he wishes.

A quarrel over a fence caused Steward Ward and Frank Billhimer, living in the southern part of Tipton County, to pay heavy fines besides attorney's fees and court costs. Billhimer caused Ward's arrest on charge of provoke, assault and battery and drawing a deadly weapon. Ward stood trial and on being defeated filed similar charges against Billhimer. Billhimer entered a plea of guilty.

Enough tuberculosis baccili were found in a specimen of saliva, taken by Dr. J. P. Simonds, of the pathological laboratory of the State Board of Health, from the sidewalk in Washington street, Indianapolis, to infect an entire family. The selection was made at random, and when placed under the microscope, showed the deadly germs in such numbers as to astonish even the pathologist.

A pair of wood thrushes have built a nest and are now raising their young in a climbing rose bush against the house of Mrs. M. H. Mayhood, of Lyons. The circumstance is remarkable, as the wood thrush delights in deep shady glens and in dark woods, and is seldom seen near the haunts of men. Its soft, half plaintive notes are equal in sweetness to those of any other American bird.

E. M. Wilhite, of Danville, has succeeded in hatching in an incubator six ring-necked pheasant eggs and has the little pheasants on exhibition at his store. They closely resemble young turkeys and have been mistaken for them by many persons who have seen them with the chickens in Mr. Wilhite's brooder. The eggs were furnished by James McCoun, who has a pair of grown pheasants.

Robert I. Patterson, ex-clerk of Delaware County, and former Postmaster of Muncie, has obtained for clients more than six thousand pensions during the many years that he has been a pension agent in Muncie. He is a Civil War veteran, and is known to Indiana veterans everywhere as "Corporal Bob." His clients come from all parts of the United States. While holding public office he endeavored to get out of the pension business, but his old comrades refused to allow him to do so.

The raising of poultry in the vicinity of Clay City this season is attended with obstacles and discouragements from various sources, principally from the ravages of crows and from the cold, wet weather, inimical to incubation and brooding. Crows have swooped down on hen coops and carried away chicks and have watched nests and stolen eggs. There is much complaint also that eggs do not usually prove fertile. In one instance, as an example, from a hundred eggs of a fine strain purchased for $10, placed in an incubator, only fifteen chicks were brought out.

Aroused to action by the rapid spread of an epidemic of rabies in Tippecanoe County, the City Council of Lafayette held a special meeting and instructed Mayor George R. Durgan to issue a proclamation ordering every dog in the city mussled forthwith or kept in confinement. Mayor Durgan issued the proclamation and it goes into effect at once. The police will shoot unmussled dogs on sight. Not in many years has hydrophobia been so prevalent as at the present time. A number of cases are reported in different farming communities of the county, and in each instance where an examination has been made by experts they have found distinct evidence of the dread disease.

Avis, a pacing mare owned by Greensburg people, has been sold to Wallingford & Bergen, of Liverpool, England, and will be shipped soon. The price was not made public, although it ran well into four figures.

James West, aged 19, living near Keystone, suffered a fracture of the leg while playing ball at Montpelier. On his way to a physician's office the young man fainted and fell from a rig, breaking his leg a second time a few inches below the first fracture.

The newly instituted Zorah Temple of Shriners has bought the Christian church property in Terre Haute, to be vacated by the end of the year, when the congregation moves into a new edifice, and after remodeling it will use it for the home of the order.

Frank Moor, superintendent of construction, Eastern Division of the T. H., I. & E. railroad, three weeks ago set a hen on thirteen eggs at his home in Greenfield and it has just presented him with fourteen healthy chicks. He is confident one of the eggs contained two chickens.

Mrs. Noah Whetsell, aged 60, wife of a wealthy farmer living six miles south of Anderson, committed suicide by hanging herself in the bedroom of her home. The woman's husband found his wife's body when he returned home. Despondency over ill health prompted the woman to take her life.

A bald eagle, measuring five and one-half feet from tip to tip, was shot and killed near Carthage a few days ago by Conrad Kizer. The bird was unlike any heretofore seen in that locality. Its body is in the hands of a taxidermist at Cumberland and will be returned to Mr. Kizer as soon as it is mounted.

Steam gang plows are being used by farmers in the Patoka lowlands this spring in breaking their ground for the corn planting. The plows turn six furrows at once and an immense amount of ground can be broken daily. This is the first time they have been used there, the stumps in the fields preventing their use heretofore.

R. T. Dobson, of Prairie Township, Tipton County, has sold to E. W. Phares the two best fleeces of wool brought to the Tipton market this year. He received $6.25 for them, the highest market price, but had exceptional wool. He also had the honor of selling the highest priced wool disposed of in the county last year.

Joseph Beyer, a farmer living near Waldron, sold a bunch of fifty-nine hogs to Rank & Martin, of St. Paul, for $933, or an average of $15.80 for each hog. Mr. Beyer kept a record of the number of bushels of corn fed the porkers, and in comparing this with the price received for the hogs it is shown that he made $1.54 a bushel on the corn.

Mrs. Jennie Summers, of Milton, recently saw two birds fluttering in her dooryard. Approaching them she found a robin and jaybird pinioned together by means of pieces of muslin sewed around their necks. There was also a small muslin sack filled with stones fastened to their bodies to weight them down. They were almost dead when liberated by Mrs. Summers.

A dispatch from Evansville says: The cut worms are playing havoc with the growing crops in some sections of the pocket. The clover crop, wheat, corn and oats crops have been seriously damaged. The present cool weather has been conducive to the growth of the worms. Farmers in some localities are predicting that the wheat crop will not be over one-half of what it was a year ago.

Lightning struck a barn on the farm of Thomas H. New near Greenfield, tearing out one end of the stable near where several horses were standing, four feet below the barn floor, in bank stalls. After the stroke of lightning all the animals were found on the floor of the barn, having in some unexplained manner elevated themselves to the floor above the stall where they had been quartered.

Absentmindedly returning from the grocery and thinking of a sick brother, Mrs. Albert H. Grimm, of Jeffersonville, tore up and distributed along the street a $10 bill, thinking she was destroying the memoranda of articles she had just bought at the store where the bank note was part of her change. She discovered her error when she reached home and recovered enough of the torn pieces to obtain a new note at the bank.

When J. A. Boyd and his sons, John and Abram, went to an unused barn on their farm, near Capital Hill, east of Cambridge City, they found the body of a man who had apparently been dead some time. The barn had not been opened since March, and the body was so badly decomposed no marks of identification could be found. The man was white, with brown hair and was well dressed. He was apparently about 21 years old.

Thieves that evidently have found a market elsewhere for Boston terriers are stealing this breed of dogs in large numbers at Muncie, to the neglect of all other kinds. The express companies in that city are notified daily not to ship away Boston terriers until owners of stolen dogs have been notified. A few weeks ago many Scotch collies were stolen. Then all other breeds but Scotch collies were safe. The police have made no arrests.

Stella Bechinski, aged 5, of Chesterton, was instantly killed at her home while gathering eggs. The child climbed on to a lumber pile near a barn and was crushed to death when the pile gave way.

Tom Toomey, a veteran of the Civil War, aged 76, was struck on the head by a Syrian at Fort Wayne and fatal results are feared. Toomey recently footed doctors by recovering from double pneumonia, and his friends say his constitution again will save his life.

WESTERN CANADA

What Governor Dencon, of Illinois, Says About It:

Governor Dencon, of Illinois, owns a section of land in Saskatchewan, Canada. He has said in an interview:

"As an American I am delighted to see the remarkable progress of Western Canada. Our people are flocking across the boundary in thousands, and I have not yet met one who admitted he had made a mistake. They are all doing well. There is scarcely a community in the Middle or Western States that has not a representative in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta."

A Natural Question.

Henry James, the noted novelist, does not agree with Col. Roosevelt on the question of large families. Small families, such as prevail in France, indicate, to Mr. James' mind, intelligence and progress, while large families indicate the reverse.

"Large families are so embarrassing, too," said Mr. James on his last American visit. "I once knew a man named Thompson who had fourteen children. Thompson agreed one spring holiday to take his children to the seashore for the week end.

"They set off, reached the station, got their tickets and were about to board the train, when Thompson was roughly collared by a policeman.

"'Here, wot 'a' you bin a-doin' of?' the policeman growled, fiercely.

"'Me? Nothing. Why?' stammered poor Thompson.

"The policeman waved his truncheon toward the Thompson family.

"'Then wot the bloody blazes,' he hissed, 'is this here crowd a-follerin' ye fur?'"

A Rare Experience.

"No doubt you recall the most enjoyable railroad trip you ever made?"

"Oh, yes. It was a short trip of only half a day, but because his private car had been derailed the president of the road was traveling with the common herd in an ordinary Pullman car."

"And so you enjoyed the novelty of traveling in close proximity to the president of the road?"

"No; it wasn't that particularly. I enjoyed seeing the porter look humble."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

What Ails You?

Do you feel weak, tired, despondent, have frequent headaches, coated tongue, bitter or bad taste in morning, "heart-burn," belching of gas, acid risings in throat after eating, stomach gnaw or burn, foul breath, dizzy spells, poor or variable appetite, nausea at times and kindred symptoms?

If you have any considerable number of the above symptoms you are suffering from biliousness, torpid liver with indigestion, or dyspepsia. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is made up of the most valuable medicinal principles known to medical science for the permanent cure of such abnormal conditions. It is a most efficient liver invigorator, stomach tonic, bowel regulator and nerve strengthener.

The "Golden Medical Discovery" is not a patent medicine or secret nostrum, a full list of its ingredients being printed on its bottle-wrapper and attested under oath. A glance at these will show that it contains no alcohol, or harmful habit-forming drugs. It is a fluid extract made with pure, triple-refined glycerine, of proper strength, from the roots of native American medicinal forest plants. DE KALB COUNTY SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

Held at Butler, June 7-8—Royally Entertained Convention—A Profitable Meeting Held—Largest in Attendance in Years.

The forty-ninth annual convention of the DeKalb County Sunday School Association met at the M. E. Church, June 7 and 8, 1910.

Tuesday Forenoon.

9:30—Song service, conducted by Prof. J. E. Eturgis.

9:45—Devotional exercises, led by Rev. Herendeen.

10:30—Welcome address, Rev. E. F. Albertson.

10:10—Response by Rev. F. P. Overmyer, of Waterloo.

Bro. Willis, of Waterloo, spoke of the personal experience and call to the work of the Sunday school teacher.

The evidence of his fitness; how made apparent to others, by M. F. Bishop, of St. Joe.

Mrs. M. A. Ehlers, of Auburn, said if a teacher was a failure the only way to dispose of them was to make a success out of him.

Committees were appointed, other business transacted and adjourned to meet in the afternoon.

Tuesday Afternoon.

1:30—Song service, led by Prof. J. E. Sturgis.

1:45—Devotional exercises, led by Mrs. C. B. Jones, of Garrett. Mrs. Jones gave some very interesting thoughts for the Sunday school teachers, namely, that there is not a Christian man or woman who cannot teach God's word, for if we are true Christians and are filled with the spirit of His love we cannot help but teach the word of God.

After a song we then had a paper read by Bro. Higley on "Several Kinds of Sunday School Teachers." Bro. Higley divided the female sex of Sunday school teachers in two classes, ladies and women. He said women are better fitted by nature to be a teacher of God's word than man is. The first class of Sunday school teachers are ladies who are very beautiful and who comb their hair the latest, in fact one who cares more for the worldly things of life than they do to teach His word. We do not want teachers in our Sunday schools who have not the love of God in their hearts. Bro. Higley then said the right kind of people in the church should start from the pulpit, that a large per cent. of the ministers get members instead of seeking salvation.

This remark enthused Rev. Williams, and to defend himself asked if it was not the laymen of the church who makes the preachers, and if it is the preachers who cause so much dictation in the churches? Bro. Williams closed by saying, "Be careful that there is not some laymen behind the throne."

Sister Ehlers then gave some good thoughts. Be careful how we criticise our church and our minister; let outsiders do the talking and let us love one another.

Bro. Williams then gave a short but very interesting talk in regard to the Sunday school superintendent and what is he? A superintendent must superintend, not only to fill the office, but he must be active, mind on his work and must have a real purpose to train the Sunday school in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Very good thoughts and suggestions were given by different ones, and if we carry out these suggestions which have been given we will work more in harmony with each other.

Closing remarks by Bro. Willis, of Waterloo, and Sister Ehlers, of Auburn.

Adjourned.

The evening was taken up largely by music and drills.

Wednesday Morning.

9:00—Song service, Prof. J. E. Sturgis.

9:15—Devotional exercises, led by Mrs. Chas. Knisely, of Waterloo.

9:30—"Enthusiasm in the Sunday School," by Rev. Elliot, of Auburn, followed by a general discussion. Bro. Elliot said that what we need most in our Sunday schools is enthusiasm, and in order to be enthusiastic we must attract. One must have the spirit of God within himself, not only to bring the scholars to Sunday school, but to bring them to Christ.

Mrs. M. J. Baldwin gave an interesting talk on, "Our Standard." Our standard or ideal must be setup by the Lord Jesus Christ.

Rev. Konkle then gave a talk on "Temperance Outlook," followed by several interesting talks regarding the temperance question.

Adjourned to meet in the afternoon.

Wednesday Afternoon.

1:00—Song service, led by Prof. J. E. Sturgis.

Mrs. M. J. Baldwin talked on the graded lessons which should be taught in all the Sunday schools, for they are a great help to the scholars, that they tend to broaden their minds, that they will be better fitted to teach the word of God.

Mrs. G. S. Fulmer, of Garrett, gave a most interesting talk in regard to the state convention which was held at Indianapolis.

Bro. Barnham, of Ashley, then

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

Young Pine Forest Burned.

The prairie fire that recently swept over the portion of Nebraska north and west of Dunning, devastating an area twenty to thirty miles wide and seventy-five miles in length has practically destroyed the experimental pine forest planted on the sand hills along the Dismal river. While it is not certain, it is believed that this will mark the end of the government's plan to reforest the Nebraska sand hills. The experimental forest covered nearly ten thousand acres, was planted some ten years ago, and the trees had grown rapidly. Some of them were fifty feet in height and from ten to twelve inches in diameter. In the past they have been carefully watched and guarded, fires being their only enemy. Forest rangers have been constantly on duty and the expense of looking after the grove has been heavy.

Famous Marauder Is Dead.

"One Toe," the most famous wolf in the west, was laid low last week by Wm. Jenkins, a ranchman near Upton, Wyo., who shot the animal, which has been hunted by stock growers in that part of the State for years. "One Toe," so named from the fact that his trail showed him to have but one toe on his right fore paw, had been the despair of stock growers for many years, raiding their herds and being held responsible for losses that aggregated thousands of dollars. He was too wary to be led into a trap, could never be deceived into eating poisoned meat and until last week had never been caught within rifle range. In addition to the regular bounty offered on wolves by the State, Jenkins will receive a big reward offered by the stockmen for the destruction of the four-footed raider.

New Officers of Sons of Veterans.

Jos. Sego, of Valparaiso, Ind., defeated Frank Helms, of Elwood, and W. F. Geller, of Fort Wayne, on the fourth ballot for the office of department commander at the closing session of the Sons of Veterans in South Bend, Ind. The other officers chosen by acclamation are: Schuyler Tipton, South Bend, senior vice commander; Bert Hines, Shelbyville, junior vice commander; J. E. Bosworth, Winchester, secretary and treasurer for three years. The convention of 1911 will be held at Richmond. The Sons of Veterans Auxiliary elected officers as follows: President, Mrs. Cora McDaniels, Valparaiso; vice president, Mrs. R. F. Ducomb, South Bend; treasurer, Mrs. Iretta Jones, Valparaiso.

Plan Great Memorial Road.

The Lincoln Memorial Road Association, formed to promote the construction by the federal government of a memorial road to Abraham Lincoln from Washington to Gettysburg, Pa., was organized in New York City. Truman Newberry, of Detroit, Mich., former secretary of the navy, was elected president. Those forming the association believe that the national memorial to Lincoln should be paid for entirely by the national government. The road as planned is to be about 72 miles long and about 200 feet wide.

Neck Broken; Walks Home.

With his neck broken, and supporting his head with both hands to keep it from falling limp on his shoulder, Elmer Grove, 25 years old, of Pittsburg, Pa., walked home with the assistance of two companions, after he had fallen from a street car. When taken to a hospital later the physicians said the man might live, although the spinal column was broken near the base of the skull. An operation will be performed to remove pieces of broken bone.

Fined as a Smuggler.

Mrs. Charles W. Allen, of Kenosha, Wis., wife of the senior member of the firm of C. N. Allen Sons' Company and a director in the Central Leather Company, appeared in the United States Circuit Court in New York and pleaded guilty to an indictment charging her with having smuggled into the country, when she arrived there last week, on the Lusitania, jewelry and wearing apparel worth about $5,000. Mrs. Allen was fined $100.

ROADS TO WITHDRAW INCREASE IN RATES

Peace at White House Conference Arranged—Government's Suit to Be Dropped.

PENDING BILL IS TO GOVERN

Lines Must Be Governed by Its Provisions in Seeking More Revenue from Freight.

The fight against the commodity rate increases made by the Western trunk line railroads is at an end. The railroads will withdraw the tariffs already enjoined and other tariffs effective after June 1, and no further increases will be filed until the pending railroad bill becomes a law. With this understanding the government will withdraw the suit begun before the federal Circuit Court in Missouri—not, however, until after the new rail bill is signed.

These were the results of a more than three hours' conference at the White House the other afternoon, participated in by President Taft, Attorney General Wickersham, three railroad presidents and another executive official constituting a committee that represented the twenty-four companies defendant in the Missouri injunction suit, and by two members of the interstate commerce committee.

With the President's announcement of withdrawal of the government's suit, per agreement that the railroads withdraw their increased tariffs, Attorney General Wickersham's plan of pushing prosecution of the Western trunk line committee under the Sherman act, with a view to dissolving it as a combination in restraint of trade, goes glimmering. But, it is stated, the pending suit will not be withdrawn until the prospective new railroad bill becomes an accomplished fact, nor unless it be made certain that the provisions giving the interstate commerce commission powers to suspend rates and investigate as to their reasonableness on its own initiative, remain in the measure.

On leaving the White House after 6 o'clock in the evening the railroad officials directed questioners to the President for information as to what had taken place. The statement given out at the White House follows:

E. P. Ripley, president of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company; Walker D. Hines, acting chairman of the executive committee of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company; Frederic A. Delano, president of the Wabash Railroad Company, and S. M. Felton, president of the Chicago Great Western Railroad Company, a committee representing the twenty-four railroad companies defendant in a suit brought by the government in Missouri in which Judge Dyer granted an injunction restraining increases in rates, met the President and the Attorney General to-day, pursuant to a request sent to the President a few days since.

The President stated to these gentlemen at the outset that the purpose of the suit was to prevent the proposed rate increases (which, under the existing law, could not be investigated at all until after they had become effective), so as to preserve the status until the new statute could be passed and the commission should have the power to investigate rate advances as soon as announced and before becoming effective. He stated further that he thought the railroad companies must withdraw the tariffs enjoined and all other tariffs filed by them effective on or after June 1, 1910, and that none of them ought to file any new tariffs involving rate advances until the new law should be passed, assuming that it would be passed at the present session of Congress.

After conference the railroad companies announced that they would adopt the view expressed by the President and thereupon the President stated that if they did so his purpose in bringing the suit would be accomplished, and, such result being accomplished, he saw no occasion for pressing the suit and the same would be withdrawn.

DEDICATE KENTUCKY'S CAPITOL.

New $2,000,000 Structure Is Opened With Much Ceremony.

Kentucky's $2,000,000 capitol was dedicated the other day with exercises that occupied practically the entire day. Special trains from all directions brought thousands of persons to Frankfort, one train bringing more than 1,000 girls from the Louisville high school. The exercises, which were opened early in the morning by a signal gun, included an invocation by Bishop Lewis W. Burton of Lexington and addresses, mainly of historic interest, by Gov. Augustus E. Willson and United States Senator William O. Bradley.

COTTON CROP NEARLY NORMAL.

Estimating Board's Report Says Condition Is Up to Standard.

The first cotton report of the season by the crop reporting board, shows the condition of the growing crop, May 25, was 82 per cent of the normal, as compared with 81.1 per cent on that date last year and 80.9 per cent the average for the last ten years. The area planted with cotton this year is about 33,196,000 acres, or about 102.8 per cent, compared with 32,292,000 acres last year, an increase of about 904,000 acres or 2.8 per cent.

THE JUNE BRIDE.

COSTUME DESIGNED BY THE WEATHER MAN.

SENATE PASSES RAILROAD BILL.

Administration's Measure Is Carried, 50 to 12, at Night Session.

The administration's railroad bill was passed by the Senate of the United States the other night at 10 o'clock by a vote of 50 to 12. The negative votes were cast by Democrats as follows: Bacon, Fletcher, Frazier, Hughes, Money, Newlands, Percy, Purcell, Rayner, Shively, Smith of Maryland and Smith of South Carolina.

After the vote was announced Mr. Beveridge moved the statehood bill be made the unfinished business. Mr. Nelson, chairman of the Public Lands Committee, contended the public land withdrawal bill, an administration conservation measure, should have precedence. This precipitated a conflict, the Democrats lining up with Mr. Beveridge. Finally, with the Beveridge motion pending, the Senate adjourned.

The railroad bill, that now goes to conference, was reported to the Senate Feb. 25. The debate began March 15, when Mr. Cummins commenced his four days' speech against the measure as it then stood. Since then it has been continuously before the Senate for twelve weeks. The original Hepburn law, of which this is amendatory, was passed in the Senate May 18, 1906.

Many speeches were delivered, in the main brief and explanatory of the position taken by Senators. When it became apparent that the final vote would be reached, several Senators who have fought vigorously for amendments asserted that, while the bill was not all they desired, it was a step in the right direction and would receive their support. Such statements were made by insurgent Republicans and Democrats. These speakers were La Follette, Dolliver, Clay, Paynter, Simmons and Gore. Newlands and Bacon spoke at length in opposition.

W. F. Schilling, editor of the Minnesota Dairyman, has filed for the Senate from his district on the Republican ticket.

In the recent Ohio Republican primaries eleven of the twenty-one successful nominees for Congress had declared themselves against the re-election of Speaker Cannon, while nine remained noncommittal, and one, Keifer, is openly for Cannon.

The National Congress of the Socialist party which met in Chicago to revise the platform and program, voted after a long discussion that the party is opposed to the exclusion of any immigrants on account of race or nationality, and demands that this country be kept as a free asylum for persons persecuted in other lands; but that it favors all measures tending to prevent the immigration of contract laborers or strike-breakers. This was the compromise resolution offered by Delegate Hilquit of New York. The policy of the party as to the farmer class was left open, and an enlarged committee was appointed to study the question and report at the national convention two years hence. The convention took a positive position against the commission form of city government.

GOES INTO RECEIVERS' HANDS.

Jones Dry Goods Company of Kansas City Taken Over by Courts.

Receivers for the Jones Dry Goods Company of Kansas City, one of the largest retail general merchandise concerns in the West, were appointed by the federal court to-day. The liabilities are placed at $1,400,000 and the assets at $2,000,000. The receivers said the company was solvent and that its business would be continued without interruption. It is alleged that the company has been spending large sums for realty and for leases that should have been placed in the business. The immediate cause of the receivership is given as poor business resulting from unfavorable spring weather. The principal creditors are in St. Louis, Chicago, Philadelphia, and New York.

"O. HENRY," AUTHOR, IS DEAD.

William Sidney Porter Expires in a New York Hospital.

William Sidney Porter, better known to the public by his pen name, "O. Henry," recognized as one of the leading short story writers of the age, died at the Polyclinic Hospital, in New York, of cirrhosis of the liver. An operation was performed by Dr. Charles Russell Hancock a few days before, but it proved to be useless. Mr. Porter was born in Texas forty-two years ago and began his journalistic career on the Houston Post. Before that he had been cowboy, sheep herder and druggist, and an extensive traveler.

The McKinley traction syndicate, which is headed by Congressman William B. McKinley of Champaign, Ill., has consummated the purchase of the Atchison, Kan., Railway, Light and Power Company properties. The consideration is said to have been between $500,000 and $700,000.

UNITED STATES IS DEFIED.

Nicaragua Threatens to Stop Vessels from Entering Harbor.

"At the first shot fired against the American flag on an American vessel I will level the Bluff." This was the reply made by Commander Harold K. Hines, commanding the American gunboat Dubuque, to a threat made by General Rivas, of the Madriz force holding Bluefields Bluff, Nicaragua, to stop by force any vessels of whatever nationality entering the harbor.

General Rivas has practically defied the United States, declaring that he will disregard the proclamation issued from Washington on May 31 to the effect that the United States government denies the right of either faction to seize American owned vessels or property without consent of and recompense to the owners. He has warned Commander Hines that he will prevent by force, regardless of flag, any further vessels from entering the harbor. In response to this, the American commander immediately sent to him the above message, which would mean the annihilation of the handful of Madriz troops now remaining in this neighborhood.

A critical situation has thus arisen which may involve the United States, but the American officers on the spot are of the opinion that General Rivas will not attempt to make good his threat in an effort to collect customs duties. There are constant rumors of threats against the life of Thomas P. Moffat, the American consul, and the whole situation at Bluefields, instead of quieting, has assumed a more serious aspect.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

The annual outing of the North Central Minnesota Editorial Association will be held at Glengarry Springs, on Leech Lake, near Walker.

The oldest educational institution in existence is El Ashar University at Cairo, Egypt. It was founded in 988, and had 8,510 students last year.

Simplification of spelling is a plain matter of business expediency, according to Prof. Homer H. Seerley, president of the Iowa State Teachers' Association.

Twenty-five colleges have been invited by the games committee of the Missouri Valley conferences to participate in the annual meet to be held at Des Moines.

For the second time in two years the debaters of St. Thomas College have defeated the representatives of the Forum Literary Society of the University of Minnesota.

Fifty students of the University of Minnesota have been dropped from the rolls of the colleges of engineering and science, literature and arts, for failure to maintain the required standard of scholarship.

Prof. R. R. Cochrane, of the chair of mathematics of the Manitoba University, died recently at the age of 60 years. He was a brother of the late George Cochrane, president of Los Angeles University.

Dr. John C. Parish, of the State historical department of Iowa and son of the late Prof. L. W. Parish of Cedar Falls, has accepted a position as professor of American history and political science in Beloit College.

The annual meeting of the Tri-County Educational Association was held in Grafton, N. D. Resolutions were adopted implering the State legislative assembly to appropriate money for the benefit of rural schools, while medical inspection of school children was urged.

The Week in Congress

A number of important amendments to the railroad bill were adopted by the Senate Thursday. Among these was one by Senator Overman of North Carolina prohibiting Federal courts from granting interlocutory injunctions to suspend State laws, except upon an order of three judges, one of whom should be a member of the Supreme Court or a Circuit Judge. The provision including telegraph companies within the scope of the interstate commerce law was modified so as to prohibit the granting of telegraph franks and permitting special rates on press dispatches. The time when the bill shall take effect was extended to sixty days after its passage. In the House an amendment was adopted to the sundry civil bill, proposed by Mr. Hughes of New Jersey, and providing that the appropriation for the enforcement of the Sherman anti-trust law should not be used in the prosecution of labor organizations.

The railroad bill passed the Senate at 9:55 o'clock Friday night by a vote of 50 to 12. Senators Chamberlin, Clay, Gore, Poynter, Simmons and Stone are theonly Democrats who voted for the bill. An appropriation of $30,000 was made by the House to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make an investigation of methods of making paper from various plants and woods. This provision was made in an amendment to the sundry civil bill, which was under consideration in the House during the entire session.

The Senate was not in session Saturday. The sundry civil bill, carrying appropriations of over $110,000,000, was passed by the House. The railroad bill was delivered to the House by the Senate, but in order to permit members to familiarize themselves with that measure it was permitted to lie upon the table until Monday.

The House held a memorial service for the late Representative Lovering of Massachusetts, Sunday.

The Senate Monday voted to take up for consideration the conservation bill authorizing the President, at his discretion, to withdraw from entry and settlement the public lands, thus sidetracking the bill admitting New Mexico and Arizona to Statehood. Senator Hughes and other Democrats showed an inclination to charge bad faith on the part of the Republicans, because, as they said, there had been a tacit understanding to consider the question of Statehood immediately after action upon the railroad bill. A number of Republican Senators gave assurance that the Statehood bill should be given first place on the calendar after the disposal of the conservation bill, but the Democrats were not satisfied with these statements. Senator Nelson sharply criticised the conservation policy, especially as applied to Alaska, which was considered significant because of his position at the head of the Ballinger-Pinchot investigating committee. The consideration of bills, chiefly of local interest, by unanimous consent, occupied the entire session of the House. Among the many measures passed were bills authorizing the appointment of a commission to investigate the matter of employers' liability and workmen's compensation, and also admitting as second-class mail matter periodical publications of benevolent and fraternal societies, institutions of learning, trades unions and professional, literary, historical and scientific societies.

In the Senate Tuesday five hours was occupied with criticisms of the administration of the public land laws of the United States in connection with the consideration of the public land withdrawal bill. Set speeches were made against the bill by Senators Clark, of Wyoming, and Heyburn, of Idaho. The railroad bill was sent to conference and consideration of the postal savings bank bill was begun in the House by Democrats and "insurgents" in the House, under the leadership of Representative Lenroot, of Wisconsin, to agree to the Senate amendments to the railroad bill and avoid a conference. Mr. Lenroot's motion was defeated, 156 to 162, twenty-one insurgents voting with the Democrats for the motion, while six Democrats voted with the regular Republicans against it. The postal savings bank bill was taken up by the House after the adoption of a rule limiting debate to eight hours and requiring a vote on the measure without amendment.

NEWS OF MINOR NOTE.

Jerome D. Greene, secretary of the Harvard College Corporation, resigned his position to accept the appointment of business manager of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research in New York City.

The twenty-seventh national conference of charities and correction closed at St. Louis with a general session on lawbreakers.

The Massachusetts Legislature took steps to investigate the threatened milk famine in Boston, due to the farmers' refusal to sell milk at summer prices.

The national conference of public school music supervisors held a four-day session at Cincinnati. These officers were elected: President, E. B. Birge, Indianapolis; Vice President, Miss Stella Root, Peoria; Secretary, Miss Clyde Foster, Ypsilanti, Mich.

MRS. FENTON

BY

W. E. NORRIS

THIS is a strikingly charming story of simple title and told in a simple and yet graphic manner. Its progress is of that intensely interesting character that holds the attention to the last and affords a natural picture of every-day life.

"Mrs. Fenton" is a romance replete with incident of a pleasing nature, while the plot is unique and fascinating. The peculiar complication which is the most startling feature of the story is entirely original, and a double indentity plot is carried through the chapters with great skill and masterly literary effect.

This story is from the pen of W. E. Norris, one of the foremost and most popular writers of fiction. The style of this author is always pleasing and particularly so in this sterling romance, which is pervaded with all the elements of love, money and rivalry that go to make a first-class story.

There will be no sentiment of interest lacking or time wasted with the readers of this serial. There are stories that entertain and leave a pleasing impress on the mind. This is one of them.

CHAPTER I.

In the gloomy, spacious bedroom of a gloomy old house at Oxford an old man lay dying. That morning the doctor had whispered to the housekeeper that it was now only a question of days; nor was he himself ignorant of his condition, for at the very beginning of his short, sharp illness he had observed that he would not get over it. Yet any one, looking at his hard, stern, handsome face, might have found it difficult to believe that he was really near his end. Not by any means the typical British countenance, but rather one of a kind which is more commonly seen north than south of the Tweed. The high, narrow forehead, the bushy white eyebrows, the thin lips, the long, square chin—all these made up a whole which, if not attractive, was at least free from any element of weakness. His eyes—those terrible gray eyes with which, all his life long, he had been wont to stare down those who came into contact with him—were closed now; but one could guess what they must be like, and perhaps it was not very strange that the possessor of such a face should, at this hour of extremity, be utterly alone, save for the old housekeeper who was sitting by his bedside, and who glanced furtively at him from time to time.

In fact, the Dean of St. Cyprian's, though a personage in the University and one whose name was tolerably well known outside University circles, by reason of his great reputation for scholarship and on account of certain learned works which he had published, was probably as friendless and lonely a man as could have been found in all England. He had quarreled with his only brother; years ago he had quarreled mortally and finally with his own child, who had run away from his house to marry her music-master; he had quarreled with every dignitary in Oxford, except with the Master of All Saints; and he would certainly have quarreled with him, too, had it not been a thing beyond the power of human achievement to quarrel with dear old Dr. Drysdale. And so now he lay grimly and silently waiting for death, with only his housekeeper to bear him company.

It was evening—a bitter, stormy March evening—and he had not addressed a word to her since midday, merely signing to her every now and again to give him the beef-tea which the doctor had ordered. The poor woman had sat up with him for two nights, and was wondering whether any very awful consequences would ensue if she were to indulge in forty winks, when a cautious tap summoned her to the door. There was a brief whispered consultation, and she returned to the bedside.

"I beg your pardon, sir," said she, "Mr. Breffit have arrived."

The Dean opened his eyes. "Let him come in, then," he answered, in a deep, husky voice.

Mr. Breffit, the lawyer, came in. "Sorry to find you so poorly, Mr. Dean," he began, in a cheerful voice; but the old man stared at him, and the remarks which he had been about to make upon the inclemency of the weather remained unuttered.

Mr. Breffit had no very lengthy task to perform. Lawyers, as a rule, do not much relish drawing up the concise, intelligible testaments which are more in favor nowadays than they used to be; but what are you to do when you have to deal with an opinionated and peremptory client, who knows his own mind and will tolerate no superfluous verbiage? In less than a quarter of an hour the dying man had revoked all previous wills made by him (there had been a good many such), and had disposed of his realty and personalty after a fashion which seemed likely to be final.

When the butler and the footman had been summoned to witness their master's signature, and when Mr. Breffit was once more left alone with his client, he lingered, as if he had some observation to make.

"Well," said the Dean, sharply, "what is it? You think I have acted unfairly, perhaps?"

"Oh, no," answered the lawyer; "no, I don't know that anybody could call it exactly unfair—and, after all, it will come to the same thing, most likely. It isn't quite—quite what was expected, of course."

"I am not answerable for anybody's expectations," said the old man, "nor can I pretend to sympathize with anybody's disappointment. I may say that my own expectations have been strictly reasonable; yet they have not been fulfilled. However, I am not concerned to defend myself. If I were, I might, with some show of plausibility, claim to have done an act of tardy justice."

The lawyer looked down and smiled slightly, but made no rejoinder.

"Good-by, Mr. Brffffit,," said the Dean, presently; "perhaps you will be so good as to touch the bell as you pass. Thank you."

The lawyer accepted his dismissal without a word, beyond a muttered "Good-by, Mr. Dean."

On the staircase Mr. Breffit recovered himself and laughed. "Tardy justice, indeed! Well, if it's justice, it's certainly tardy; but, taking everything into consideration, it doesn't altogether realize my idea of justice. The chances are, however, that the woman died long ago. We should have heard of her now if she had been alive, you may depend upon it." Then he betook himself to the oak-paneled dining-room and had a very good dinner before he returned to London.

CHAPTER II.

While the lawyer was fortifying himself against cold and fatigue, a visitor called to inquire, and, strange to say, this visitor was presently shown up into the Dean's bedroom. He was a tall, lean old man, with a stooping figure, a bald head, and a kindly, wrinkled face.

"Well, Drysdale," said the Dean, as he entered, "so you have come to see the last of me."

The Master of All Saints took his old friend's hand and looked down at him sadly. "I hope not, Musgrave," said he; "I think not. You have not to me at all the appearance of—of being in danger."

"You would argue with a stone wall, Drysdale," returned the other. "I have no strength left for controversy, but in twenty-four hours or so you will have to admit yourself in the wrong. Take a chair, Drysdale; you are the last man whom I shall talk to in this world, and I don't suppose that I shall be able to talk to you very long." After a pause of a few seconds he resumed: "Do you remember my daughter Laura?"

"To be sure I do. Oh, yes, I remember her very well, poor child! I'm glad you remember her, too, Musgrave, and I only wish she could be with you now."

"I cannot say that I share your wish to have Laura with me at the present moment," said Musgrave. "Considering that she has allowed twelve years to elapse without troubling herself to communicate with me or to express one word of regret for the disgrace which she has brought upon me and upon herself, I am unable to feel that a meeting with her would be agreeable or desirable. However, I have just made a will in her favor, under which she will inherit all that I possess, with the exception of a sum of £10,000, which I have thought it right to bequeath to my nephew Frederick."

"You don't say so!" exclaimed Dr. Drysdale. "So Fred will only get £10,000; dear me! But have you—excuse my asking the question—any knowledge of your daughter's whereabouts?"

"Not the slightest. As I tell you, she has never communicated with me, directly or indirectly, since the day when she fled from my house with her blackguard of a music-master. In the letter which she left for me then she informed me that she proposed to sail for New Zealand. I do not know whether she carried out her intention or not; I do not know whether she is living or dead. If the latter, my property will go to the next of kin. I could think of no other satisfactory manner of disposing of it," added the Dean, a little regretfully.

"Ah!" said his friend, meditatively. And then: "Won't you have Fred telegraphed for, Musgrave?"

"Certainly not. I have no wish to see him, nor can I imagine that he has any wish to see me. He has thought fit to disobey and defy me, and he has deliberately refused to take up any career worthy of a gentleman."

"Well—hardly that, has he, Musgrave? He has been called to the bar, has he not?"

"Because I insisted upon it. I have led him to the water, but he has given me to understand that I cannot make him drink. Instead of practicing or qualifying himself for a legal appointment he is pleased to spend his time in writing plays. Plays!"

"Men have achieved distinction in that way before now," observed the Master of All Saints, mildly.

"Have they, indeed? I was not aware of it."

"Well, there was Shakespeare, you know."

"Oh, if you are driven to resort to a reductio ad absurdum, there is an end of argument, of course. But indeed, I have more than done my duty to my nephew. In spite of his disobedience I have left him £10,000, added to which there is a strong probability of his coming into my entire fortune."

It seemed a grievous thing that poor Musgrave should pass away without so much as a word of farewell to the nephew whom he had adopted and whom for some time past he had treated as his heir. True, there had of late been a coolness between them, amounting almost to a breach, and it appeared that Fred was to be punished by inheriting £10,000 instead of a considerable fortune; still it was undoubtedly the young man's duty to be with his uncle at the last, and he ought to be summoned.

His uncle, however, did not seem to think so.

The Dean of St. Cyprian's had always been broad, not to say unorthodox, in his theological views. Many a bitter and heated argument had he had with other ecclesiastical dignitaries upon questions of dogma, but never a one with the Master of All Saints, whose habit it was to listen and shake his head, but to return no answer when attempts were made to draw him into such discussions. Presently he lowered himself stiffly on to his knees by the bedside and said an audible prayer for the dying man. It was a great liberty to take; it was just the sort of thing that Musgrave would not like at all; only, for all his mildness and meekness, he was not and never had been in the least afraid of Musgrave, which peculiarity of his was possibly one of the reasons why they had remained such good friends.

When he rose the old Dean smiled at him and held out his hand. "Good-by, Drysdale," said he; "thank you for coming."

"I will come again to-morrow," said the other.

"Ah—to-morrow! I am not sure that you will find me here to-morrow. Still, if you are passing this way and care to look in, do so."

The worthy Dr. Drysdale departed, and, instead of making straight for home, went to the nearest postoffice, whence he dispatched, upon his own responsibility, a telegram to Mr. Frederick Musgrave in London.

He might have spared himself the trouble; for, as it chanced, Mr. Frederick Musgrave was dining out when the telegram reached his rooms, nor did he receive it until past midnight, before which hour the Dean of St. Cyprian's was dead.

(To be continued.)

Keelhauling.

Very few persons know what keelhauling is, but before the advent of steam it was a recognized form of punishment for offending sailors and more to be dreaded than even the cat o' nine tails.

A line was passed beneath the ship from port to starboard side, leaving about a foot of slack under the keel. The unfortunate tar's feet were securely tied together and his arms lashed behind his back. In this helpless condition he was attached to the end of the line and dropped overboard in the smothering seas to be hauled along under the ship, bumping and scraping against the bottom in the process until he was yanked up on the opposite side. The punishment was repeated until the victim became unconscious from fright or bruises, and sometimes by a refinement of cruelty he was allowed to remain under the ship for a full minute until he was all but drowned. The ship never was stopped while a sailor was being keelhauled, and if sometimes the strain on the line was too great and it parted, leaving him to go down bound and helpless to an ocean grave, nobody was held responsible for his death, but it was reported in the log as an "act of Providence."

Keelhauling was great sport for the captain and mates, but the mariner who once survived the experience took good care never to do anything to merit such a terrible punishment again.—New York Press.

Poison of the Centiped.

The centiped is popularly supposed to carry a sting on each foot, but I have several times handled one after its head was removed without the claws producing any result. It is the first pair of claws only that are venomous, being hollow and provided with poison bags like a snake's fang. The largest I ever saw was eleven inches in length, a grewsome creature. A bite from one of this size would most likely have been fatal to a man in weak health. The tarantula, though his powers of offense are nothing like those of the scorpion or centiped, is, however, a more unpopular character than either. The horror of these large spiders entertained by many people is curious and unaccountable. I have seen Australian bushmen, who in every-day life scarcely seemed to understand danger, turn white as a sheet at the sight of a small "triantelope," as they called it.—Chambers' Journal.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Pink eye has developed among the horses near Somerville, a few miles north of Evansville. Several cases have been reported and some horses have died from the disease.

Mr. and Mrs. James Heck, six miles west of Shelbyville, have a chicken with three legs. One leg is larger than the other two, and hangs between the smaller legs. There are five toes on the extra leg.

While Henderson Pritchett, age seventy-five, was taking a nap at his home in Owensville, a pocketbook containing $50 in money and bank checks to the amount of $2,000 was stolen from the inside pocket of his vest. The identity of the thief is unknown.

A year ago Wilbur Hipes, a farmer, living one mile south of Fairmount, had the misfortune to injure his left eye by a wire whip cracker, which caused him to lose the sight of that eye. While chopping wood recently, a chip struck him in the other eye, bursting the eyeball and destroping all hope of his ever seeing again.

Rather than undergo an operation, necessary to prolong her life, Mrs. Frank Scheffler, of East Chicago, overpowered her nurses and hurled herself through the skylight on the fourth floor of a hospital. She died a few hours afterward. The woman's husband left her bedside a few minutes before she jumped to her death.

John T. West, ex-trustee of Prairie township, Tipton county, has a Masonic relic which he values highly. It is a demit, issued to his stepfather, John Stewart, in Scotland, bearing the signature of Albert, consort of Queen Victoria, and dated back half a century. It was never deposited in any lodge, although the holder was vouched for at Tipton, Sharpsville and elsewhere many times.

Under the direction of the Allen County Sportsmen's league, the lakes and rivers of Allen county were stocked with more than ten thousand small-mouthed bass received from the government hatchery at Hot Springs, Ark. The committee which distributed the fish were composed of Henry Hirbrecht, Charles A. Centlivre, William Ortlieb, Peter Henkenius, Joseph Berger, George Smith, James Dormer and William Lawson, all enthusiastic anglers of Fort Wayne.

A remarkable instance of family longevity is disclosed by the arrival of George Zehender, age eighty-six, who has just come to Allen county on a visit to his brother, John Zehender, of Marysville, who is ninety, and with another brother, James Zehender, of Avilla, who is eighty. Still another brother, Jacob Zehender, living in California, is seventy-eight. The aged visitor, who formerly resided in Allen County, is enjoying rugged health, and made the trip alone from California to Fort Wayne.

Three human skeletons, one unusually large, another smaller and still another that is evidently the remains of a child, were dug up by workmen excavating in the farm of Lon Fuson, three miles south of Muncie, last week. The workmen, believing the skeletons were those of Indians, have been endeavoring to find the relics that usually are uncovered when Indian graves are opened, but have not found any of these, and so there is some mystery concerning the find. It is thought probable that the bones are those of a man, his wife and child. The graves were ten feet deep.

Much interest is being taken in Pierceton in the hemp industry, and as a result about 100 acres of hemp will be raised. J. L. Andreas, after making a thorough investigation, has become convinced that the crop is a profitable one, and he is having sixty-five acres planted on his farm east of Pierceton. Samuel Ramsey and G. M. Humble are also experimenting with the crop. The fiber will be handled by a Chicago company. A machine will be shipped to Pierceton and the company will take part of the fiber for the use of the machines and for breaking. An average crop is said to be worth from $30 to $50 to the acre.

Health officers, the police and residents of Seymour, are alarmed for fear there is to be a prevalence of hydrophobia in that city. Eddie Hooper, the seven-year-old son of Mrs. George Canner, was bitten by a dog whose head was sent to the State Board of Health for examination, and which was reported to be affected with rabies. Another dog attacked George Meyer, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Meyer recently, and it is believed that this animal was also suffering from hydrophobia. The Hooper boy was taken to Indianapolis for treatment. The mayor has issued an order that all stray dogs shall be shot and that all owners shall provide muzzles for their dogs. The two mad dogs bit several other animals in the city and it is feared that serious trouble may result.

Trying to imitate his father in sliding down the pole at the engine house, the three-year-old son of Captain Frank Cecil, of Evansville, fell on his head after climbing twenty feet and sustained probably fatal injuries.

At the risk of his own life, Niles Root, of Muncie, when he saw his barn burning, rushed into the flames to save his horse, and succeeded, although he himself was seriously burned. His hat was burned from his head. The animal was not injured.

Edward G. Bauman, superintendent of the schools at Mt. Vernon, has been elected superintendent of the public schools at Quincy, Ill.

While attempting to shoot a young rabbit near Vincennes, Charles Dolligan accidentally shot his brother Albert in the neck. Albert may die.

Kenneth Orr, aged eleven, was bitten by a bulldog in Greenfield. The dog belonged to Charles Duncan and was being led by a boy when it caught the Orr lad's leg, making a serious wound.

Dr. E. M. Corbin, city health officer, estimates that there are two hundred cases of measles in Sullivan at this time, which is a larger number of cases than ever before. No deaths have resulted.

Elihu Mills, of Cambridge City, who was a victim of a runaway accident a week ago, suffered the loss of a new buggy a few days ago when the same horse ran away. Mr. Mills was not in the buggy when the second accident occurred.

Raymond, the three-year-old son of Bode Davis, of near Alquina, ate three strychnine tablets and died an hour afterward. The tablets were in a drawer of the sewing machine and the child got them secretly, thinking they were candy.

Heavily armed, a large party of men, with dogs, searched the woods around Evansville in an attempt to find the wild animal that has been killing stock in that vicinity. The animal is supposed to be a panther or tiger escaped from some circus.

A large dog has been seen killing a number of sheep belonging to farmers living northwest of Silver Lake. In all twenty sheep, valued at $150, have been killed. Residents of that locality are watching for the animal that has been causing the trouble and hope that they can kill it.

Hiram Yount, aged sixty-three, a farmer of Green township, died of injuries suffered when his horse became frightened at a motorcycle and ran away, throwing him out of his buggy. A widow, five daughters and one son survive him. Three children are residents of Indianapolis.

Surgeons who operated on Henry Coers, of Blue Ridge, for appendicitis, found a piece of granite in his appendix. The chip is supposed to have come off a graniteware drinking cup or cooking utensil, and it was swallowed while Coers was drinking or eating. The operation was performed by Dr. George J. Cook, of Indianapolis, assisted by Dr. Lewis, of Blue Ridge.

An agreement to start the actual work of track elevation in Fort Wayne this week was reached at the city hall in that city in a conference with the board of public works, at which the Wabash railroad was represented by Superintendent J. C. Sullivan and engineer W. S. Danes, and the Pennsylvania company by Engineer Arthur S. Bland. Officials of each of the railroads stated that they were prepared to begin the work of grade separation without delay and to rush it to completion.

Paul Angle, age six, son of William Angle, did a surprising stunt at Pierceton when he stopped a runaway horse. The little boy was walking along the street when a horse, frightened at an automobile, jerked loose from a post and started to run. The boy ran into the street and grabbed the dangling halter, holding to the running animal until others could come up and stop it. The feat was all the more interesting from the fact that a baby was sitting in the buggy to which the horse was hitched. The child was unhurt.

While a score of persons were standing near by, an eighteen-months-old infant, seated in its cab, at the Beech Grove cemetery, in Muncie, was almost drowned, when the baby buggy rushed down an incline that leads to a small artificial lake and plunged, with the child, into seven feet of water. Dr. Xene Y. Smith, riding a horse near by, saw the accident, and hastily dismounting, jumped into the water and fished the child out, after it had gone to the bottom. After the child's lungs had been emptied of water it seemed little the worse for its experience and was taken home by the mother, who failed to give her name.

The advent of boy triplets at the Walter Campbell home in Milroy, has caused no little interest to be taken in the youngsters by residents of Rush and Decatur counties. The women of Milroy held a sewing shower immediately after the arrival of the baby boys and now individuals are trying to induce the parents to give them certain names by offering prizes. Abel Ewing, of Greensburg, is trying to have them named after himself and two dead brothers, Puttman and Joshua. A newspaper is offering a three years' subscription to have them named Ray, Fay and Clay. These are only a few of the many names suggested.

R. E. Lucas, a student at the Danville normal school, attempted to race with a limited traction car from Danville to Indianapolis on a motorcycle. His wheel skidded and he was thrown, his skull being fractured.

Samson David, ex-sheriff of Brown county, recently received a check from an ex-clerk of Jackson county for $3.40, which was paid into the clerk's office of that county in 1870. The letter explained that the matter had been overlooked.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The Weekly Review of Chicago Trade, published by R. G. Dun & Co., says:

"Despite the lowest weekly aggregate of payments through the banks, the unsuccessful efforts to settle coal mining troubles and other developments disturbing sentiment, the business position is easier by declining speculation in securities and grain, a better tone in money, improving weather and decreasing cost of foodstuffs. The failure record also makes a good comparative exhibit, and there is now a more adequate reduction of merchandise stocks in the leading retail lines here and at the interior.

"Evidences of sustained production in the leading industries in this district undergo no diminution, and the sustained forwardings of factory outputs and commodities continue swelling gains in gross earnings of the Chicago steam roads. There is also extended passenger travel both east and west bound. Visiting buyers attend the wholesale merchandise markets more numerously, and the buying is wider in fall and winter lines of dry goods, footwear, clothing and household needs, but orders for immediate shipment have not expanded as expected. It is noted, however, that many buyers are conservative and prefer to await clearer views of agricultural prospects and probable tendencies of prices.

"Bank clearings, $244,847,555, are 2.9 per cent under those of corresponding week last year, and compare with $210,326,721 in 1908.

"Failures reported in the Chicago district numbered fourteen, against twenty-seven last week, twenty-five in 1909 and twenty-two in 1908. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number six, against five last week, six in 1909 and five in 1908."

NEW YORK.

Trade advices are irregular, varying somewhat with the sections or lines reporting, but with quietness the prevailing feature. In the northern half of the country unseasonably cool weather has been a bar to expansion in retail trade, which at many cities is classed as disappointing. At these centers re-order business is light, and jobbers' operations are consequently restricted. Probably the best reports as to trade come from the Northwest and the Pacific coast.

Business failures for the week ending with June 2 in the United States were 160, against 200 last week, 191 in the like week of 1909, 225 in 1908, 155 in 1907 and 162 in 1906.

Business failures in Canada for the week number eighteen, which compares with fifteen for last week and nineteen in the like week of 1909.

The next convention to be held at Waterloo.

Resolutions.

Resolved, That this convention has been a source of encouragement and inspiration for more efficient effort and service in Sunday school work, and that we, as messengers in the King's service, will strive to apply the lessons learned in more practical ways in the evangelization of all who may come under our influence.

Resovled, That we are in favor of progressive effort in the temperance cause, pledging ourselves to support and maintain the laws on the statute books, including the County Option Law, until we can secure something better.

Resolved, That we appreciate the service of song in this convention and extend our thanks to Prof. Sturgis for his efficient and inspiring efforts as the singing evangelist of this convention.

Resolved, That we extend our appreciation and thanks to President L. W. Treesh, for his courteous and prompt service as presiding officer and also to all the speakers who have taken part in the subjects assigned.

Resolved, That we appreciate the hearty welcome extended to the delegates by the good people of Butler and thank them heartily for the Christian fellowship, for the beautiful flowers provided in the decorations, for the use of the M. E. church for the sessions of this convention and for the systematic method of making assignments, whereby the delegates were placed in touch with their hosts without confusion.

F. W. WILLIS,
MRS. M. A. EHLERS,
L. H. HIGLEY,

At this time Sister Baldwin explained the benefits of the state paper, "The Awakener," also taking up the subject of the "Graded Lessons." Mrs. Jones, of Garrett, in a few brief remarks requested that the convention give Bro. Treesh, Bro. Bishop and Bro. Hull a rousing vote of thanks for their faithful labor in DeKalb county Sunday school work, which was duly appreciated by them.

Rev. Brandon took charge of the general symposium of "What Have I Received From This Convention?" "You," song by the convention, twenty-seven responding, which proved how the workers were impressed with this, our greatest convention DeKalb county ever held. After which Sister G. S. Fullner, state delegate, gave a report of our state convention, which was very instructive to her hearers. The main thought was that the state meeting being on the same lines as DeKalb county meeting only on a larger scale. Installation services were conducted by Mrs. Baldwin, pleading for the Sunday school workers to stand by their choice of leaders. Song and benediction by Mrs. Jones.

A GREAT DAY FOR THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Last Sunday was the annual Sunday School Rally and open air services for the Christian church. The day was an ideal one and a large crowd gathered early and brought their baskets well filled. On account of the cool weather on Saturday it was feared the weather would not permit services in the grove, so no arrangements were made and the services both morning and afternoon were held in the house, but dinner was served in the grove by the church and a good social time was enjoyed by everybody. The meeting was a great success in every way.

DODDER IN RELATION TO FARM CROPS—III

What Is to Be Done to Avoid This Pest?

It is of the utmost importance that farmers and seed dealers should familiarize themselves with the dodder, otherwise the matter may be talked and written about endlessly and no headway will be made in exterminating the plant from the fields, or in guarding against the use of seed containing dodder. Strictly avoid dodder-infected seed. A purchaser of seed is apt at any time to buy seed containing dodder, unless he has thoroughly examined the seed or has had it examined for him. The cheaper and lower grades of seed, with which some farmers unfortunately are satisfied, are very likely to contain dodder and many other kinds of weed seeds, as well as a large percentage of inert matter and dead seed. Farmers and dealers should become accustomed to the use of a magnifying glass, know common weed seed impurities and make tests for themselves. Thus, if the farmer buys on sample, as he should, examines his samples himself, and finds suitable seed, he can without delay purchase his supply from the same bulk lot from which the good sample came. Insist on samples being made up of seed from different parts of sacks or bin; otherwise samples will not be representative of the bulk lots. Though every precaution may have been taken to obtain dodder-free seed, yet a few seeds may have escaped notice and may therefore be present. Thus the clover or alfalfa will be "spotted" with dodder. Root up everything on the "spots" and burn without moving, or remove and burn if there is no danger of scattering seed. Get far enough out from the borders of the "spots" to make sure that all the dodder is destroyed. Small pieces of plants left continue to grow. Should a field have become generally infested, it is advisable to plow up the clover field before dodder seed is formed. Let the succeeding crop be a cultivated, non-egummous one. Work out of the ground any dodder seed that may be there, by encouraging them to sprout, and killing the seedlings by cultivation. Should seed have matured before the crop can be plowed under, burn the crop over, then plow and follow with a cultivated crop. Instead of either plowing or burning, shallow cultivation, followed by a cultivated crop kept thoroughly clean, may be resorted to. Here the plan is to cause the seeds to germinate and to destroy the seedlings. Any use desired may be made of the stand of clover on the ground, providing it is cut for hay, pastured or plowed under before the seed is formed. Stubble in the infested fieldmust be plowed under without delay. It should be distinctly understood that dodder is the worst plant enemy that alfalfa has, and that every effort should be made to guard against dodder infestation; in fact weeds of any description in alfalfa fields are decidedly detrimental to the production of the best crops.

STEWARD SAWMILL BURNS.

The L. W. Steward sawmill west of town burned to the ground early last Wednesday evening, with a loss amounting to about $6,000. No insurance was carried on the mill. Up until last December Mr. Steward had carried insurance and in the rush of business he had neglected to renew at the time. The mill contained about $700 worth of lumber belonging to Mr. Steward. No one lost anything as the help was successful in moving all the lumber from near the mill. The origin of the fire is unknown but it is thought that it started in the fine dust near the boiler, as is bound to collect in such places. Samuel Markel was the first to discover the fire, as he was passing on his way home. An alarm was soon given but the fire had already enveloped the entire lower floor, making it impossible to get near the large tank of water stored in the mill for such purposes. The loss is a large one and Mr. Steward will not rebuild it as timber is so scarce that it will not justify. The flames were seen for miles and people came from far and near to witness the disaster.

GNAT CAUSES PELLAGRA.

Committee on Disease in Europe Says Corn Is Not to Blame.

London, May 14.—Dr. Sambon, a member of the Field committee which has been investigating the disease pellagra, telegraphs from Rome that the committee has definitely proved that maize or Indian corn is not the cause of pellagra.

The committee finds that the parasitic conveyor of the disease is the "simulium repans," a species of biting gnat.

Let the Lights Go Out.

It is a lonely little fishing bay in a corner of the Cornish coast, but it boasts a lighthouse on its queer old quay and also a story concerning it and its ancient keeper. The light was noted to be a little erratic, and so one day to the ancient keeper thereof came an officer of the coast guard. "What is this I hear?" he demanded. "Is it true that your light is never alight after midnight?" "That's right nuff," assented the ancient one equably. "'Tis a fack and well known that all the boats be in and safe afore 12 midnight, so I be savin' the ile!" And he looked smiling for approbation.—St. James Gazette.

Why G. W. Was No Sailor.

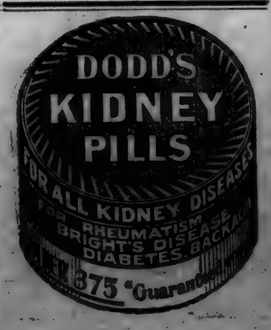
A Baltimore school teacher got disgusted with the ignorance displayed by one of her boys in relation to the recorded acts of the Father of His Country, and she grew sarcastic.

"I wonder," she began, "if you could tell me whether George Washington was a sailor or a soldier."

The boy grinned. "He was a soldier, all right," he said.

"How do you know?" the teacher asked.

"Because I saw the picture of him crossing the Delaware. Any sailor would know enough not to stand up in a boat."



A Fatal Temptation

CHAPTER XI.—(Continued.)

"Tell me the worst I have to expect," he said, moodily.

"I will," rejoined Marion, calmly. "If you make me Mrs. Carr, all will be well; and, from the moment you give me your promise to marry me, I will never make any allusion to your past. If you should be so ill-advised as to refuse my request, I shall at once make your secret known. I shall first tell my father——"

"He would take no notice of it; it is so long ago," cried Laurence.

"All the same, it would be made public, and it is the publicity which would be your ruin. I should bring an action for breach of promise of marriage against you—not that you have ever promised me marriage; but it would be the only way in which I could bring out the story."

"And you would do this?" he said, looking earnestly at her.

"You have said a great deal about the honor of the Carrs," she continued. "It would be a nice thing, would it not, for the head of the house to be proved a thief? Do you think, if ever that story were known, you would be invited into any respectable house? Where would be your bright prospects then, Laurence, where your future? of what use your fortune, when it was known that you stole two hundred and fifty dollars from the father, and borrowed it from the daughter to repay?"

"Do you know, Marion, that, if you force me into this marriage, I shall positively hate you?"

"I am willing to run the risk of that," she answered.

"You made your conditions," he said; "listen to mine. You force me into a marriage I hate; but I swear, except in name, you shall be no wife of mine. The same roof may cover us, for the wretched farce of keeping up appearances must be gone through, but the greatest stranger in the land will be more to me than you shall ever be. A wife you will be, but not beloved and esteemed, cherished, and cared for; on the contrary, you will be loathed, despised, and hated. Such a prospect can have but little charm, even for you."

"I shall be mistress of Carrswell," she answered, still serenely. "Besides, you will forget all that nonsense in time."

"From the time I marry you until the hour in which either you or I die, I shall hate and detest you," he went on, hotly. "You have blighted and ruined my life. No word shall ever pass my lips to you, except those I am compelled to speak. Will you—you who ought to have a woman's pride and a woman's spirit—will you consent to such a marriage as this?"

"Yes," she replied. "I am content; and as for you—why, you will see things differently after a time."

"If this miserable farce is to go on," he said, "I shall go abroad until the marriage takes place. On my return I will meet you in the city, where the ceremony shall be performed in the most private manner."

"I shall be quite satisfied," Marion answered, cheerfully.

CHAPTER XII.

Once more Mr. and Mrs. d'Este were at Swanscourt. The first news they heard after their arrival was that Laurence Carr had gone away.

The next morning a letter came for Magdalen, and she knew the handwriting the moment her eyes fell upon it. It was from Laurence, written and posted the day before he left. She opened and read it, the death-knell of all her sweet hopes and love.

"If I could see you," it began—"if I could tell you all that is in my heart, I should be happier and less desperate. As I write you, my darling, your beautiful face seems to be before me. How shall I say good-by? I have loved you with a great and everlasting love; I shall love you until I die, my last thoughts will be of you. Under Heaven there lives no man more wretched than I. There is a secret in my past life, and that secret lies in a woman's hands; to keep it from the world, I am compelled to marry her. I do not love her; I love you with my whole heart. I make no excuse for myself. I must either do what I am doing, or be the first to bring disgrace on an old and honored name.

"Darling, adieu! I am leaving because I am unworthy to see you or speak to you again."

When she laid that letter down Magdalen d'Este knew that her own happiness was wrecked also.

If her father and mother ever guessed the unhappy secret of their beloved child, they never alluded to it. They loved her, if possible, better than before, cherished her more tenderly, but they never spoke of Laurence.

In the following spring a strange marriage took place. The bridegroom was a fine, handsome, fair-haired man, whose face was white, haggard, and marked with deep lines, whose eyes were filled with despair. He did not look at the girl he married when he put the ring on her finger; he shuddered as his hand touched hers. The bride was young and beautiful; but she did not receive the least attention from the bridegroom. There were no bridemaids, and the only witnesses of that sunless, joyless wedding were the bride's father and the old pew-opener. There were no carriages, no congratulations; never was wedding so dismal.

When the ceremony was over, the bride's father bid the young pair adieu. He was puzzled and perplexed; but as neither Laurence nor his wife chose to enlighten him as to the reason of their strange conduct, he maintained a discreet silence; and when he returned to Seafield every one there noticed how little Dr. Leigh said about his daughter.

Laurence would not go back to Carrswell. It seemed to him almost a sacrilege to take Marion to reign there as mistress; and, as the time passed by, a strange thing happened. Mrs. Carr, who had prided herself on her lack of sentiment, who had declared that affection between herself and Laurence was a matter of perfect indifference when she had entered into the compact for her marriage—this cynical, haughty, cold woman learned to love her husband with all the strength of her proud, passionate heart.

As the days sped on, and Laurence remained the same—cold, unheeding, unforgiving—she grew madly jealous. She watched him, followed him; she wept and wrung her hands in despair. She hated every woman to whom he spoke a kind word. In a furious passion of jealousy, she said to him one day:

"You told me you loved a woman once. If ever I find her, I will kill her."

"You have almost killed her," he answered, sadly. "She had little life apart from me."

One evening, as she stood in the hall of the hotel, Laurence came in. The landlord was there; and, with a complacent smile, he said to Laurence:

"We have another party, Laurence, Mr. and Mrs. d'Este and their daughter.

The book fell from Laurence's hand, and he staggered back, like a man who had received a blow. Marion gave a little cry, and he recovered himself in a moment.

"That is the woman he loves," she said to herself, "and I vowed, if ever I found her, I would kill her."

The remembrance of her husband's white face and his intense emotion made her almost desperate. The same evening, when she saw him alone in their salon, she went up to him again. She knelt down before him, and stretched out her arms to him with a yearning cry.

"Love me, Laurence," she said, as the passionate tears fell like rain. "Love me, Laurence. Do you know that I would give all I have in this world—that I would give even life itself—for your love?"

He looked at her coldly.

"Do you know," he replied, "that by your ambition and your avarice you have spoiled three lives?" and he left her there.

* * * * *

The terrace of the hotel was long and wide and overlooked grounds that sloped down to the river. It was about ten feet high, and the balustrade did not run straight along; at intervals there was a break in it, a gap left purposely to be filled with tall shrubs. It was, perhaps, slightly dangerous; but as no accident had ever occurred, danger was never though tof.

Mrs. Carr, watching, saw, when the evening shadows fell dark and soft, her husband go out on to the terrace; and, perhaps half an hour afterward, she saw a vision which set her heart aflame. A tall, beautiful girl, dressed in white, with a crimson flower on her breast, a black lace shawl over her head and shoulders, crossed the little side hall and went out on to the terrace.

"They will meet," Mrs. Carr said to herself.

She swiftly glided back through the salon, passed through ont of the French windows that opened on to the end of the terrace, and was there before them. She crouched behind a tall shrub, where she could hear and see all that passed without being observed herself.

She saw them meet. Laurence's face was pale and full of emotion, Magdalen's was deathly white and trembling.

"I have not startled you?" he said. "You knew I was here?"

"Yes," she answered, "I knew you were here; mamma told me."

"Thank Heaven," he said, "that I see you once again; my whole soul has thirsted to be with you once again."

"I am glad to see you," she said, simply. "I knew that we must meet some day."

"I thank Heaven," he repeated, fervently, "that I have lived to see you again. Oh, Magdalen, for those few weeks of happiness I have suffered sorely! My dear, lost love, what have you thought of me?"

"I have thought of you kindly always," she returned, gently. Tell me the story of your secret. I shall be the better, the happier for knowing it."

And then he told her the story of his temptation and his fall. She listened intently. When he had finished, she laid her hand on his.

"Was that all—was that the secret which parted us? Dear," she said, "it was the folly of youth—scarcely a crime. At any rate, it need not have separated us."

The tall shrub a few feet behind them shook; there was a faint cry, a half-strangled call then silence for some moments—intense, painful silence, followed by the sound of a fall; then silence again.

"What is it, Laurence?" asked Magdalen, looking pale and frightened.

He rose and looked behind the shrub, there was nothing to be seen, and through the gap in the balustrade he peered down to the grounds below.

"It is nothing," he said. "Perhaps a stone has fallen, or a flower-vase; there is nothing here."

There was little more to be said. Never for one moment did he forget the respect due to her. He said nothing of the love that filled his heart.

They parted that night without the hope or expectation of ever meeting in this world again.

But in the morning there was terrible consternation in the hotel. Mrs. Carr was missing, and, after some little search, she was found lying dead in the grounds below the terrace. She had been dead for hours.

She had evidently fallen through the gap in the marble balustrade, for she lay just underneath, and some of the crimson flowers had fallen with her. When Lawrence was taken to the spot by the terrified landlord, he knew at once what had happened. His wife had watched him and followed him; then she had either taken a false step and fallen through the open space where the railing should have been, or, in her jealous despair, she had flung herself down. Whichever it was, the secret died with her.

Mrs. Carr was buried in the cemetery there. The old doctor came to her funeral. Her marriage had been mysterious to him, her death was not less so.

Mr. and Mrs. d'Este went away with their daughter, and Laurence returned to Carrswell.

Four years afterward, a little scene on the lawn there attracted the attention of Magdalen Carr, the happy mother of a sturdy little son two years old. The child had gathered, in his baby fashion, a blooming red rose, and, running up to where his father sat, he thrust it into his face. Laurence drew back with a startled cry. The very fragrance brought back so forcibly to him the time and the hour when Marion Leigh had stood before him holding out to him the red rose that meant so much to him.

"Never do that again, Harry," he said. "Papa hates roses."

"Papa hates roses!" lisped the boy.

Laurence's thoughts went back to the woman, long dead now, who had cried out that she would give her life for one kiss from his lips. Then he went up to the wife whom he loved with a perfect love.

"It was when the woodbine was in bloom that I saw you first," he said, tenderly; "so its flowers will always be the sweetest and dearest to me."

And when she kissed his face, there was no shadow upon it.

(The end.)

SERPENT AT THE BALL.

No Scene So Gay at Russian Court That Fear Is Not Present.

For the grand balls at the court of Russia carloads of rare flowers from Nice, orchids and immense roses, came every week to decorate the big houses thrown open and the tables were loaded with delicacies from every corner of the world. An invitation to dine, sent out at the opening of the season, frequently meant that one was expected every week upon the night indicated; one went if one could, in an easy, familiar way, and the banquet was always spread, says a writer in the Delineator. One knew that many of these prodigal hosts and hostesses were nearly bankrupt, and the peasants on their estates might be starving and that the humble tradespeople were often not paid for years.

But even in the midst of this vast display of wealth there is a hideous coiled serpent ready to strike. It is anarchy.

All the guests were gathered, standing in complete silence as the doors were thrown open for the entrance of the emperor and empress. Just as they stepped across the threshold there was distinctly heard in the hushed room a sharp, unexpected click-click. It was only the electric light as an extra battery was turned on, but the emperor uttered a low cry and the empress staggered and turned pale, while a moment of agonizing fear held the roomful of guests.

Steals for Starving.

"I just couldn't stand it, judge. My father was out of work and despondent. My mother was in ill health, and my six brothers and sisters were starving and in rags.

"When the shop was closing, and I thought I wouldn't be seen, I saw those two dresses and thought how useless they were in the store, and how useful they would be to us. Then I just took them."

This was the plea made to Magistrate Steinert in Jefferson Market court by 16-year-old Charles Catter of 426 East Seventy-ninth street, charged with stealing two silk dresses from his employer, David Harris, of 122 Fifth avenue. The boy was held.

Young Catter's story was verified by an American reporter. He found the family of eight huddled in three small rooms on the top floor of the tenement at the Seventy-ninth street address. There was practically no furniture in the flat, not even a bed. Mr. Catter is a painter and decorator. He has been out of work since Christmas.

Yesterday he told of the circumstances that made his boy a thief.

"He is not a bad boy. It was only love for us that made him a thief," said the father. "I know they can't punish him simply for thinking of his home folks, can they?"—New York American.

The Skin of My Teeth.

In the book of Job appears the sentence, "I am escaped with the skin of my teeth," which is modernized "by the skin of my teeth" and gives the idea of a narrow escape, one so close as to be just by the thickness of the skin on the teeth, which is so thin that no microscopist has yet been able to find it. "To cast in the teeth" means to throw defiant reproaches or insults spitefully, as one would cast a stone at the exposed teeth of a snarling dog. "Tooth and nail" denotes the manner of an action full of frenzied fury, typified by biting and scratching, as when two belligerent cats make the fur fly.

Children's Skins.

Every now and then a child's skin will break out in some kind of a rash and folks think it caught the trouble at school or somewhere away from home. Half the time the trouble is caused by the use of unwholesome yellow soaps for washing clothing. They leave the dirt in the goods and make the clothing harsh and irritating to the skin. No wonder the rash breaks out. Easy Task soap is clean and white and sanitary and is best for children's clothes and yours too. Get it at your grocer's.

Alarming Symptoms.

Both Expert in Logic.

"Tom," said a father to his son, whose school report showed him to have been an idle young scamp, "what have you been studying this term?"

"Logic, father," replied Tom. "I can prove you are not here now."

"Indeed! How so?"

"Well, you must be either at Rome or elsewhere."

"Certainly."

"You are not at Rome?"

"No."

"Then you must be elsewhere."

"Just so."

"And if you are elsewhere you clearly can't be here."

For answer the father took up a cane that lay near and laid it smartly across his son's back.

"Don't!" cried Tom. "You are hurting me."

"Not at all. You have just proved conclusively that I am not here, so I can't be hurting you."

Before his stern parent had quite done with him Tom felt that there must be, after all, a flaw somewhere in his logic.—London Tit-Bits.

Would Cut Out Dogs.

"In Norway," remarked the globe trotter, "no girl is allowed to have a beau until she can bake bread and knit stockings."

"In this country," rejoined the fussy bachelor, "there should be a law forbidding any girl having a beau until she is able to navigate the streets without the aid of a dog on the end of a string."—Chicago News.

WESTERN CANADA

What Prof. Shaw, the Well-Known Agriculturist, Says About It:

"I would sooner raise cattle in Western Canada than in the corn belt of the United States. Feed is cheaper and climate better for the purpose. Your market will improve faster than your farmers will produce the supplies. Wheat can be grown up to the 60th parallel 600 miles north of the International boundary. Your vacant land will be taken as a rate beyond present conception. We have enough people in the United States alone who want homes to take up this land."

70,000 Americans

will enter and make their homes in Western Canada this year. 1909 produced another large crop of wheat, oats and barley, in addition to which the cattle exports was an immense item. Cattle raising, dairying, mixed farming and grain growing in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Free homestead and pre-emption areas, as well as lands held by railway and land companies, will provide homes for millions.

Sixteen Years of Skin Disease.

"For sixteen long years I have been suffering with a bad case of skin disease. While a child there broke out a red sore on the legs just in back of my knees. It waxed from bad to worse, and at last I saw I had a bad skin disease. I tried many widely known doctors in different cities but to no satisfactory result. The plague bothered me more in warm weather than in winter and being on my leg joints it made it impossible for me to walk, and I was forced to stay indoors in the warmest weather. My hopes of recovery were by this time spent. Sleepless nights and restless days made life an unbearable burden. At last I was advised to try the Cuticura Remedies [Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills] and I did not need more than a trial to convince me that I was on the road of success this time. I bought two sets of the Cuticura Remedies and after these were gone I was a different man entirely. I am now the happiest man that there is at least one true cure for skin diseases. Leonard A. Hawtof, 11 Nostrand Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., July 30 and Aug. 9, 1909."

People Tell Each Other About Good Things.

Sixteen years ago few people in the world knew of such a preparation as a Powder for the Feet. To-day after the genuine merit of Allen's Foot-Ease has been told year after year by one gratified person to another, there are millions who would as soon go without a dentifrice as without Allen's Foot-Ease. It is a cleanly, wholesome, healing, antiseptic powder to be shaken into the shoes, which has given rest and comfort to tired and aching feet in all parts of the world. It cures while you walk. Over 30,000 testimonials of cures of smarting, swollen, perspiring feet. It prevents friction and wear of the stockings and will save in your stocking bill ten times its cost each year. Imitations pay the dealer a larger profit, otherwise you would never be offered a substitute when you ask for Allen's Foot-Ease, the original powder for the feet. Imitations are not advertised because they are not permanent. For every genuine article there are many imitations. The imitator has no reputation to sustain—the advertiser has. It stands to reason that the advertised article is the best, otherwise the public would not buy it and the advertising could not be continued. When you ask for an article advertised in this paper, see that you get it. Refuse imitations.

Curing Coleridge

The English schoolmaster of long ago preferred spoiling the rod to spoiling the boy. When Samuel Taylor Coleridge was about 13 he went to a shoemaker and begged him to take him as an apprentice. The shoemaker, being an honest man, returned with the boy to Bowyer, his master, who got into a great rage, knocked Coleridge down and turned the shoemaker out of the grounds.

"Why have you made such a fool of yourself?" he then demanded.

"I have a great desire to be a shoemaker," Coleridge replied, "and I hate the thought of being a clergyman."

"Why so?" asked the master.

"Because, to tell you the truth, sir," said the boy, "I am an infidel."

For this, without more ado, Bowyer flogged Coleridge—wisely, as he afterward thought; soundly, as he knew at the time.

"It was my one flogging, and it was just," Coleridge afterward owned. "Any arguing or sermonising would have gratified my vanity and confirmed me in my absurd views; as it was, all my infidelity was thrashed out of me, and I got heartily laughed at besides."

What the Wild Waves Heard.

"You're looking blue," remarked the lobster. "What's the matter?"

"I have just heard," the oyster answered, "that there are such things as vegetable oysters."

"What's the difference?" rejoined the other. "There are human lobsters, too, but I don't let that worry me a cent's worth."—Chicago Tribune.

FEED CHILDREN

On Properly Selected Food—It Pays Big Dividends.

If parents will give just a little intelligent thought to the feeding of their children the difference in the health of the little folks will pay, many times over, for the small trouble.

A mother writes saying: "Our children are all so much better and stronger than they ever were before we made a change in the character of the food. We have quit using potatoes three times a day with coffee and so much meat.

"Now we give the little folks some fruit, either fresh, stewed, or canned, some Grape-Nuts with cream, occasionally some soft boiled eggs, and some Postum for breakfast and supper. Then for dinner they have some meat and vegetables.

"It would be hard to realize the change in the children, they have grown so sturdy and strong, and we attribute this change to the food elements that, I understand, exist in Grape-Nuts and Postum.

"A short time ago my baby was teething and had a great deal of stomach and bowel trouble. Nothing seemed to agree with him until I tried Grape-Nuts softened and mixed with rich milk and he improved rapidly and got sturdy and well."

THE POPULAR PULPIT

LOOKING HOMEWARD.

By Rev. James E. E. Sawyer, D.D.

"We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord."—II. Cor., V:8.

That noble spirit, Lamennais, who tasted the bitterness of exile from his native land, comforted himself by saying: "Our homeland is not here below; man vainly seeks it here; that which he takes for it is only a lodging for the night."

The abiding home of humanity is not here. We are all wanderers. Our real home is elsewhere. This is not the place of our rest. All noble souls, loftily or lowly, are travelers, walking not by sight, but by faith. Our dearest treasures are laid up in heaven. Our hopes, our interests, our hearts, are there. "They that say such things declare plainly that they seek a country." "They desire a better country that is heavenly; wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God; for He hath prepared for them a city."

Our adversities are the necessary incidents of a journey. All earth's joys are the shifting scenes of a land through which we are traveling. This world is the scene of vicissitudes, of storms, of sorrows, of partings, of heart-breaks and tragic loneliness. There is a peaceful and permanent home awaiting the Christian—a city that hath foundations, a settled habitation, a haven after life's tempestuous voyage, a refuge from all the sorrows of the present existence, a land of light where there is no more painful mystery, a land of love and eternal reunion, where sympathy is perfect, where the heart is satisfied, a realm secure and gladsome, thronged with ancient folk and dear ones of our own day. There we shall see as we are seen and know as we are known. There light intellectual is full-charged with love, love of true good; full-charged with gladness—gladness which transcends every sweetness. That is the goal of all our belongings. Archbishop Leighton used to say that if he were to choose a place to die in it should be an inn, for that would look so like a pilgrim's going home. God gave him his wish. In an inn he ended his pilgrimage, and went home to the city of the sun, toward which he had long looked wistfully. To the spiritually minded that homeland is more real than anything round about them here. There lies all that they dream of and hope for.

It is not in the darkest hours of life alone that the vision of that home is most attractive. Often the thought of its peace, its fruition, its infinite and eternal satisfaction of our desires and possibilities comes to us with strange power when life is strongest and most joyous. In the hour of some great joy, at the time of the accomplishment of some purpose which has cost protracted and strenuous endeavor, or when we have beheld the mystic beauty of a perfect morning or have looked into eternity through the splendor of the sunset, the thought of the home of the soul has been a rapture of desire. Our best and happiest hours are prophetic of heaven, are windows through which we obtain fascinating glimpses of its ideal beauty. When, like Simeon, we hold the Light and Hope of the world in our arms, like Him, our heart exclaims, "Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." Were we to have one minute of perfect existence, bodily, mentally and spiritually, one minute of absolutely perfect health, perfect spiritual vision and harmony and happiness, the veil between us and our home would disappear. Without dying we would arrive instantly at home.

The longing for home is not the weariness of weaklings, the ennui of worldlings, the indolence of the easeloving, the cynicism and disgust of those who do not find this life worth living. It is characteristic of fulness of spiritual life and energy. None have more earnestly longed for the heaven than the bravest soldiers of the cross, the heroes of the faith. Paul, though for the sake of others willing to remain in the flesh, confessed to a desire to depart. It was because to live was Christ that to die would be gain. He said: "For indeed we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but that we would be clothed upon, that what is mortal may be swallowed up of life. * * * Being, therefore, always of good courage and knowing that whilst we are at home in the body we are absent from the Lord—for we walk by faith, not by sight—we are of good courage, I say, and are willing rather to be absent from the body and to be at home with the Lord." He was so fully alive that he longed for the land of the living.

In his later years, though he was not really aged, and was surrounded by a beloved and happy family, Luther longed to be with Christ and behold His glory. He toiled tremendously and with unabated heroic energy till within a few days of his death; but he had often expressed his desire for release. Nearly five years before his decease, on his recovery from a painful and dangerous illness, he wrote to his prince, who had sent his private physician to attend him: "I should have been well content if the dear Lord Jesus had taken me in His mercy from hence, as I am now of little use on the earth." It is the greatness of man, not his littleness, that inspires him with desire for larger room and the fulfillment of his noblest desires and holiest ideals.

There is a vapid sentimentalism that dreams of heaven while neglecting the everyday tasks and strenuous duties of the life that now is. Such an attitude is unworthy. But the longing for heaven on the part of earnest souls is sane and healthy. It is a mark of relationship to the infinite; it is a token that the soul has really been born from above; it is the aspiration for perfection. The future life is ampler than the present; it has more room for energy and enterprise. In that realm of light and gladness are the great spirits of our race, and they have employments congenial to their powers. They have not been retired, but promoted. Human nature is to influence all worlds. A vital Christianity will always emphasize the future life. Men's souls grow great and their thoughts profound only in the presence of the eternal realities of God and human destiny. Christ is the living bond between both worlds. The love that moves the sun and all the stars is the rapture and the satisfaction of the spirits of just men made perfect and of the festal assembly of the angels.

In the fair mansions of the heavenly home are many unutterably dear, from whom we parted with agony. What joy it will to meet them again! No more shall we be lonely. The armies of the saints are triumphantly marching onward and homeward to that city whose light is not that of sun or moon, but the glory of the Lamb of God. In the quiet of the evening gloaming and amid the fury of all life's storms we catch strains of celestial melody.

HYMNS AND THEIR AUTHORS

THE COMING KING.

By John Cennick.

[Although this hymn is frequently credited to Charles Wesley, there seems little doubt but that he deserves credit only for placing it in his collection, while the Rev. John Cennick (Reading, England, Dec. 12, 1718—London, July 4, 1775) was its author. It appears in his collection of hymns before Wesley published it. The hymn is interesting principally because of the popularity it once enjoyed; not long ago it was thought to hold third place among all the hymns in the English tongue. While it is still frequently sung in Great Britain and in her colonies, it is certainly declining in favor, for its thought does not greatly interest our day.]

Lo! he comes with clouds descending,
Once for favored sinners slain!
Thousand thousand saints attending,
Swell the triumph of his train!
Hallelujah!
Jesus comes, and comes to reign.

Every eye shall now behold him,
Robed in dreadful majesty!
Those who set at naught and sold him,
Pierced and nailed him to the tree,
Deeply wailing,
Shall the true Messiah see!

Yea, amen! let all adore thee,
High on thine eternal throne!
Savior, take the power and glory;
Make thy righteous sentence known!
Men and angels
Kneel and bow to thee alone!

SENTENCE SERMONS.

In some churches cold facts would make a hot sermon.

A store of unpracticed piety in the heart soon paralyzes it.

Many reformers get switched off on to reforming one another.

Turn your face to the sun and you will never fear the shadows.

A man soon gets tired of his religion when he does not work at it.

People who live in a bread and butter world are always hungry.

No prayers were ever long enough to lengthen a short yardstick.

Aseptic charity is more than keeping your tainted money to yourself.

It's a good deal easier to seem fit to die than to be fit to live with.

The congregation is the best commentary on the creed of a church.

It is easy to prove your god by logic and still be an atheist in your life.

Faith as to what may be is more important than conviction as to what is.

The world knows the church by the kind of people on whom she puts her O. K.

No man misses more than he who has been so suspicious of all that he has never lost anything.

One of the worst things about exposing the wolves is that the sheep will turn and try to rend you.

Teach a child to lie in the hymns on Sunday and the temptations of the of the week will take care of the rest.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't look for wisdom on trees that are without roots in experience.

Don't try to love the oppressed weak unless you hate the strong oppressor.

Don't preach without thinking lest you find plenty to listen without doing.

Don't forget that the life of goodness leads to faith in the goodness of life.

Don't forget that it's better to be one small blast furnace than a dozen prairie fires.

Don't overlook the fact that he has no true faith in his god who has none in himself.

RELIC OF FAMOUS RACE HORSE.

Hide of Animal Valued at $100,000 Made Into Fantastic Couch Cover.

There is among the possessions of August Belmont in the residence occupied by Superintendent Ed Kane at Nursery Stud, near Lexington, Ky., a $100,000 couch cover, which was greatly admired by Eleanor Robson, the charming bride of the great financier, turfman and chairman of the Jockey Club, when recently they stopped off here in their honeymoon entourage for a day at this famous farm. Of course, this couch cover did not actually cost $100,000 in its making, and its market value, based on the price of choicest leather, is nothing approximating that vast sum, but the sentimentality of the wealthy master of the Nursery would doubtless preclude its sale at any price. This couch cover is the hide and hair of the celebrated race horse and sire, St. Blaise, who had the distinction of having been sold by auction for $100,000, and who, under the weight of his twenty-nine years and attendant infirmities of old age, died at the Nursery October 27, 1909.

Superintendent Kane sent the rich chestnut coat of St. Blaise to a tanner in New York, with instruction to preserve as much as possible of it, and it came back beautifully finished, minus only the skin that had covered the face and legs, the long bright hairs of the mane and tail remaining to fall gracefully over the head and foot of the couch which the coat of the celebrated equine now covers in the hallway of Mr. Kane's home. St. Blaise was bred in England by Lord Arlington, and was foaled in 1880. As a two-year-old he won four of his six races, including a walkover and a dead heat, this latter with Elzevir in the Molecomb stakes at Goodwood.—St. Louis Republic.

Your Wife's Picture.

A man ought to be ashamed to live so that his wife is compelled to look as she does at housecleaning time. He'll allow her to buy cheap old yellow soap right along and take twice as long for her housework and washing, when Easy Task soap will save time, health and money for her. A man wouldn't tolerate old-fashioned methods in his place of business for a minute. If your wife would use Easy Task soap all the time there wouldn't be a tenth of the dirt to get rid of at housecleaning time.

WOMAN ESCAPES OPERATION

Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Elwood, Ind.—"Your remedies have cured me and I have only taken six bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was sick three months and could not walk. I suffered all the time. The doctors said I could not get well without an operation, for I could hardly stand the pains in my sides, especially my right one, and down my right leg. I began to feel better when I had taken only one bottle of Compound, but kept on as I was afraid to stop too soon."—Mrs. SADIE MULLEN, 2723 N. B. St., Elwood, Ind.

Why will women take chances with an operation or drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has cured thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion, and nervous prostration.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be absolutely confidential, and the advice free.

Women's Secrets

There is one man in the United States who has perhaps heard more women's secrets than any other man or woman in the country. These secrets are not secrets of guilt or shame, but the secrets of suffering, and they have been confided to Dr. R. V. Pierce in the hope and expectation of advice and help. That few of these women have been disappointed in their expectations is proved by the fact that ninety-eight per cent. of all women treated by Dr. Pierce have been absolutely and altogether cured. Such a record would be remarkable if the cases treated were numbered by hundreds only. But when that record applies to the treatment of more than half-a-million women, in a practice of over 40 years, it is phenomenal, and entitles Dr. Pierce to the gratitude accorded him by women, as the first of specialists in the treatment of women's diseases.

Every sick woman may consult Dr. Pierce by letter, absolutely without charge. All replies are mailed, sealed in perfectly plain envelopes, without any printing or advertising whatever, upon them. Write without fear as without fee, to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres't., Buffalo, N. Y.

Republican Convention.

The republicans of the county met in delegate convention at Auburn, last Thursday, for the purpose of nominating a county ticket. The attendance was much larger than expected as there was no spirited contest to arouse the voter and bring out the crowd. The day was warm with a clear sky that started the prespertation to flowing freely. After the usual rotine of business the following officers were nominated.

For representative, H. R. Culbertson announced the name of Capt. L. L. Denison of Keyser township, which was seconded by L. H. Higley of Butler, who had been favorably mentioned for the place. The nomination was made by acclamation.

For County assessor the names of P. D. Ginder of Wilmington and George Scattergood of Richland were announced. The ballot resulted as follows: Ginder 152½; Scattergood, 136½. Necessary to a choice 146 Mr. Scattergood was declared the nominee.

For coroner Dr. W. W. Swarts was named by acclamation.

J. W. Reed of Auburn, was nominated for sheriff by acclamation amid much applause.

Dove--Kinsey

Last Thursday afternoon occurred the marriage of John Dove and Miss Levada Kinsey of this place. Rev. J. H. Neuhauser of Auburn officiating. In the evening after their return home a supper was served to a large number of immediate relatives and friends. The young folks are well known to our readers, the birde being the daughter of Mrs [illegible] V. Kinsey, while the groom was formerly of Spencerville, but is now engaged in working on the B. & O. at this place. The young couple will set up housekeeping in the Sol Barney house on 3rd street. Congratulations.

The Fourth at Hamilton's Grove

Have you spotted one of those big noisy posters announcing the Coburntown Band's big celebration on the Fourth of July? Just look one of them up and see how your mouth will water and you will wish the grand old noisy day was right here now.

Remember how they tore up the earth over there last year? Well it will be the same old way this year only more of it. They will make a supreme effort to please you and they have inaugurated many new and novel features including races of every description, goose pulling contest, Abysinian Ground Hog (Abysinio Africano) (note the emphony of that scientific term,) an Aquatic Automobile, one that will speed as rapidly over the water as it will over land, (positively the first exhibition of this novel machine in the U. S.)

At ten-twenty a desperate battle of wands will occur in which contestants will struggle for victory from two opposing boats until one falls in a watery defeat. Don't miss this one item, don't miss any of them as the day will so thrill with exciting stunts that you will regret the close of the program and begin at once to look forward to the big doings to be pulled off one year later by this same bunch of notorious wind splitters. Come and partake of this overflowing bowl of mirth, it will rejuvenate you, it will make the old young and the young glad for a hundred years. Admission free but keep your hands on your pocketbooks.

Supper

The ladies of the M. P. church will hold a ten cent supper in the parsonage on Saturday evening, June 25. The public is invited. Don't forget the date.

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Telegraphic Information Gathered by the Few for the Enlightenment of the Many.

Dozen Foreigners Roasted in Bed.

Twelve Austrian laborers, known by check numbers only, were burned to death in their shacks at Failsview, near Niagara Falls, Ont. One man, a woman and a child were probably fatally injured. When firemen from Niagara Falls reached the little settlement of foreigners employed in the power development work they found four shacks reduced to embers. Twelve bodies were removed. The Austrian evidently has been overcome by smoke as they slept and were roasted to death. The injured, taken unconscious from the ruins, were terribly burned. The twelve dead Austrians, it was learned at an investigation, had occupied one of the shacks, from which none escaped. In the other three structures nearly fifty persons were housed, but all escaped excepting the three now lying in a hospital.

Two Million in Gas Merger.

Gas and electric light plants in ten cities and towns in Northern Indiana recently passed to the control of Chas. H. Geist, of Philadelphia, Pa., the merger being completed when Geist combined the South Bend and Mishawaka Gas Company, of South Bend, and the Plymouth Lighting Company, of Plymouth, with the Northern Indiana Gas and Electric Company, which controls and operates gas and electric light plants at Hammond, Whiting, East Chicago, Indiana Harbor, Chesterton, Porter and Michigan City. The merger involves $2,000,000. The headquarters for the syndicate will be in South Bend, Ind.

More Rabid Cows Killed.

Three head of milch cows, the property of Richmond, Ind., dairymen, were killed by order of the City Health Board as the animals were suffering from rabies. This made a total of eleven cows killed within a few weeks from the same cause. Three dogs have been killed and the township has paid more than $600 as damages to dairymen for the loss of their cattle. According to a statement made by Dr. T. Henry Davis, city health officer and also a member of the State Board of Health, numerous cases of rabies have been reported to the board from several points in the State this spring.

Appetite Kills Prize Eater.

Dr. H. L. Bonner, 69 years old, who attained note because of an abnormal appetite, died recently in Marion, Ohio. Up until a few years ago Bonner indulged in many eating contests and succeeded in outdoing some of the most famous eaters of the world. One day he ate a double steak as heavy as a roast, twelve large potatoes, two dishes of onions, two loaves of bread, with a pound of butter, and finished the meal by eating three dozen hard boiled eggs. Overindulgence of his appetite brought on diabetes.

Fatal Wound from Thrust of Hatpin.

Although Deputy Marshal G. W. Morris was dangerously wounded by a hat pin which penetrated his abdomen while attempting to arrest a woman in Globe, Ariz., he did not realize the fact until several days later. The woman fought desperately, beating the officer over the head with a bottle and he did not notice the tiny wound in which the steel had broken off until examined. He probably will die.

Father and Son Burned to Death.

Clarence Buck and his son Bernard were burned to death in a fire which destroyed their powder factory operated by the Buck Manufacturing Company at Coudersport, Pa. The elder Buck was the inventor of a so-called "safety" powder which was manufactured at the Coudersport plant by a secret process carefully guarded.

Firemen Overcome.

Two firemen were overcome by smoke in the fire in the Great Western Company building in St. Louis, Mo., and were taken to a dispensary in apparently lifeless condition. A girl stenographer was reported missing.

Convict Fatally Hurt.

Walter O. Nicewander, of Muncie, a prisoner at the State Reformatory in Jeffersonville, Ind., was fatally hurt when he fell from a third floor gallery in cell house E at the institution.

Baldwin Falls Seventy-five Feet.

Captain Baldwin fell with his aeroplane seventy-five feet while he was practicing at Mineola, L. I., but, though his machine was smashed, he was not injured.

RAIL BILL REPORTED TO HOUSE AND SENATE

Finished Work of Conferees Is Declared to Be Satisfactory to Upper House.

FEATURES OF COMPLETED BILL

Commerce Court of Five Judges to Be Appointed Under Its Provisions.

The conference report on the administration railroad bill was presented to the Senate in Washington the other day by Chairman Elkins, of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce. It was also laid before the House.

Generally speaking, the finished work of the conferees is declared to be satisfactory to the Senate, although in large part it follows the lines of the House bill. A number of the amendments secured by "insurgent" Republican Senators, however, were retained by the conferees.

As finally perfected by the conferees, the bill carries most of the features of the original administration measure except the sections to permit railroads to make pooling agreements, to authorize the government to regulate the issuance of stocks and bonds and to permit a railroad to purchase the remaining stock of another line in which it already controls 50 per cent of the stock. So much opposition developed in both houses against these provisions that all except the securities section were abandoned outright.

In the place of the House provision the conferees incorporated a provision authorizing the President to appoint a commission to investigate questions pertaining to the issuance of stocks and bonds by railroads. Expenditures by the commission are limited to $25,000, and it was not given authority to summon witnesses or to compel the production of books and papers. No time was fixed for the making of a report.

The bill as perfected, therefore, and as likely to become law, would create a commerce court composed of five judges, the first of whom are to be selected by the President and thereafter by the chief justice of the Supreme Court.

Certain sections would enlarge the power of the commission over railroad regulations and practices and place under the jurisdiction of the commission telegraph, telephone and cable companies, whether wire or wireless, and would broaden the scope of the word railroad so as to extend the jurisdiction of the commission over bridges, ferries and terminal facilities.

General provisions are made affecting railroads to compel them to furnish rates upon application and to authorize the commission to institute inquiries on its own motion. By provisions adopted by the House and retained by the conferees the scope of the commission to make regulations was enlarged. It is also provided that the shipper may designate through routes.

POSTAL BANK BILL WINS.

Vote of 195 to 101 Assures Success of Savings Legislation.

The postal savings bank bill was passed by the House Thursday night by a vote of 191 to 101, practically assuring within a few weeks, if not days, legislation that will mark the end of years of agitation. No Republican voted against its passage and the following twenty-two Democrats voted for it:

Aiken, S. C.	Maguire, Neb.
Ansberry, Ohio.	Martin, Colo.
Ashbrook, Ohio.	Moss, Ind.
Foss, Mass.	Nichols, Pa.
Foster, Ill.	Ransdell, La.
Hammond, Minn.	Rucker, Colo.
Havens, N. Y.	Sabath, Ill.
Henry, Texas.	Sharp, Ohio.
Hitchcock, Neb.	Sulzer, N. Y.
Hughes, N. J.	Taylor, N. Y.
Kinkead, N. J.	Tou Velle, Ohio.

Representative Hobson of Alabama, a Democrat, voted for the passage of the bill and changed his vote because of a pair he had with a Republican.

The important provisions of the Postal Savings Bank bill are:

All banks to be controlled by a board consisting of the Postmaster General, Attorney General and Secretary of Treasury. Board designates officers and makes rules and regulations.

Any person may make deposits in multiples of $1, from $1 up to $500. The limit is $500. Two percent will be paid.

Depositors may, at their option, invest in a special issue of government bonds in denominations of $20, $40, $70 and $100.

Any deposit may be withdrawn.

Five per cent of the deposits shall be retained in the treasury as a reserve; 30 per cent invested in government bonds; 65 per cent deposited in local banks.

The President may, in an emergency, withdraw all deposits and invest in government bonds.

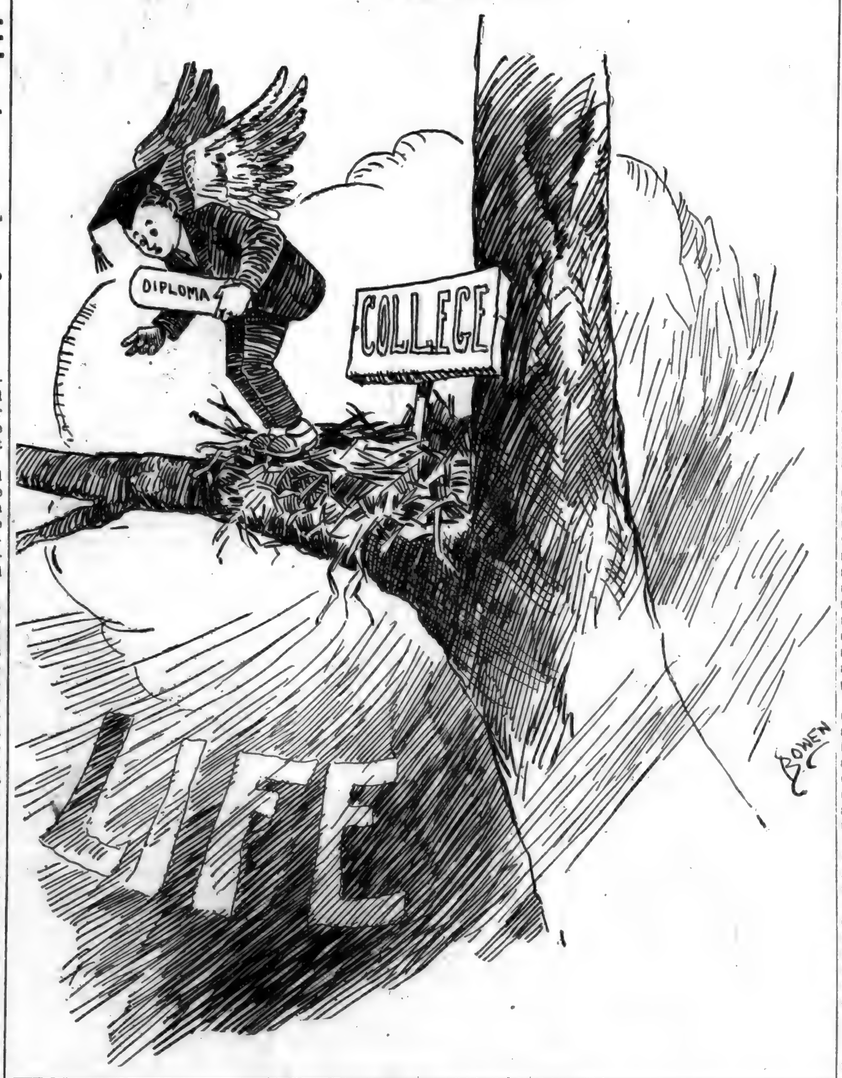
Deposits in banks must be secured by the government.

CHICAGO BANKS TO MERGE.

Commercial and Continental Nationals to Make Strong Concern.

In an hour's conference the other day a bank with $184,442,246 deposits was created in Chicago. By the affirmative signatures of ten men a financial institution representing capital and surplus of $23,700,000 was brought into being. The Continental National Bank, the Commercial National and the American Trust and Savings are to be consolidated. Representatives of these banking establishments met in the assembly room of the Commercial National and there agreed upon the merger. George M. Reynolds is to be president of the unified bank.

READY TO TRY HIS OWN WINGS.



HEIKE IS HELD GUILTY.

Secretary of American Sugar Faces Two Years in Prison.

Charles R. Heike, the white-haired secretary of the American Sugar Refining Company, was convicted in New York on one count of an indictment charging conspiracy to defraud the government of customs due on sugar. Ernest W. Gerbracht, former superintendent of the Williamsburg (Brooklyn) refinery, was convicted on all six counts. For James F. Bendernagel, former cashier of the refinery, the jry stood seven to five for acquittal. He will be tried again.

This ends the government's second attempt to imprison the group of men responsible for the vast underweighing frauds to which the so-called trust has virtually confessed by the restitution of more than $2,000,000 in duty. Heike is the highest official of the company upon whom blame has been fixed, and he now faces a possible sentence of two years in the Federal penitentiary and a fine of $10,000. He is 65 years old and broken in health and spirits.

Convicted on all six counts, Gerbracht can be sentenced to twelve years in prison, with a maximum fine of $10,000. He is 63 years old.

The trial thus ended was started on May 16, with six defendants included in the indictment. Besides Heike, Gerbracht and Bendernagel, there were three minor employes—Harry W. Walker, assistant dock superintendent, and Jean M. Voelker and James F. Halligan, checkers. The last three pleaded guilty.

WORK OF TAFT APPROVED.

Wisconsin Republicans Indorse President and State Administration.

The administration of President William H. Taft is strongly indorsed in the platform unanimously adopted at the Wisconsin Republican State convention in Milwaukee. The present tariff law is approved and the provisions for maximum and minimum schedules and future scientific revisions are commended. Gov. Davidson's administration also is indorsed.

Every mention of the President's name was followed by a demonstration. Vice President Sherman, who came from Washington for the purpose of addressing the convention, received a warm welcome. The matter of naming candidates for a State ticket was deferred and left for the primary election in September to decide.

With the selection of a campaign committee, consisting of two members from each congressional district, and the choosing of William D. Connor of Marshfield as State chairman, the convention adjourned sine die. Mr. Connor's election was unanimous. He held the same office six years ago when La Follette was Governor.

Big Cotton Mills to Close.

The 6,000 operatives in the cotton mills of the Arlington corporation at Lawrence, Mass., were notified that the plant would be shut down from June 30 until July 11. The Everett Cotton Mills, employing 1,200 hands, will be closed two weeks in July.

THIRTY-FIVE PERISH IN FIRE AT MONTREAL

Herald Building Is Destroyed and Bindery Girls and Others Probably Dead.

HEAR CRIES OF THE DYING.

Crowds Stand Helpless While Flames Claim Victims—Members of Editorial Staff Safe.

Thirty-five persons are believed to be dead in the fire-swept ruins of the Herald building in Montreal, Que., which was destroyed the other day. Many are said to have been carried to death by a water tank which crashed through the building when the fire started. Bindery girls and linotype men fell through the huge gap in the floors of the building and were quickly buried under machinery and timbers.

Crowds outside the burning building could hear plainly the shouts of the dying inside while the flames were slowly making their way toward them, but practically nothing could be done to save them. All the members of the editorial department escaped uninjured, the dead and dying being confined largely to employes of the bindery.

The flames were confined at first to the upper floors of the building, but although all the available fire apparatus turned out, it was impossible to control the fire, which was fanned by a strong wind.

STORM SWEEPS SOUTHWEST.

Lightning Fires Buildings and Houses Are Unroofed by Wind.

A terrific rain and wind storm swept St. Louis the other night and afternoon. Many buildings were unroofed and lightning set fire to many dwellings. The damage caused by the storm was the greatest of the year. Many citizens were terror-stricken as they recalled the cyclone of May 27, 1896, when 400 St. Louisans were killed.

Reports from Arkansas, Mississippi and West Tennessee indicate the worst rain, wind and hail storms throughout this territory in years.

Rains of a torrential nature fell over Western Arkansas and a tornado hit the towns of Pine Bluff and Hot Springs. Only one life was lost, that of David Meadows, a farmer near Fort Smith, Ark., who was drowned while riding on a mule. A Frisco train went through a bridge near the same town, the engine getting across in safety, but fourteen cars of merchandise went down to destruction. A college building at Nettleton, Ark., was completely destroyed. Wire service all over Arkansas was out of commission for several hours. Damage to crops will be enormous. Young corn was beaten to the ground and cotton washed out of the soil. This will mean probably a total loss of the early corn crop in that section, and many thousand acres of cotton will have to be replanted.

AMERICAN MURDERED IN ITALY.

Woman's Body Found in Trunk Drawn from Lake Como.

The police are searching Lombardy and all northern Italy for the murderer of an American woman, whose body, stuffed in a trunk, was found by fishermen in a little lake near the village of Moltrasio, a short distance from Como and about thirty miles from Milan.

The authorities of Cernobbio, the nearest city of consequence to the scene of the murder, have ascertained that the woman was Mrs. Porter Charlton, and that she had been living with her husband in the Villa Moltrasio, which had been let to them by a Russian gentleman they met casually.

The police discovered after an examination of letters and papers found in the abandoned villa that Mrs. Charlton, before her last marriage, was Mrs. Mary Scott Castle of a well-known San Francisco family. Porter Charlton has disappeared, but Constantine Spolatoff, the Russian who rented the villa, has been arrested at Roggiano. The police fear that Charlton also has been murdered, as they are at a loss to account otherwise for his complete disappearance.

$2,000,000 Taxes Is Illegal.

Taxes to the amount of $2,000,000 which the city of St. Louis is trying to collect on stock in foreign corporations held by St. Louisans were held to be illegal by Circuit Judge Williams. The court held the stock at issue could not be assessed because it was assessed in states where the company is incorporated.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of Chicago trade says:

"Trade conditions reflect little change in the prominent activities. There is a smaller shrinkage in the volume of payments through the banks, and the trading defaults make a good exhibit. Operations in production and distribution are stimulated by a more confident tone as to the future. Forwarders have found satisfaction in the Washington conference as to a threatened advance in transportation rates. Other favorable developments include more seasonable weather for fashionable lines, further ease in money, lessened labor disputes and Wednesday's excellent crop report.

"The markets for general merchandise attract increasing attendance of buyers. Sales have risen to satisfactory aggregates in dry goods, footwear, clothing, men's furnishings, millinery and food products. Inferior merchants report expectations realized on spring stocks. Local dealings were stimulated by higher temperatures and headway is made in the depletion of lightweight apparel. The demand is now quite strong for vacation needs, and large sales are noted in sporting goods and house furnishings.

"Markets for bonds and local securities compare unfavorably in transactions with this time last year, but there is heavy investment in realty and improvements. Commercial paper of the best grade is quoted at 5 per cent, and deposits are strengthened by an increasing return of money from the West.

"Bank clearings, $267,723,901, are 2.6 per cent under those of corresponding week in 1909, and compare with $215,492,046 in 1908.

"Failures reported in the Chicago district number eighteen, as against fourteen last week, twenty-one in 1909 and twenty-one in 1908. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number seven, as against six last week, four in 1909, and eight in 1908."

NEW YORK.

Unreasonably cool weather still arrests retail trade and retards crop progress in the northern half of the country, and trade is quiet in the southern districts, though cotton and fruit crops there are making progress. Jobbing trade reports reflect quiet in consumptive demand in a moderate volume of reorders, which are classed as frequent but small in the aggregate. Trade as a whole still hesitates pending a clearer view of crop and price outcome. Industrial reports point to considerable curtailment of output. Collections range from slow to fair.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending June 9 were 189, as against 160 last week, 197 in the like week of 1909, 253 in 1908, 161 in 1907 and 170 in 1906. Business failures in Canada for the week numbered 36, which compared with 18 for last week and 29 in the like week of 1909.—Bradstreet's.

ROOSEVELT'S TOUR OF AFRICA AND EUROPE

Strenuous Ex-President Has Spent Fifteen Months in His Remarkable Trip.

IN THE JUNGLE AND AT COURT.

His Triumphs as a Hunter Only Equaled in His Reception by Royalty.

Ex-President Roosevelt's fifteen months' tour abroad has been one of triumph both in the jungles of Africa and in the courts of Europe. The hunting trip, officially known as the Smithsonian African expedition, occupied nearly eleven months of the time. The Smithsonian Institution wanted specimens from the Dark Continent, Mr. Roosevelt was commissioned to obtain them, and he has been most successful. So, there was something back of the strenuous ex-President's desire to hunt big game.

Soon after his successor was inaugurated Colonel Roosevelt bade farewell to a great throng of friends and sailed from New York for Naples. With him were his son Kermit and three naturalists, and stowed in the hold was most of their elaborate outfit for killing or photographing the animals of East Africa and for preserving the specimens destined for the Smithsonian Institution. The Institution paid part of the expenses of the expedition, but Mr. Roosevelt bore the personal expense of himself and son.

Wireless communication was maintained with the steamship Hamburg, which bore the party, and the Colonel found it impossible even in mid-ocean to be lost from the world. At the Azores, and again at Gibraltar, the officials and people insisted on doing him honor, and when he reached Naples the entire populace turned out to greet him.

Flowers and a letter from Emperor William wishing him "good hunting" awaited Mr. Roosevelt when he boarded the German steamship Admiral for Mombasa. A stop was made at Messina to view the earthquake ruins, and there, at King Victor Emmanuel's request, Mr. Roosevelt and Kermit visited the Italian monarch. At Mombasa the party was cordially received, and the Acting Governor, under instructions from the British government, did all in his power to further the plans of the expedition. Mr. Roosevelt and Kermit were licensed to kill lions, and the hunters were otherwise granted unusual privileges. Kermit had trained himself to be the chief photographer of the expedition, but he also turned out to be considerable of a hunter. The party was here joined by R. J. Cunninghame, a veteran African hunter and explorer, and Leslie J. Tarleton, and these two managed the expedition in a most able manner.

Big Hunt Begins.

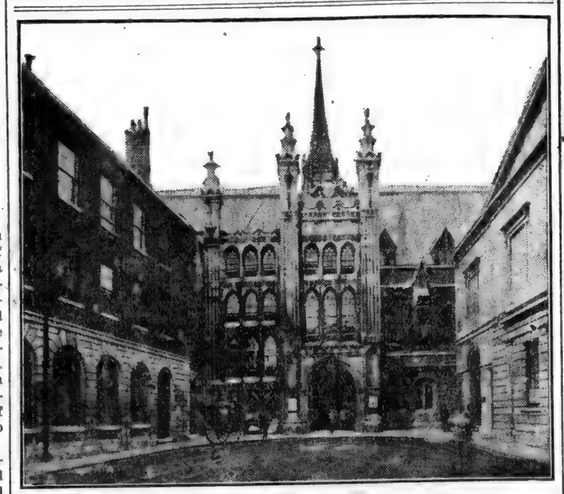
The party next became guests on the ranch of Sir Alfred Pease at Kapitil plains. Here a caravan of over 250 persons was organized and on April 25 Colonel Roosevelt had his first African hunt, during which he bagged a Thompson's gazelle and two other beasts. Five days later the first lions fell victims to the shots of the Roosevelts. After that the big game came fast and cheetahs, giraffes, rhinoceroses and more lions were added to the list, in all fourteen varieties of animals being secured. Meanwhile Kermit was busy with his cameras and the naturalists prepared the specimens.

Several weeks were spent on the ranch of an American named MacMillan and in the surrounding country. Game was plentiful thereabouts and many fine specimens were secured.

Leaving East Africa on December 19, the expedition crossed Uganda and went down the White Nile, getting back to comparative civilization at Gondokoro. There they went aboard a steamer put at their disposal by the Sirdar, and journeyed to Khartum, where Mrs. Roosevelt met her husband, and accompanied him in a leisurely trip to Cairo. During his stay in Egypt Colonel Roosevelt was the recipient of many honors and made several speeches. At the end of March the Roosevelts sailed for Italy.

In a preliminary report to the Smithsonian Institution Mr. Roosevelt summarized the material results of the expedition as follows:

"On the trip Mr. Heller has prepared 1,020 specimens of mammals, the majority of large size; Mr. Loring has prepared 3,163, and Doctor Mearns 714—a total of 4,997 mammals. Of birds, Doctor Mearns has prepared nearly 3,100, Mr. Loring 899, and Mr. Heller about 50—a total of about 4,000 birds.



GUILDHALL, LONDON, WHERE MR. ROOSEVELT SPOKE.

"Of reptiles and batrachians, Messrs. Mearns, Loring and Heller collected about 2,000.

"Of fishes, about 500 were collected. Doctor Mearns collected marine fishes near Mombasa, and fresh water fishes elsewhere in British East Africa, and he and Cuninghame collected fishes in the White Nile.

"This makes, in all, of vertebrates:

Mammals	4,997
Birds (about)	4,000
Reptiles and batrachians (about)	2,000
Fishes (about)	500
Total	11,397

"The invertebrates were collected chiefly by Doctor Mearns, with some assistance from Messrs. Cunninghame and Kermit Roosevelt.

"A few marine shells were collected near Mombasa, and land and freshwater shells throughout the regions visited, as well as crabs, beetles, millipeds, and other invertebrates.

"Several thousand plants were collected throughout the regions visited by Doctor Mearns, who employed and trained for the work a M'nyumnesi named Makangarri, who soon learned how to make very good specimens, and turned out an excellent man in every way.

"Anthropological materials were gathered by Doctor Mearns, with some assistance from others; a collection was contributed by Major Ross, an American in the government service at Nairobi."

Tour Through Europe.

In the tour of Europe the American ex-President desired to be treated as a man of letters and science, rather than as a sportsman, and his desire was gratified. But in addition, Europe insisted on receiving him as the most distinguished American of the time, and everywhere he went honors were showered on him. Emperors, kings, princes and all manner of royalties and nobility greeted him, dined him and toasted him, and the people in all the lands that he visited turned out in vast throngs to see him and cheer him. In Paris, Christiania, Berlin and Oxford Mr. Roosevelt delivered scholarly public addresses and the literary and scientific circles opened to let him in and marveled at the wide scope of his knowledge.

The event connected with Mr. Roosevelt's European tour that aroused the most interest and excitement occurred immediately after his arrival in Italy early in April. Before he left Africa his desire to pay his respects to the pope had been conveyed to the Vatican and the holy father had intimated that he would be glad to see the distinguished American. However, upon his arrival in Rome the Colonel called off the contemplated audience, stating that as an independent American citizen he could not submit to the restrictions that were imposed.

Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt and Kermit were received by the king and queen of Italy and spent some days in that country. The Colonel and his wife visited Venice and traveled once again the Riviera route that they passed over on their honeymoon, and next Mr. Roosevelt visited Vienna and Budapest, where he was given a royal welcome. Paris was next visited and there, on April 23, he lectured in the Sorbonne before a great audience of savants and students. The municipality and its officials, the president of France and various learned societies vied with each other in doing honor to the visitor, and for amusement he was taken to the field of aviation, where he saw some exciting aeroplane flights.

Then, traveling northward by way of Brussels, Amsterdam and Copenhagen, Mr. Roosevelt arrived at Christiania and delivered an address on international peace before the Nobel prize commission, which had awarded to him the Nobel peace prize for his successful efforts to end the Russian-Japanese war. Emperor William had made great plans for the entertainment of the ex-President in Berlin, but the death of King Edward caused the curtailment of the program to a considerable extent.

Having been appointed special ambassador of the United States to attend the funeral of King Edward, Colonel Roosevelt next crossed the channel to England, and when the body of the dead monarch was carried to the tomb he was one of the remarkable crowd of royal personages and distinguished men that followed the gun carriage on which Edward's coffin was borne. After the funeral he was received by King George and Queen Mary and by the widowed queen mother, and in a quiet way made necessary by the mourning of the nation much attention was shown him. This culminated, in London, by a reception in the Guild Hall, at which the freedom of the city in a gold casket was presented to him. He was the guest, thereafter, of several prominent Englishmen, and on June 7 he delivered the Romanes lecture at Oxford, which had been postponed by the demise of the king. This was the most pretentious of all his European addresses and the best.

Mr. Roosevelt was honored by Cambridge University, which conferred upon him the degree of doctor of laws, and the occasion served to demonstrate his popularity with all classes.

After fifteen months abroad the traveler, together with Mrs. Roosevelt, Kermit and Miss Ethel, sailed, June 10, on the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria on their way to New York and the rousing welcome that he knew was awaiting him on the American shore.

FLIES TO PHILADELPHIA WITH EXPRESS SPEED

Charles K. Hamilton Covers 86 Miles from New York in Less than Two Hours.

RACES FAST RAILWAY TRAIN.

Speed of Forty-six Miles an Hour on the Westward Voyage Is Made with Ease.

Charles K. Hamilton, the young aviator who has achieved world-wide fame in less than a year, at Philadelphia Monday made the most daring flight of his career, traveling in his biplane from Governor's Island, N. Y., to a point at the outskirts of Philadelphia, a distance of eighty-six miles, in 113 minutes, unofficial time.

Hamilton flew over Tascony, a suburb, five and three-fifths miles from the start, at 11:39. At 33.46 he passed over Cornwells, eleven and one-half miles from the start. He crossed the Delaware River and passed over Pennsylvania Railroad station here at Trenton, twenty-seven miles from the start, at 12:06 p. m., sailing over the tracks about 400 feet. The atmosphere had cleared and he was plainly visible to the crowd below. The special train passed through Trenton at 12:11 p. m., five minutes behind the aviator.

Hamilton passed a point a mile west of Philadelphia, fifty-one and one-half miles from the start, at 12:34. Train and flying machine were traveling together. To catch up with Hamilton the train is said to have been run seventy-five miles an hour between Trenton and Monmouth junction. The round-trip distance is the longest city to-city flight ever made by an aviator, exceeding the record flights of Curtiss and Paulhan. The speed of the flight was at an average of 1:19 a mile, or about forty-six miles an hour.

A feature of the wonderful achievement was the ease with which the aviator followed a train on the Pennsylvania Railroad running at high speed. According to his program, he flew from Governor's Island to South Elizabeth, N. J., where the train was awaiting his appearance. From that point, town after town along the line reported that the train had passed with Hamilton flying directly over it. At Princeton he went near the old college town, so that students and graduates gathered there for commencement week might have a chance to see him.

CAPITAL FIGHT IN OKLAHOMA.

Victory of Oklahoma City Followed by Riotous Demonstrations.

Scenes such as have not occurred in Oklahoma since the rush of the "sooners" when the land was thrown open to settlers have followed the victory of Oklahoma City in the election to decide the permanent location of the State capital.

Three cities were aspirants for the capital city. They were Oklahoma City, with 50,000 population; Guthrie and Shawnee, cities of about 20,000 population. Each town had its campaign committee and the fight has been pushed for months. The question was voted on at a special election the other day, and it is claimed by adherents of Oklahoma City that the returns from forty of the seventy counties show Oklahoma City has won over Guthrie and Shawnee by 50,000 plurality.

Guthrie was not willing to stand by the decision of the voters, and Judge A. H. Huston of the District Court, on application of Guthrie citizens, issued an injunction against members of the State administration to prevent the removal of State offices to Oklahoma City. When the result of the election became known Oklahoma City's supporters began the moving of the capital. Possession of the State seal was the first step sought. At 1 o'clock in the morning an auto left Oklahoma City with one passenger, W. B. Anthony, private secretary to the governor. It is thirty-five miles from Oklahoma City to Guthrie, but Anthony made it in the dark in less than an hour. When he reached the outskirts of Guthrie he muffled the machine, drove rapidly to the office of the Secretary of State in the temporary capitol, where he seized the seal.

The Governor's daughter had her exciting experience in Guthrie the previous evening. She, with several friends, was among the crowds watching the returns from the voting when Oklahoma City began to pull ahead. Miss Haskell, who is only 17 years old, began to cheer. The crowd, angered by the loss of the capital, jeered and hissed, and then some one threw a stone. Miss Haskell and her party fled to a hotel under a shower of missiles. Later they slipped away secretly and took the first train for Oklahoma City.

CANADA ASKING FOR TREATY.

Desires to Take Up Question of Trade Treaty with United States.

Canada has indicated to the secretary of state its desire to take up as early as possible the negotiation of a trade treaty with the United States. Formal action, however, may be delayed until next autumn because of the expected absence of Finance Minister Fielding and Customs Minister Patterson

The Week in Congress

In connection with the sundry civil bill the Senate Friday listened to a revival of the tariff discussion of last session, Senator Beveridge being the principal speaker. The Indiana Senator spoke in advocacy of the provision of the bill authorizing the expenditure of $25,000 to aid in procuring information looking to the proper administration of the tariff law. He referred to this legislation as the first step toward the tariff commission. Senator Hale declared Mr. Beveridge's purpose to be the destruction of the present tariff law. By a vote of 48 to 71 the House declined to recede from its disagreement from the Senate amendment appropriating for the expenses of an automobile for Speaker Cannon, the same action being pursued in the case of the allowance proposed by the Senate for Vice President Sherman's automobile. All other amendments of the legislative bill were agreed to. The partial conference report on the naval bill was agreed to. The House accepted the proposal of the Senate to build one battle ship in a government navy-yard and a $1,000,000 collier on the Pacific coast. The report of the conferees on the rivers and harbors bill was agreed to, the total appropriations and authorizations being $51,947,718.

Practically the entire day in the Senate Saturday was devoted to a general discussion of the tariff question in connection with the provision in the sundry civil appropriation bill appropriating $250,000 for collecting information bearing on the present tariff law. Senators Clay, Aldrich, Bailey, Hale, Warren, Beveridge, Smoot, Cummins, Heyburn and Dolliver were among the speakers, and the discussion was acrimonious at times. The provision was undisposed of and the discussion will be resumed Monday. The final conference report on the legislative, judicial and executive appropriation was accepted. The House was occupied with private bills.

The Senate Monday listened to a notable address by Senator Dolliver of Iowa in the form of a vigorous defense of the "insurgent" Republican and a reply to the criticisms of them by the President of the United States. The Sundry civil bill, carrying appropriations aggregating $118,000,000, was passed by the Senate. Bills amending the bankruptcy law and requiring land-grand railroads to survey their lands so as to render them amenable to taxation were passed. The entire session of the House was devoted to political speeches delivered during the period permitted for general debate upon the deficiency bill. Representative Nye of Minnesota spoke of optimism and patriotism as powerful factors in the nation at large, referring to the functions of party organizations in the government of the country. Representative Leever of South Caroline advocated legislation to prevent fictitious dealings in future sales of cotton. A defense of Attorney General Wickersham in his attitude toward the Philippine friar lands was made by Mr. Crumpacker of Indiana.

The conference report on the railroad bill was presented to the Senate Tuesday. The Senate divided its attention between the public land withdrawal bill and Senator Owens' motion discharging the committee on privileges and elections from the further consideration of the resolution providing for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people. Action was taken upon neither of these measures. Speeches against the administration's conservation policy were made by Senator Hughes, of Colorado, and Heyburn, of Idaho. The House also received the conference report on the railroad bill, but the greater part of the day was devoted to political speeches. Representative Randell, of Texas, created a sensation by moving that the House recall from the committee on the judiciary a bill to prohibit Senators, Representatives and judges from accepting gifts, compensation, etc., from railroad, telegraph and other similar corporations on the ground that Representative Parker, of New Jersey, chairman, and other members of the committee were accepting such gifts, and by so doing were disqualified from action on such a measure. Mr. Randell, seeking action on his motion as privileged, met opposition and the Speaker sustained a point of order which prevented action upon it. This action was upheld by the House, 121 to 20.

Saved Old Lady's Hair.

"My mother used to have a very bad humor on her head which the doctors called an eczema, and for it I had two different doctors. Her head was very sore and her hair nearly all fell out in spite of what they both did. One day her niece came in and they were speaking of how her hair was falling out and the doctors did it no good. She says, 'Aunt, why don't you try Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment?' Mother did and they helped her. In six months' time the itching, burning and scaling of her head was over and her hair began growing. Today she feels much in debt to Cuticura Soap and Ointment for the fine head of hair she has for an old lady of seventy-four.

"My own case was an eczema in my feet. As soon as the cold weather came my feet would itch and burn and then they would crack open and bleed. Then I thought I would flee to my mother's friends, Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. I did for four or five winters, and now my feet are as smooth as any one's. Watch Your Refrigerator.

You'll save many a doctor bill by watching your refrigerator. Keep it absolutely clean all the time. The best way to clean it is to take clean hot water, make a suds with Easy Task soap and wash every nook and corner in the ice box or refrigerator. Then the food doesn't get smelly and carry disease germs to the table. Easy Task soap, being made of pure cocoanut oil, borax, naptha and clean tallow, is antiseptic as well as cleansing. It is a wonderful soap—and a nickel a cake.

Feeding to the Finish.

Justice Monkey ate all the cheese that he was called upon to divide equally between two joint owners, because at one time he bit a little too much from what was in one scalepan and the next time a little too much from what was in the other. Somewhat similar was the predicament in which a guest at the table of C. H. McCormick, the inventor of the reaper, found himself. The story is told in the recently published book, "Cyrus Hall McCormick."

A very dignified and self-centered military officer was taking supper with the McCormick family. The first course, as usual, was corn meal mush and milk. It was served in Scotch fashion, with the hot mush in one bowl and the cold milk in another. The practice was so to co-ordinate the eating of them that both were finished at the same time.

The officer planned his spoonfuls badly, and was soon out of milk.

"Have some more milk to finish your mush, colonel," said McCormick. Several minutes later the colonel's mush bowl was empty, at which McCormick said, "Have some more mush to finish your milk." And so it went, with milk for the mush and mush for the milk, until the unfortunate colonel was hopelessly incapacitated for the four or five courses that came afterward.

A DOCTOR'S EXPERIENCE.

Medicine Not Needed in This Case.

It is hard to convince some people that coffee does them an injury! They lay their bad feelings to almost every cause but the true and unsuspected one.

But the doctor knows. His wide experience has proven to him that, to some systems, coffee is an insidious poison that undermines the health.

Ask the doctor if coffee is the cause of constipation, stomach and nervous troubles.

"I have been a coffee drinker all my life. I am now 42 years old and when taken sick two years ago with nervous prostration, the doctor said that my nervous system was broken down and that I would have to give up coffee.

"I got so weak and shaky I could not work, and reading your advertisement of Postum, I asked my grocer if he had any of it. He said, 'Yes,' and that he used it in his family and it was all it claimed to be.

"So I quit coffee and commenced to use Postum steadily and found in about two weeks' time I could sleep soundly at night and get up in the morning feeling fresh. In about two months I began to gain flesh. I weighed only 145 pounds when I commenced on Postum and now I weigh 167 and feel better than I did at 20 years of age.

"I am working every day and sleep well at night. My two children were great coffee drinkers, but they have not drank any since Postum came into the house, and are far more healthy than they were before."

Russian Thistle.

An Impurity in Indiana Crop Seed.

Conditions as We Have Them.—On 12 different occasions the seed of Russian Thistle has been found in samples of commercial crop seed sent to the Indiana Branch Seed Laboratory of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, for examination. It has been found in these samples in amounts ranging from 1440 seeds in 16 pounds of alfalfa, or enough ordinarily to sow an acre, up to 33,120 seeds in 16 pounds of alfalfa. Thus far in samples examined here, it has occurred in alfalfa seed only. All the crop seed in which Russian Thistle seed was found was imported from other states. Furthermore the weed itself is known to be growing and reproducing itself in several localities in Indiana.

What the Seed is Like.—Russian Thistle is slightly larger than clover or alfalfa seed. Unless it has been rubbed off, the seed proper will be found to be capped by a thin covering, which is simply the shrivelled and dried outer portion of the flower. This helps to distribute the seed. The shape of the whole body is conical, color light to dark gray, greatest diameter one-twelfth of an inch; height one-twelfth of an inch. Beneath this outer cover is the seed proper, also cone shaped and covered with a nearly transparent membrane, through which the spirally coiled young plant within shows. Moisten and rub off the membrane and see the greenish embryo inside. The broad end of the seed proper is hollowed out more or less. Color of the seed light to dark gray, diameter and height one-sixteenth of an inch.

What the Plant is Like.—It is not really a thistle. It is a tumbleweed, a close relation of the Lamb's Quarters and Pigweed, and like them an annual and a prolific producer of seed, 10,000 to 300,000 per plant. The leaves on young plants are about two inches long slender, and green. As the plant approaches maturity, the leaves fall off and are replaced on the flowering branches by numerous half inch spines; the plant branches, becomes bushy, two feet high and two to six feet in diameter; the outer branches are usually red at maturity. When dry, it breaks off at the ground and is carried hither and thither, far and wide, with every shifting wind, scattering its seed as it goes.

What is to be Done?—1. Learn to know the seed and plant. 2. Examine seed carefully before buying, and buy seed free of Dodder and Russian Thistle. Penty of such seed can be had. 3. Pull up and destroy odd plants that appear in the fields. 4. If infestation is extensive, encourage seeds to germinate, and destroy seedlings; when and how this may be done depends on character of crop on the field. 5. Short rotations, involving clover and well tended cultivated crops, annihilate millions of annual weeds of many kinds.

Bear in mind that to know what to look for, to be prepared to deal with it, and to "nip in the bud" this threatening pest will save Indiana farmers hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Old Settlers'

Meeting Largely Attended Last Thursday at Auburn. Account as given by the Dispatch.

COMES TO ST. JOE NEXT YEAR.

Old Settlers' day broke bright and clear and brought out a large number of the pioneers of our county to renew acquaintances and to listen to the program that was prepared especially for them. The court lawn seats were set apart for them and other seats provided so that all were comfortably cared for.

The early part of the day was spent in a social way. The Auburn City band prevented the time from dragging slowly on by a concert. The republican delegates and visitors coming to the county convention mingled with those coming primarily to attend the old Settlers' meeting so that the early hours of the day passed quickly away and ere they were aware of it the day's exercises were at hand.

President Denison presided at the meeting. In giving the welcome address Mayor Culbertson did credit to himself and the city and certainly the old settlers in whose hands he trusted the keys of our city. Attorney J. E. Pomeroy responded in a happy way, paying tribute to the older ones and holding them up as examples for the present generation.

President Denison appointed the following committee on location and nominations. G. T. Abby, Isaac Gunsenhauser, William Blair, S. L. Widney and J. A. Ralston and the committee made a report favoring St. Joe for the next meeting.

The officers for the coming year are: Sol Barney, president; G. T. Abby, vice president; Bert Patterson, secretary; S. L. Widney, treasurer; A. J. Ralston, biographer.

The speaker of the day, Senator Stephen A. Powers of Angola, arrived at noon from Indianapolis. He was given a hearty reception and close attention during his address. He always has something good to say and in his own characteristic way.

The attendance was large. It was very gratifying to the officers in charge. Nearly 500 enrolled as old settlers.

Sheldon Crooks of Grant township, attended the Old Settlers' meeting this year. He has lived in the county all his life and though one of the oldest settlers, almost a pioneer, he never attended one of their meetings. He certainly has not realized what he missed.

Noticable on the grounds was uncle Simon Dickinson in an invalid chair. No one questions his title to wear the ribbon of an early settler. He was reared in Portage county, Ohio, served through the civil war and in 1866 moved to Waterloo with his family where he has resided with the exception of a few years he spent with a son at Hillsdale, Michigan. Since his discharge he has never been able to do any work on account of injuries received during the civil war. Mr. Dickinson is a leading G. A. R. man and also belongs to the Masonic and I. O. O. F. organizations.

One of the pictured figures in the big crowd was Major Lee F. Weidin of Oklahoma. He claims the title of being an old settler by virtue of having gained a residence in DeKalb county in 1850. His father opened up a farm two miles east of Waterloo. In 1852 the family moved to Auburn and when the war broke out he enlisted in Co. H. of the 30th Indiana and served until peace was declared. He has been a resident of Oklahoma for a number of years where he owns a large tract of land. He is a tall man in rugged health and shakes hands with the grit of a giant.

Last Friday two men were hurt while picking up old steel on the B. & O. The train had cut off two cars when they started to work and in a short time they were compelled to get in the clear to allow a freight to pass. The signals were given and they immediately backed up the track at good speed, forgetting that they had left a couple cars behind them. In a few minutes they collided with the cars and as it happened one car contained a bunch of men and when they struck it the men were piled up in great shape. Two of the number were injured and one quite seriously, so that he was sent home to Defiance on the noon train, the other receiving a cut in his chin. It was purely carelessness that it happened and might have been quite serious.

Base Ball

An interesting ball game was pulled off here last Saturday at the slaughter house park. Leo came up with a strong bunch of hitters, but as Spencerville had not been in the habit of being defeated this year, it was necessary that they get to work in order to hold their record, and as a result the score was 15 to 2. The score indicates a poor game but two innings being free from errors. Pitchers Treece and Allen were in good form and both registered up 15 strikeouts Allen put them across in such shape that they could not see them, allowing only 6 hits. Treece, our young pitcher, held them down to four hits in the last four innings. Treece's homerun and the raw chewing disposition of the visitors were the main features of the game.

A WOMAN'S GREAT IDEA

is how to make herself attractive. But, without health, it is hard for her to be lovely in face, form or temper. A weak, sickly woman will be nervous and irritable. Constipation and kidney poisons show in pimples, blotches, skin eruptions and a wretched complexion. But Electric Bitters always prove a godsend to women who want health, beauty and friends. They regulate Stomach, Liver and Kidneys, purify the blood; give strong nerves, bright eyes, pure breath, smooth, velvety skin, lovely complexion, good health. Try them. 50c at H. L. Dunkle.

K. of P's. Memorial.

The annual memorial and decoration services of the K. of P. and Pythian Sisters lodge at this place was held last Sunday from their hall. This service was in every sense of the word the best ever conducted by the orders. Nearly all the members including the many friends of the order were present and the hall was well filled. An excellent program was rendered. The Grabill band furnished the music out-of-doors. A chorus furnished the music in the hall. Revs. Hitchner and Erick delivered the addresses of the day. Both speakers delivered notable addresses aiming to exhort the Knights to a closer brotherhood and to refute all erroneous ideas concerning the true functions of the order. The members of the order including a procession of vehicles ½ of a mile in length were led to the cemetery by the band where other ceremonies were held and the decorating of the graves took place. A good attendance from the St. Joe order was present.

MODERN CONVENIENCES.

Most of Them Were Made to Meet Modern Inconveniences.

Comparison between the happiness of humanity in different ages or different lands is most difficult, says a writer in an English publication. Macaulay and the old optimistic Whigs were quite satisfied with saying that the meanest artisan now has conveniences that were unknown to Kings. But they forget that very often the modern conveniences only mean things made to meet modern conveniences. An artisan can go to a scientific steam laundry and have his linen collar re-starched; if you call that convenience. But if Gurth the Swineherd had been made to wear a starched collar he would have fallen on his knees and implored his lord to lift the burden and give him his brass collar back again. A refined gentleman of Queen Anne's reign could have the luxury of being shaved with scented soap. But a gentleman of Queen Elizabeth's reign could have the greater luxury of growing a beard.

Those who praise mere civilization (or the morbid modern form of it) are always pointing out the desolate state of various rude societies. They say, "The Zulus have no good eye-glasses." They do not remember that the Zulus have good eyes instead. They cry aloud, "The Ojibways fell on their knees with wonder and terror on first beholding a button-hook." They do not add that the Ojibways were thrown into agonies on first trying to wear buttoned boots. They say "Over the vast, drear expanse of the Arabian desert not a bootblack is to be seen;" they do not add that the Arabs are much too sensible to want their boots blacked. It may be questioned whether the increase of medical advertisements mean the increase of health. It is a disputable matter whether the number of London hoardings devoted to soap means that the English are a clean nation or that they are a dirty one.

MOTHERS WHO HAVE DAUGHTERS

Find Help in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Hudson, Ohio.—"If mothers realized the good your remedies would do delicate girls I believe there would be fewer weak and ailing women. Irregular and painful periods and such troubles would be relieved at once in many cases. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is fine for ailing girls and run-down women. Their delicate organs need a tonic and the Compound gives new ambition and life from the first dose."—Mrs. GEORGE STRICKLER, Hudson, Ohio, R. No. 5, Box 39.

Hundreds of such letters from mothers expressing their gratitude for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished for them have been received by the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company, Lynn, Mass.

Young Girls, Heed This.

Girls who are troubled with painful or irregular periods, backache, headache, dragging-down sensations, fainting spells or indigestion, should take immediate action to ward off the serious consequences and be restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Thousands have been restored to health by its use.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

"Maw" and "Paw."

In judging poetry much depends on the context and the manner in which the verse is read. Lippincott's Magazine has a story which is distinctly "on" the associate literary editor of a certain paper. The associate came into his chief's sanctum, asking, "What should you say if a man sent you in a verse like this?

"Help us to save free conscience from the paw
Of hireling wolves, whose Gospel is their maw."

The literary editor—who was a young editor—burst into roars of laughter.

"What do you think of it?" the other persisted, grinning. "Look at that rime—'paw' and 'maw.' The question of parental origin seems to be rather involved. I'm glad I don't write such stuff."

"Who did?" asked the literary editor.

"I don't know," said the other.

"His name was Milton, first name John," said the literary editor, "and those are the last two lines of a sonnet he composed in 1652. Look it up and see for yourself."

CHAPTER III.

We cannot be always mourning with those who mourn, or rejoicing with those who rejoice; for, if we could, our lives would be spent in a perpetual state of hysterics, which would altogether incapacitate us for the performance of our daily duties. Yet every now and then we receive a disagreeable shock when we find that we have unconsciously and in a figurative sense been dancing over the graves of our friends, and it was certainly an unfortunate and incongruous circumstance that while the Dean of St. Cyprian's was gasping his life out in his solitary room at Oxford, his nephew should have been enjoying himself very much at a cheery London dinner-party.

General Moore's dinners were always cheery. The General liked seeing his friends, of whom he had plenty, and his wife liked entertaining. Perhaps the skill and tact displayed in the selecting and assorting of the guests who assembled so constantly in the house in Cromwell Road should be credited rather to her than to him. She was his second wife and his junior by something more than twenty years, her step-daughter Susie being now eighteen. She had four small children of her own; but that did not prevent her from being an excellent step-mother, as step-mothers go, and resolved to do her very best for Susie, who had made her formal entrance into society at the last Drawing-room. That is to say, that whenever she issued invitations for a dinner-party, she took care to consult Susie's interests by the inclusion of at least one eligible young man in the list.

On this particular occasion she had two; namely, Mr. Frederick Musgrave, and Captain Claughton of the Fourth Life Guards, to both of whom had been assigned parts in the private theatricals which were to take place later in the evening. As for Captain Claughton, it was perhaps going a little bit too far to describe him as strictly eligible, for he was not his father's eldest son; and young fellows in the Household Brigade are only too apt to spend a good deal of money which they do not possess. Mr. Musgrave, however, was certainly all right. It was well known that he would in due season inherit the fortune of his uncle, the Dean of St. Cyprian's, an old man in failing health, who, as Mrs. Moore had heard upon the best authority, had been economising more than half of his income for many years past. Mr. Musgrave, therefore, might be encouraged with a clear conscience, and of late Mr. Musgrave had received as much encouragement as any young man could wish for. These theatricals, for instance, had been got up entirely by his wish and under his supervision. He knew something about theatrical matters, for he was the author of a little comedy which had been accepted by a London manager, and was even now being performed nightly; besides which he had, when at Oxford, been somewhat notorious as an amateur actor.

Trim, slim Captain Claughton, with his closely cut black hair, his slight moustache, his perfectly fitting clothes, and his eye-glass, assumed during dinner a certain air of confidential familiarity in talking to Miss Moore which struck the other young man as rather offensive. As, however, the other young man was very good-natured and easy-going, he did not lose his temper, but only wondered whether Miss Moore really liked that sort of thing, and hoped she didn't, and was a little bit afraid that she did.

Susie Moore, though not likely to achieve renown by reason of her beauty, had been pronounced to be "decidedly upon the pretty side" by her step-mother. "She has points," that unbiased critic had declared. "Of course, if you take her piecemeal, there isn't much to be said for her; but she has a genuine complexion, and her hair and eyes are of a rather nice shade of brown, and the general effect is quite pleasing. Besides, she is as good as gold."

The latter encomium may have been what had aroused the interest of Captain Claughton, who had dawdled through many London seasons. Possibly also it may have been that which had attracted Fred Musgrave; though he was a man of quite another type, and had fewer opportunities of discovering its rarity.

He himself might almost have been cited as coming under the same denomination. Notwithstanding his twenty-seven years, he had remained to most intents and purposes a boy. He was liable to be carried away by occasional enthusiasms, such as his present craze for the drama; he had a fine, healthy belief in his fellow-creatures, nearly all of whom he liked, and, having always been extremely popular, he had fallen into the habit of taking his own way and expecting that other people would see the reasonableness of making their convenience suit his. In respect of personal appearance he had the advantage of Captain Claughton, being tall, broad-shouldered, and handsome, with curly, fair hair, blue eyes, and regular features. In a vague sort of way he was understood to be clever, though it cannot be said that he had as yet done much to earn that reputation, save by the production of the comedy above-mentioned.

CHAPTER IV.

When one has such a number of things to make one happy, as health, strength, good looks, popularity, and a rich uncle, one must be abnormal indeed if one does not enjoy life, and Fred Musgrave enjoyed it thoroughly. He enjoyed General Moore's dinner, in spite of the slight disturbance of equilibrium which has been alluded to; he enjoyed making preparations for the play afterwards, and giving last instructions to Susie, whom he had been carefully drilling during the previous fortnight; and most of all he enjoyed the play itself, which proved an unbroken triumph for him from beginning to end. Captain Claughton, to be sure, had to figure in it as Susie's loved; the exigencies of the piece demanded that. But Captain Claughton's histrionic abilities were but slender, and though he got through his part respectably, he did not throw much animation into it or obtain much applause from his audience. Fred, on the other hand, was applauded loudly, and a great many flattering things were said both of and to him, after the conclusion of the performance, which was succeeded by what Mrs. Moore was pleased to call "a little impromptu dance."

"Fine young fellow, that young Musgrave!" one of her guests remarked to her as she stood in the doorway, smiling benignly upon the dancers; "one doesn't often see such a happy combination of brains and physique. Pity he has no regular occupation."

"Well, perhaps," agreed Mrs. Moore, indulgently; "but he seems to be able to make plenty of occupations for himself, and he will never be under the necessity of working for his living, I suppose."

Mrs. Moore's friend, who was a middle-aged gentleman of large experience, shook his head with a skeptical smile. "I understand that he is entirely dependent upon his uncle, Dean Musgrave, the most cantankerous, cross-grained old wretch in the three kingdoms. Suppose his uncle were to take it into his head to cut him off with a shilling to-morrow!"

"Oh, but he would never do such a wicked thing!" exclaimed Mrs. Moore, quite shocked.

"There is no saying what an old man may not do," returned the other, impressively. "Besides, hasn't old Musgrave got a prodigal son somewhere or other, whom he kicked out of doors in days gone by?"

"Oh, no, I don't think so," answered Mrs. Moore; "I never heard a word about his having had any children."

"Well, I have. Upon second thoughts I'm not sure that it wasn't a prodigal daughter. Anyhow, there was somebody."

Mrs. Moore made a mental note of the alleged circumstance, and meanwhile Fred, unconscious of the disagreeable possibilities which were being forecast on his behalf, was dancing with pretty little Susie Moore. It so chanced that when their waltz was over, and when he had led her into the apology for a conservatory which adjoined the ball-room, she began, in the innocence of her heart, to question him about his present manner of life and his plans for the future, of which she was even more ignorant than her mother.

"My present ambition," he informed her, "is to develop into a dramatic author. That is a very respectable sort of ambition, it seems to me, though my uncle thinks differently."

"Your uncle and you generally do think differently, don't you? That must be rather disagreeable for you," said Susie.

"Oh, I'm accustomed to it, and I don't mind. Every now and then we have a quarrel—we are supposed to be in the midst of a quarrel at present—but it blows over after a bit, and we go on as before."

"Does that mean that you always end by doing what you wish?"

"Well, pretty much; but then I never wish to do what he has any business to dislike."

"I should think he must have been very kind to you," observed Susie, after a moment of reflection; "you seem to live only to amuse yourself."

"Oh, Miss Moore, what a cruel think to say! My amusements are quite healthy and innocent. I play cricket; I shoot a little, when I get the chance; I hunt a little, if anybody is good enough to give me a mount; and sometimes I take a part in private theatricals. There's no harm in all that, is there?"

"No; only I should have thought that, with your talents, you might have been better employed."

"I know what you mean; I ought to have a profession. Now, I'll tell you exactly how that matter stands. Shortly after I matriculated my uncle gave me my choice of the professions which he said were the only ones open to a gentleman. There weren't a great many of them. The navy, of course, was out of the question; so that there remained the army, the church, the bar, and diplomacy. I chose the army. He said, very well; only I must take my degree first—which practically disposed of that. Diplomacy wouldn't do, because of my ignorance of foreign languages; I didn't feel that I had any vocation for the church; and accordingly I swallowed the requisite number of dinners and became a barrister. But the study of the law is simply loathsome to me, whereas I really do think that I have some little turn for the composition of dramatic dialogue. Consequently I write plays instead of pleading cases."

"And is he very angry with you?"

"Oh, he says he never was so disgusted and disappointed in all his life. He has been quite as much disgusted and disappointed scores of times before, and he will continue to be so to his dying day."

"But don't you think you ought to try and do what he would like" asked Susie.

"That would be an impossible ideal to strive after, because nobody has ever yet discovered what he would like. I would a great deal rather try to do what you would like, Miss Moore."

"I? Oh, but I am not your uncle."

"Let us assume, for the sake of argument, that you are my aunt; you will find me a dutiful and submissive nephew."

Susie declined the responsibility which it was sought to thrust upon her; yet, on being a little further pressed, she did not refuse to state what—supposing that she had any reason to feel a personal interest in Mr. Musgrave's career—she would desire on his behalf. A man, she thought, ought always to set some definite object before himself and work toward it; but she admitted that the circumstance of his being a barrister does not compel him to keep one eye forever fixed upon the woolsack. One may very well deserve to be Lord Chancellor without attaining to that dignity, whereas one can scarcely become the most successful dramatic author of the period without deserving it. Therefore the ambitious playwriter is rather more likely to reach his goal than the ambitious barrister, while both ambitions must be pronounced equally legitimate.

Now, anybody can guess what course a conversation thus initiated was sure to take, and if Fred Musgrave, when he left the house, had not declared his love to Susie Moore, that was because he was a conscientious young man, and knew that he had no business to propose to any one without having previously obtained his uncle's permission to do so. And so, as he was being driven in a hansom toward the chambers in St. James' where he dwelt, he whistled light-heartedly and had visions of a happy future. He would go down to Oxford the very next day, he resolved, and make it up with his uncle.

After having reached his destination he ran upstairs, and on the table he espied the telegram from the Master of All Saints, which had been lying there for the last six hours or more.

"Come here as soon as you can. Your uncle is dangerously ill."

The young man was startled. He had heard nothing of this illness, and was quite unprepared for a summons which, unfortunately, he could not at once obey. The first train for Oxford would leave at 5:30, and it was now nearer 3 than 2 o'clock. It was hardly worth while to go to bed, so he changed his clothes, packed up a few things, and waited until it was time to start. Upon further reflection he did not feel very much alarmed, his temperament always inclining him to hope for the best; still, although the delay which had occurred in his departure was due to no fault of his, he was sorry about it and afraid that the old man might set him down as heartless. As a matter of fact he was really fond of the old man—more so, perhaps, than the old man had been of him. But that is a point which can never be decided; for the secret of Dean Musgrave's affections, supposing that he possessed any, remained in his own keeping and died with him.

MAXIM PROVES HIS SKILL.

Inventor Has Only One Arm, But He Is Expert With the Auto.

Hudson Maxim, the inventor of explosives, is an auto fiend and drives his own machine despite the fact that he has only one arm. He drives at express speed along the crookedest roads in New Jersey, where his summer home is located, and when he first began this practice the farmers in the neighborhood complained to the authorities at Trenton that Maxim was a public menace. It was pointed out in the complaint that high speeding was bad enough where the driver had two hands, but where he had but one there was no knowing what might happen.

Maxim was summoned to Trenton to show cause why he should be allowed to keep his license. He drove down to Trenton in his car to meet the inspector who had been detailed to examine him. A lot of stakes and barrels had been placed at angles dangerous for tires, and in all manner of crooks and turns on the testing grounds, and Mr. Maxim, on seeing these, drove at them before the inspector could say a word and threaded the maze with both ease and speed.

"Well, you've stood the test, Mr. Maxim," said the inspector, crossing over to him.

"Why, was that the test?" said the inventor. "I thought it was only a sort of beginning. Get in with me and I'll drive up the capitol steps if you say so."

"No, no," interposed the inspector. "Keep your license, Mr. Maxim. You are as good a driver as if you had four hands."

Maxim is fond of declaring that he has done more toward bringing universal peace than any man alive, "for," he says, "the use of such terrible explosives as I have invented will make more for peace than all the homilies that can be delivered."

His Wife's Triumph.

It has been the fate of many men of letters to have ill health bearing them down as they struggle on toward literary achievements. Thus beset in recent times were Stevenson, Richard Jeffries and J. R. Green. Each of these, it happened, had a high-hearted wife to keep him up, even to help him with the actual labor of writing. "The Life and Letters of J. R. Green" show forth a great and sweet man. They show, too, a wife whose sympathy and fortitude helped to make his accomplishment possible.

In copying the vast amount of manuscript of her husband's books Mrs. Green contracted writer's cramp and was forced to stop using her right hand. This looked like a final obstacle in the way of the invalid, who did much of his thinking in bed and could not write himself. But Mrs. Green set to work at once learning to write with her left hand.

One of her first practice pages, which she was about to destroy with the rest, her husband took quietly and put in his pocket. Years afterward when ill health seemed unbearable and in discouragement he felt that he could not work he used to take out that piece of paper, a living record of his wife's triumph over difficulty. When he saw the painful, patient strokes by which Mrs. Green had learned to write with her left hand he could work on with something near to inspiration.

News has been received of fighting in the Kagoro and Attakka districts of northern Nigeria. Bees play an important part in warfare with these Nigerian tribes. The pine is the greatest American tree. It has been of the widest use, is most in demand, and has enriched its tens of thousands of men. The most fashionable tourist and health resorts in the south are in the "piney woods" regions—vide Aiken, S. C.; Pinehurst, N. C.; Thomasville, Ga., and others. It is the resinous quality of the ozone that attracts the health and pleasure seekers. Also the piney woods country affords the finest of fruits, vegetables and melons. Living is cheap among the pines, health good and the people well fed.—Dallas (Tex.) News.

Wearing a black lace evening gown and a gorgeous blue and gold mandarin coat, Mrs. James Frothington Hunnewell of Boston attracted much attention the other night by puffing at a cigarette as she promenaded Powell street with her husband and another escort. Mrs. Hunnewell had on her famous pearls, which are said to be the envy of the women of the smart set of the Hub, and as the smoke from her cigarette played in wreaths around her uncovered head she presented one of the most dazing figures seen in the cafe district of San Francisco in a long time.—San Francisco Call.

The Express of London says that another word must be added to the dictionary of gardening. "This is "calouriculture," the name of an entirely new system of horticulture, which has recently been developed, and bids fair not only to replace the form of intensive culture of the French school, but to revolutionise the present system of fruit and vegetable forcing. While it is nearly customary to look for extreme and favorable developments in the line of soil cultivation, through French means, says the Scientific American, to us in the United States, who have not the garden habit quite so strongly as obtains in France, it comes as a surprise that the inventor of the new method is a Briton, Dr. F. Alexander Barton, Fellow of the Royal Society.

WESTERN CANADA

Senator Dolliver, of Iowa, says:

"The stream of emigrants from the United States to Canada will continue."

Senator Dolliver recently paid a visit to Western Canada, and says: "There is a land-hunger in the hearts of English speaking people; this will account for the removal of so many Iowa farmers to Canada. Our people are pleased with its Government and the excellent administration of law, and they are coming to you in tens of thousands, and they are still coming."

Iowa contributed largely to the 70,000 American farmers who made Canada their home during 1909. Field crop returns alone during year added to the wealth of the country upwards of

$170,000,000.00

Grain growing, mixed farming, cattle raising and dairying are all profitable. Free Homesteads of 160 acres are to be had in the very best districts. 160 acre pre-emptions at $3.00 per acre within certain areas. LAND IN CANADA AN INVESTMENT

WORK IT, AND SECURE 20 PER CENT. ON THE EXPENDITURE.

Farm lands in Canada increased in value this Spring from fifteen to twenty per cent, and as a result of this increase thousands of those who have gone there within the past few years have had that much more value added to their holdings. There is proof here that as a field for investment there is nowhere to be found a more profitable one than in purchasing farm lands in Canada. And, as a field for occupation and working the farms there is nowhere on the continent where more satisfactory return is given. The crops are always sure and the prices are always good. With railroads entering and traversing all the settled parts, there are very few districts in which the farmer will be more than from ten to twelve miles from a railway station. Roads are good, and big loads are easily handled. The price of getting grain to the primary market is low on this account, and then in reaching the world's markets the railways have their rates controlled by the Government, and what may be considered a fair deal is certain. Good prices for all kinds of grain is the rule, and if the investor has made good money by the increased value given to his unworked land, it is not difficult to understand that the profit to the man who works his land is just that much more, and there will be no depreciation. The man who holds a free homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land, which he got for $10 as an entry fee, has land which at its lowest estimate is worth $10 an acre—yes, $15 an acre—the moment he has completed his three years' residence duties. It will continue to increase in value until its earning power gives a reasonable interest on a certain sum. That is, if he takes off the land fifteen to twenty dollars per acre clear profit each year, his land is worth to him, at a fair rate of interest, $200 an acre. If he only realizes $10 an acre clear profit, it is worth $100 per acre. Now, thousands of farmers are duplicating these figures. The price of land in Canada to-day is much less than its realizing value. The fact that the fifty thousand Americans who went to Canada year before last were followed by one hundred thousand last year offers some evidence, and good evidence, too, that there is getting to be a pretty fair knowledge that money is to be made in Canada lands. As an investment money is to be made, but more by living upon the land, secured either by homestead or purchase. The one hundred thousand of last year will be one hundred and fifty thousand this year. These comprise people from every state in the Union, and it is just being realized the asset that awaits the homeseeker in Canada. The large numbers that have gone, though, makes no appreciable difference in the supply of land. There is still left vast quantities of the best of it. But the longer a delay is made in arriving at a decision, the price will advance proportionately, and the more desirable homesteads near the railway lines become more difficult to secure. The Government publishes interesting literature, which may be had on application to any of the agents whose offices are located at different points through the States, and they (the agents) will be pleased to assist in any way possible in the choice of location.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Mrs. Michael Piapes, of Lafayette, was bitten about the hands and arms to-day by a mad dog, and, it is alleged, was found to have been suffering with the rabies. There is an epidemic of rabies in the county and fifteen people are taking the treatment. Scores of dogs have been killed by the authorities.

With both the Grand Army and Sons of Veterans state encampments to be held in Richmond at the same time next spring, the Young Men's Business Club, which extended the invitations, has a big contract on hand and the preliminary work is to begin early. The finances for the undertaking are already assured.

Miss Imo G. Quarterman, age sixteen, committed suicide last week by swallowing carbolic acid, at the home of her sister, Mrs. Dennis Coleman, in Bedford. She had been suffering from goitre, which had begun to show plainly on her neck, and the fear that the diesase would cause her to be an invalid is said to have caused her to end her life.

Miss Amelia Siebe, aged thirty years, daughter of Chris Siebe, of Petersburg, committed suicide in the jail, where she had been placed until she could be removed to the insane asylum at Evansville. She tore up her underwear and made a rope. Putting her head through the noose, she jumped off the bed, breaking her neck. Five weeks ago she returned from Cincinnati, where she had lived for the past ten years.

Howard Stanley, living near Pittsboro, has been exhibiting an apple blossom which is a novelty. It is about four times as large as the ordinary bloom and looks and smells like a rose, but Mr. Stanley is ready to take oath that the blossom and the twig to which it is attached were taken from an apple tree at his home, and there are apple leaves on the twig to bear out the statement. Another remarkable thing is the lateness of the tree in blooming.

Sportsmen are looking forward to what promises to be an unusually good season for squirrels. Not in recent years have squirrels been as numerous in the vicinity of Morocco, and farmers in the Kankakee country say the same is true in that region. Quails did not suffer from the heavy sleet of last winter to the extent predicted at the time by hunters, and a substantial increase over last year in the number of these birds may be looked for this season.

A petition asking for an election to decide whether or not Jasonville should incorporate as a city was presented to the town board at its regular meeting. The petition was turned down, making the third time it has been rejected. The first of the three petitions was accepted at first and an election was called for on May 2 by the old town board, which went out of office the first of the year. The new town officials have rejected the petition each time it has come up.

Dr. Pepper, of Mt. Carmel, has a shipment of Wabash river pearls valued at $80,000. He bought them from musel gatherers along the river between Grayville and Mt. Carmel. Dr. Pepper has been engaged in buying pearls for a New York firm since the pearl hunting industry started several years ago. Every summer representatives of pearl dealers in Paris journey to this country and buy all the Wabash pearls they can find. The Wabash gem is particularly admired in Europe.

"Rat-Killing Day" was observed throughout Gibson County recently, and Ward Mitchell, twenty-two, living west of there, is in a serious condition. Mitchell was standing on a pile of boards when a rat ran under his feet. Two dogs jumped at it from opposite directions and collided between Mitchell's legs. In the melee he was thrown on his back and the scrambling of the dogs jarred a heavy timber down on him. He sustained a fractured arm, while a rusty spike tore a deep hole in his back and one of the dogs accidentally bit his hand. The rat in the meantime got away. Thousands of rats, mostly in the farm districts, were killed, and many rat harbors were torn out and cleaned up.

Mrs. Zelpha Feaster, wife of Charles Feaster, of Lafayette, was burned to death by the explosion of an incubator lamp at Eldon, Mo., where she was visiting her mother. Mrs. Feaster was formerly Miss Zelpha Walters, a popular telephone operator of Lafayette, and was married about two years ago. She left here last week to visit her mother. Mrs. Feaster's mother was engaged in the chicken business and the daughter went into an incubator to examine the lamp with which the eggs were kept heated. Without warning the lamp exploded and the woman became enveloped in flames, her burns causing death a few hours later. She was only nineteen, and besides the husband is survived by a baby.

What is thought to be the largest fish ever caught in White River was brought to Petersburg by local fishermen. It was of the mudcat species, weighing ninety-two pounds, and was caught where the east and west forks empty into the main stream, four miles north of the city.

A committee of Petersburg business men met recently and decided to celebrate the Fourth of July by holding automobile races for amateurs at the old fair grounds race track. This will be the first automobile race meet ever held in Southern Indiana, and, it is thought, will attract wide attention.

Mrs. Albert Fouty, of Franklin County; Mrs. William Fouty and Mrs. Gideon Huffman, the latter two from Brandywine Township, were driving in Fairland when their horse frightened at a Big Four train and ran almost a mile before stopping. The women were thrown out and Mrs. Albert Fouty was badly injured, her recovery being doubtful.

John Pruitt, thirty-five, while riding on a bicycle, was run down by an automobile driven by Warren Harrel, at Columbus, and is believed to be fatally injured. He suffered three broken ribs and a serious scalp wound. When the accident occurred Harrel was hurrying to an electric brougham, owned by Joseph Irwin, millionaire banker, that was on fire.

The executive committee for the annual reunion of the White River Valley Soldiers' and Sailors' Association has obtained the Rev. Dan Ryan, of Hymera, to deliver the principal address at the reunion to be held in Martinsville on August 25. The veterans will be treated to an automobile ride again this year, and the route, as now planned, covers about twelve miles.

George Ryan was assisting in tearing down an old brick building in Edinburg recently and was standing on a scaffold when some of the wall above him gave way and he was knocked to the ground. One leg was broken, another bruised, his head and back were cut and he was injured internally. The man cannot recover. He is thirty-one years of age and resides in Jackson Township, Shelby County.

State Fish and Game Commissioner Z. T. Sweeney, of Columbus, emphatically denies the reports sent out from Fort Wayne that he said that he would remain in office until the first of the year, or that he would hold the office until the salary was raised. He says that he has never at any time said he would retain the office he has resigned, and that his resignation will be effective just as soon as Governor Marshall appoints a man to take his place.

Charles Allison, of Nashville, relates a peculiar experience with a snake and an owl. He was walking along the creek carrying his gun, when he noticed a large owl sitting in an old dead tree. He shot three times and says he knew he hit the bird each time, as it would drop its wings when he discharged the gun. On going closer to the tree he found why the owl did not fall. A large blacksnake had wound around the bird, and had its head hanging down the tree. He shot the snake, then the owl and reptile both fell into the water.

Near Hebron Church, on the northern border of Clark County, lives one of the oldest married couples in this part of the country. Thomas Montgomery and Mary E. Blizzard were married December 26, 1848, more than sixty-one years ago. The husband is ninety years old, and his wife is ten years his junior. They are both in good health, and the aged man still works in the field. Their descendants number well over one hundred, including eight children living of a family of eleven, seventy-two grandchildren and thirty-two great-grandchildren.

Alonzo Pace, a farmer living west of Bedford, is in receipt of a letter containing "conscience money" from a man who lived in Bedford years ago. The letter contained a one dollar bill. More than twenty years ago Mr. Pace raised many watermelons for market and from the letter, the man, who was then a boy, invaded the farmer's patch and helped himself. This the writer says has caused him much worry and his conscience has troubled him so since reaching manhood that he could stand it no longer and inclosed the money that he knew would cover the value of the melons he had taken when a boy.

At the barn of Dr. J. M. Miller, a veterinary surgeon of Fort Recovery, a horse belonging to Bert Kimble, of Noble Township, is being treated following an unusual operation. The animal became choked on oats several days ago and in an effort to relieve its suffering Frank Bash, a neighbor, ran the small end of a buggy whip down the horse's throat. The horse bit the whip in two, and the end stuck in its throat. Dr. Miller was sent for, but found the foreign substance too far down to be reached with his instruments. To remove it Dr. Miller was compelled to make an incision near the shoulder, through which the obstruction was taken out. Following the operation the animal was taken to Fort Recovery, where it is under the veterinarian's care. It will recover.

Miss Minnie Hawkins, age seventeen, of Bedford, who was accidentally shot by her sister, Mrs. Grace Meadows, two weeks ago, is dead of her wounds.

Thomas Green, a mussel gatherer, found a twenty-three grain fresh water pearl in the Wabash river at Crowleyville. He asked $500 for the gem and sold it to a New York buyer three hours later. Green is regarded as a lucky fisherman, having sold $800 worth of pearls and slugs this season.

The Overland
The Simplest Car

The wonderful sale of the Overland—greater than any other car ever knew—is largely due to simplicity. The man who runs his own car wants a trouble-proof car.

We are turning out 140 such cars every day, but we never yet have been able to make as many as people wanted.

Easy to Operate

The Overlands operate by pedal control. One goes backward or forward, fast or slow, by simply pushing pedals. It is as simple as walking, and the hands are left free to steer.

The Overland has fewer parts than any other automobile. One part is made to take the place of many. It is free from complexities. The operations are all automatic.

A novice could run an Overland from coast to coast the first time he tried. One of these cars has run 7,000 miles without stopping the engine.

Very Low Prices

The Overlands are made—as watches are made—by modern automatic machinery. And we devote a whole factory to one model alone.

Because of these facts, and our enormous output, we give more for the money than anyone else. We have cut the cost 20 per cent in the past year alone.

We now sell a 25-horsepower Overland for $1,000 in roadster style, or for $1,100 with tonneau. The car has a 102-inch wheel base, and is easily capable of 50 miles an hour.

We sell a 40-horsepower Overland for $1,250. Other Overland models cost $1,300, $1,400 and $1,500. All prices include gas lamps and magneto.

You will find no car that compares with an Overland at anywhere near its price.

The Car You'll Want

Cook in Comfort

You no longer need wear yourself out with the weakening heat of an intensely hot kitchen. You can cook in comfort.

Here is a stove that gives no outside heat. All its heat is concentrated at the burners. An intense blue flame (hotter than either white or red) is thrown upwards but not around. All the heat is utilized in cooking—none in outside heating.

New Perfection
WICK BLUE FLAME
Oil Cook-stove

entirely removes the discomfort of cooking. Apply a match and immediately the stove is ready. Instantly an intense heat is projected upwards against the pot, pan, kettle or boiler, and yet there is no surrounding heat—no smell—no smoke.

Cautionary Note: Be sure you get this stove—see that the name-plate reads "New Perfection."

Why? Because The New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove is scientifically and practically perfect. You cannot use too much wick—it is automatically controlled. You get the maximum heat—no smoke. The burner is simple. One wipe with a cloth cleans it—consequently there is no smell.

The New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove is wonderful for year-round use, but especially in summer. Its heat operates upward to pan, pot, or kettle, but not beyond or around. It is useless for heating a room.

It has a Cabinet Top with shelf for keeping plates and food hot.

It has long turquoise-blue enamel chimneys. The nickel finish, with the bright blue of the chimneys, makes the stove ornamental and attractive. Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without Cabinet.

"When I was a kid," said Uncle Jerry Peebles, "I used to hear of a turrible animal they called the glasticutas. Then ther' was another one, 'most as big as an elephant, with long horns and an ugly disposition, that went by the name of the bovalapus. I never seen either of 'em, and the fact that Roosevelt is comin' back from Africa without havin' shot any glasticutas or any bovalapus satisfies me, b'gosh, that ther' ain't no such animals in existence, and never was, b'gosh!"—Chicago Tribune.

The Fountain Head of Life Is The Stomach

A man who has a weak and impaired stomach and who does not properly digest his food will soon find that his blood has become weak and impoverished, and that his whole body is improperly and insufficiently nourished.

Dr. PIERCE'S GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY makes the stomach strong, promotes the flow of digestive juices, restores the lost appetite, makes assimilation perfect, invigorates the liver and purifies and enriches the blood. It is the great blood-maker, flesh-builder and restorative nerve tonic. It makes men strong in body, active in mind and cool in judgement.

This "Discovery" is a pure, glyceric extract of American medical roots, absolutely free from alcohol and all injurious, habit-forming drugs. All its ingredients are printed on its wrappers. It has no relationship with secret nostrums. Its every ingredient is endorsed by the leaders in all the schools of medicine. Don't accept a secret nostrum as a substitute for this time-proven remedy of known composition. Ask your neighbors. They must know of many cures made by it during past 40 years, right in your own neighborhood. World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N. Y.

They were a beautiful and kind remembrance and Mrs. Sherer was greatly pleased with them and expresses her thanks accordingly.

Used to It.

"John Strange Winter, Frank Danby and Helen Mathers, three well-known English novelists, have given up novel writing for the good reason that they can't make any money at it."

The speaker, a publisher of New York, smiled grimly.

"It gives point to a story that John Strange Winter—she's a woman—told me last year. At a seaside hotel, when she informed the landlady that she was a novelist, and no less a one than the author of 'Bootles' Baby,' the landlady answered with a queer smile:

"'Oh, I'm so glad! I like to entertain literary people so much! They never in the least mind paying in advance.'"

REMOVING STAINS.

Medicine stains can be removed by soaking in alcohol.

Meat juice stains simply need to be washed in cold water, followed with soap.

Alcohol applied with a woolen rag will remove stains made from hot dishes.

Mucilage is removed by soaking in ammonia water and then washing in cold water and soap.

Clean combs with a good stiff nail brush, dry. They soon warp and break if washed with water.

Lampblack is removed by wetting with kerosene and washing with some good soap and warm water.

Milk or cream can be removed easily by washing first in cold water, followed by a thorough soaping.

Scorch marks may be removed by hanging in sunlight. This is most effective for only slight scorch.

Medicine oil may be removed by washing in cold water and soap, or by rubbing the stain with turpentine.

Paint stains are removed by the use of benzine or turpentine. Rub well with the benzine or turpentine. For delicate colors chloroform in naphtha is best.

Kerosene may be removed by the use of fullers' earth. Cover the stain with a thick layer of hot fullers' earth and let it remain twenty-four hours; then brush off.

Contrary to popular belief, feather pillows are improved by a sunbath now and then. They need the sun as well as air, and should be placed in the sun regularly every few months.

An infant's hair brush may be used to clean dainty lamp shades of silk or satin. Meal, or fullers' earth, is sometimes used to clean lace shades, and with the use of the small brush, all particles of dust may be easily removed, without injury to the fine material.

There are more than 30,000 vessels in the world of 100 tons or more.

For the Congo a smelting plant to treat 1,000 tons of copper ore daily has been ordered from the United States.

Large quantities of tortoise come from Sikkim and Tibet, that from the latter country being harder and of darker blue, which gives it greater value.

Europeans have discovered that American syrup barrels, once used, are better than new ones. They are used especially for the pickling of meat, and if of hard wood, even in the United States, bring better prices than new ones.

The 30,000,000 people of the Turkish empire are still practically without motor cars. The government is now about to spend several million dollars on good roads and between Damascus and Bagdad a motor car service is likely to be established soon.

Old Fashioned Way of Celebrating

The legislatures of seven states and the city councils of scores of cities have passed laws prohibiting the use of fireworks on the Fourth of July. This adverse legislation, which began as early as 1901, has so swept over the country that the Fourth of July celebration this year will be a radical departure from the old-time methods of honoring this auspicious day. The terrible loss of life that has accompanied every Fourth of July celebration in recent years in the cause of this legislation.

The present generation does not remember that during the latter part of the eighteenth century, and even during the greater part of the nineteenth, there were no such fireworks and explosives as are used today in celebrating the anniversary of independance. Our forefathers in knee breeches and powdered hair celebrated the day chiefly by patriotic speeches and dinners. Every club, every society and organization met around the festive board and honored the day in song and glory.

The nature of the speeches and dinners varied with the locality, but in one respect were all the same. They agreed absolutely in the number of toasts—representing, of course the thirteen original states. With the admission of new states this custom died out, probably because the banqueters were unable to drink so much.—Ex.
